WAIT 'till they glimpse Erté's gowns in "Paris"—and then "Monte Carlo." Showmen know the value of Fashions on gorgeous beauties to drag 'em in. That's why Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer brought the great Erté from Paris. And that's just one of the Big Box-Office Added-Attraction ideas apart from title and stars in the Talk-of-the-Industry Pictures.

To all Paramount branch managers:

Eight new ones of The Greater Forty screened. If anyone doubts quality and box office pull of these pictures or overlooks booking them as soon as possible, he is making an awful mistake.

(1) "NIGHT LIFE OF NEW YORK" is box office from first flicker, with the most astounding New York photography ever filmed—cabarets, celebrities, gags, romance, great plot and exceptional work by La Rocque, Dorothy Gish, Torrence, Hackathorne. Dwan repeats "Manhandled" success.

(2) "THE LUCKY DEVIL" will knock 'em silly. By all odds finest Richard Dix picture, and greatest race-thrill film ever made. It cost a mint to make and worth more than that to every screen showing it. Not one foot of anything but marvelous entertainment in it.

(3) "RUGGED WATER" is The Different Melodrama—different plot and thrills. Wonderful acting by Wallace Beery, Lois Wilson, Warner Baxter. Willat comes close to repeating "North of 36" success.

(4) Wait till you see Marmont, Brian and Hamilton in "STREET OF FORGOTTEN MEN!" Brenon has made picture of his life. Wonderful variety, with same heart interest that made "The Miracle Man."

(5) "WILD, WILD SUSAN" is female-Raymond Griffith comedy. Filled with gags as funny as "Paths to Paradise." Best Bebe Daniels' picture yet produced.

(6) "WILD HORSE MESA" goes "Light of Western Stars" and "Thundering Herd" one better. It seems impossible to make better Zane Greys than we've been having. But this is best!

(7) Betty Bronson repeats wonderful success in "NOT SO LONG AGO." Will please every type of audience. Sidney Olcott never did better, even in "Little Old New York."

(8) "THE COAST OF FOLLY" complete in rough state, but nothing rough about it! Most de luxe Tiffany 22-carat Gloria Swanson picture ever made. A gown picture to nth degree. Wait till you see Gloria in "The Coast of Folly!"

Can give you personal assurance first bunch of The Greater Forty are finest motion pictures in existence today—and don't let anyone tell you different!

From the Side-Lines

THE Man Who Sits on the Side-Lines is growing a bit uneasy over the attitude in some quarters towards Greater Movie Season. There seems to be an undercurrent of opinion among exhibitors that the season is the private property and pet of the producers. Others are peeved because September was not chosen for the drive.

This isn't right.

Whether Greater Movie Season is sponsored by the Hays office, the Mahatma of Zulu, or the lost Charley Ross, really shouldn't be a matter of concern to the man with a theater and a box-office.

Somebody had to start it, somebody had to provide the money, somebody had to tackle the tremendous amount of labor needed to get the national drive under way.

But once started it is the property of any man who wants to use it. It is there to bring money into box offices at a time when box offices find it difficult to attract money.

The man who doesn't need extra money in August doesn't need to take advantage of Greater Movie Season. That's his privilege.

But is also the privilege of the Man on the Side-Lines to think that he is some variety of damphool.

THE Man Who Sits on the Side-Lines feels just a trifle uneasy over the Milwaukee aftermath. Perhaps he is asking too much, perhaps he isn't entirely in the know.

But he fears that the ghost of politics is still twitching in the grave and likely to rise at any moment. He fears that the selection of the "big, strong leader" is the rock on which the craft might founder. And he is strongly of the belief that there should be no delay in the selection of that "big, strong man"—to weld all factions together, dominate them if need be, but at any rate GET THINGS STARTED.

Delay nourishes politics. Action starves politics.

The Man Who Sits on the Side-Lines is probably going to be told emphatically that he is all wrong. That events are happening, that the machine is under way and heading somewhere.

He is inclined to believe these things are so. But he knows that his uneasiness is shared by exhibitors who are over-fed on "statements" and who crave action.

IT is a favorite habit of New York critics to indulge in sneers and raucous laughter every time a low-brow picture man changes the title of a book or play. It is perfect evidence, to the critics, of the crass stupidity and ignorance of picture folk.

The Man Who Sits on the Side-Lines is afraid that many of the New York executives are taking their metropolitan critics too seriously. Perhaps, like Jiggs breaking into society, they are trying to reach the high-brow level of the critics.

Some such explanation is necessary for many of the titles that are allowed to live these days at the expense of exhibitors.

It is traveling a long way in search of difficulty to ask theatre men to get money into box offices with such titles as "The Goose Hangs High," and "Beggar on Horseback." They mean a lot in New York—but New York and its contributing zone still comprise less than a fifteen per cent territory.

It's making it pretty hard for the salesman—even if the names will be changed later—to ask them to bring an exhibitor to the point of enthusiasm over such titles as "Clarissa and the Post Road," "A Husband for George-Anne," "Joseph Greer and His Daughter," and so on.

But the Man Who Sits on the Side-Lines has it pretty soft at that. All he has to do is to find fault. Anybody can do that. Yes, it is pretty soft, isn't it?

First Runs in the Great European Cities

By
W. Stephen Bush

WHAT kind of American pictures does Europe favor most? But a few years ago there was no discrimination and no "fan" sophistication. The mere name "American" was a trade mark and an insurance policy for the theatre owner and his box office. Today there is a tendency to shop, to favor one kind of play and especially one star over another. It is not nearly as pronounced as on our side of the water but it exists and it is growing. It is nothing for the American producer or exporter to be alarmed about because we have such an abundance plus variety that every taste can easily be suited.

I shall not venture anything like a decided opinion. I prefer to take a survey of what the first-run houses of Paris, Berlin, London, Rome and Vienna have been giving to their patrons and then I leave the conclusion to the readers of Moving Picture World.

London's 90% American

I must remark at the outset that London still has about 90 per cent American pictures on its programs. A distinguished peer in the House of Lords has hammered away at the American picture as something dreadfully inartistic and inferior and the press has made loud echo. Nevertheless the theatres go on showing American pictures. Capitol, Marble Arch, Stroll Picture Theatre, Tivoli, Strand, Kings Cross Cinema show almost exclusively American-made pictures. No particular inference can be drawn from these pictures as to what the public prefer. There is "Christine of the Hungry Heart," "Her Romantic Night," with Constance Talmadge; "The Midnight Express," with Elaine Hammerstein; Harold Lloyd, and a Fox feature. The public demand on the whole is easily satisfied; much depends on how pictures are handled and on the efforts of the various importers to "push" them.

Competition in Paris

We view a slightly different picture in the first-run houses of Paris. While in London the native competition may safely be described as zero such competition makes itself felt in the French capital. Let us take the following well-known first-run houses Theatre Mogador, Cine, Max Linder, Artistic Cinema, Aubert Palace, Cameo, Madeleine, Colise, Danton Palace, Voltaire. We find that the French films break about even with the American. We find the interesting fact that many of the programs are mixed—half French and half American. Baby Peggy, Jackie Coogan, Griffith's "America," are mixed with distinctly French dramas such as "Le Stigmate" and "La Papillone." Taking a survey covering several weeks we find much the same conditions. Certain artists are undoubted favorites of the Parisian public (which in this case means the French public generally) and among them the most conspicuous are Tom Mix, Jackie Coogan and Pola Negri. Here we find distinct currents of taste and sentiment that may be worth analysis.

We pass on to Berlin and as a result of a survey of about twenty of the better houses we find that the native film is distinctly holding its own. Taking a line through the statistics covering a period of three weeks we discover that the American film gets just about 50 per cent of the business. The tendency seems to be in favor of the native film, which is undoubtedly gaining. Of late there has been a strong recrudescence of military sentiment in Germany and the screen has felt its influence most emphatically. Four or five such films, absolutely worthless out of Germany, have held up the average of native films. The general run of American films consist of strong social melodrama and pathetic stuff. Here as in Paris, Jackie Coogan seems to be a great favorite. Out of sixty films picked at random I have been unable to find any foreign productions outside of ours. Like in Paris there is a great liking for historic films in the German capital.

Italy Demands Best

Coming into the Eternal City competition from the native films is fully as negligible as that in Great Britain. Looking at first-run houses, not only in Rome but in Milano, Bologna and Naples, American films represent fully 95 per cent of the total. The Germans send an occasional film into Italy which goes well but they are not in the running with our films. The biggest house in Italy, erected very recently, started out to admit none but Italian films to its screen but had to give up this policy very quickly. There was no supply. Good American films have made the Italian public quite critical and now they want nothing but the best.

Vienna is very close to 100 per cent American with the consequences that I pointed out in my recent letter. Of outstanding successes the careful chronicler must mention "The White Sister," which has been to Germany what "Scaramouche" has been in France. In stellar popularity Lillian Gish just now has a long lead in Germany. "The White Sister" has tremendously increased the prestige of the American picture throughout Germany at just the right moment.

Here's a Real Tip

Have you a film that has been treated roughly by the censors, one perhaps that has been condemned to perpetual exile on the shelves? There is a private but quite numerous club in Paris called "Club du Faubourg," at 38 Rue de Moscou. This club specializes in the showing of films that have never been shown to the censors or that have been wholly suppressed by those hardworking officials. The members jammed the place at the showing of "La Garconne" and "Dixmude," both of which have been put on the index expurgatorius. A Russian film, "Polikushka," also prohibited by the censors, will be shown next week. A French abbe, M. Loutil, has produced a film "How I Killed My Child." In spite of the shocking title it is said to be a religious film with a great moral lesson. The censors put a large veto on it but the "Club du Faubourg" has hired the large Crystal Palace to show it to its members. The abbé will be there in person to defend his film and then a general discussion pro and con will take place. It seems a good way of exerting pressure both on the censors and on public opinion.

Coming and Going

Major H. C. S. Thomson, managing director of F. B. O., returned to New York this week from a month's stay on the Coast.

W. J. Morgan, sales manager of Producers Distributing Corporation, left on June 20 for a tour of the exchanges.

E. A. Eschmann of First National has left for Chicago on business for the company. He will visit the Minneapolis branch office before returning to New York the first of next week.

Sam Sax, president of Lumas Film Corporation, has left for the West Coast Studios for the purpose of getting the balance of the program under way.

Sam Warner of Warner Brothers has left on a visit to exchanges.

Whitman Bennett Elected Vice-President of Arrow

At a recent meeting of the directorate of Arrow Pictures Corporation, Whitman Bennett, well-known producer-director, was elected to the vice-presidency of the company. This, according to Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, Arrow's president, is a most significant step and one thoroughly in accord with the progressive policy of the organization.

"We feel," said Dr. Shallenberger, "that the election of such a man as Whitman Bennett to an executive post, is an extremely wise and far sighted move. Mr. Bennett is a man who is not only familiar with every phase of the production end of the industry, but has given his time as well to the solving of the manifold problems of distribution, and while the active management of the organization is still vested in me, I shall nevertheless look to Whitman Bennett for a great deal of aid and advice."

OUTING OF PATHE EXCHANGE PROVES GALA EVENT FOR ALL

The outing of the employes of Pathe Exchange, Inc., at Panchard Inn., Massapequa, Long Island, on Saturday, June 20, proved a most enjoyable event for several hundred Patheites from the home office on West 45th street and the New York and Newark Exchanges at 1600 Broadway, and the Bound Brook and Jersey City Laboratories.

The trip to Massapequa was made in large sightseeing buses, each of which was bedecked with long streamers mentioning the various Pathe products in tie-up phrases with the event.

Arriving at Massapequa, the Patheites lunched and then started the day's events. Some participated in a Handicap Golf Tournament, others lined up against the home office ball team for a game, and others danced in the pavilion. Later several bus loads of Patheites went further down the island to Amityville for a swim.

Late in the afternoon the athletic events were run off and proved a circus for participants as well as the onlookers. The dancing contests in the pavilion also served to entertain many.

At six o'clock a shore dinner was served at the Panchard Inn, after which the party motored back to New York. The event was a decided success in the social calendar of Pathe.

WARNERS PICK ALLEN

Announcement was made by Warner Brothers this week of the appointment of James V. Allen as manager of the company's exchange at Cincinnati. Mr. Allen is an exchange executive of long experience. His most recent service with with Film Classics in Detroit.

Indiana M. P. T. O. Elects Officers at Yearly Meet

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Indiana held their regular annual meeting at the Claypool Hotel, Indianapolis, June 15. They endorsed the buying of pictures from Independent Producers—meaning those who are not acquiring theatres in opposition to their customers. Condemned the Uniform Contract as being unfair and inequitable, especially the arbitration clause. They also recommended the right to cancel pictures of poor merit.

The meeting also endorsed the general idea of "Greater Movie Season" but felt that the exhibitors should set the time for the season believing it would be impossible to create a "Greater Movie Season" in August when the houses are closed and the people will not go to the theatres. Also the cost of Movie Season should be borne fifty-fifty by the distributor and the exhibitor.

Frank J. Rembusch, who was very active up until five years ago in exhibitor organization work, was elected president and member of the national executive board. Rembusch has pledged himself to renew his old-time vigor in national and state organization work.

The other officers elected were as follows: Secretary, M. J. Doody, Indianapolis; treasurer, Harry Koch, Indianapolis. Board of directors: Chairman, Nathaniel N. Bernstein, Michigan City; J. N. Wycoff, Terre Haute; Ed. Bingham, Indianapolis; Leonard Sauers, Muncie; W. F. Easley, Greensburg; Will Brenner, Winchester; Charles R. Metzger, Indianapolis; O. I. Demaree, Franklin; A. C. Zaring, Indianapolis.

Mary Hamilton, Policewoman, Opposes Censorship

Mrs. Mary Hamilton, New York's first policewoman, and director of woman's activities in the New York police department, went on record before the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, at their Thursday luncheon in the Cafe Boulevard, June 18, as being opposed to the censorship of motion pictures as now applied in this state.

Censorship of films, she said, should come from responsible heads of the industry itself and not from politically appointed committees. She expressed the belief that some sort of censorship was necessary and that it could be best handled from within the industry.

It was her opinion that some of the provisions of the state laws regarding the admission of children to motion picture theatres was unnecessary.

Adjust First Run Situation in Detroit

The first run picture situation in Detroit has been practically settled as far as several of the leading companies are concerned. In most instances the second run problem has also been placed on the shelf.

The John H. Kunsky theatres will give Paramount, First National and Metro-Goldwyn pictures their first run in the Motor City. The Broadway Strand will first introduce Universal films. The Fox-Washington Theater will handle all first runs on Fox films.

Paramount second runs will be divided between the La Salle Garden, the Tuxedo and the new Grand Riviera Theatres. Metro-Goldwyn second runs will be divided between the Miles, Regent and Ferry Field theatres. First National second runs will be split between the Alhambra and the Strand theatres. No second run arrangements have been made by Fox or Universal.

Report Atkinson Quits Metro to Go with Roxy Denied by Schenck

A REPORT in a recent issue of a Mount Vernon, N. Y., daily newspaper states that "William E. Atkinson, of Monterey avenue, Pelham, vice president and general manager of Metro-Goldwyn film corporation, has resigned his position to become a partner of S. L. Rothafel in an enterprise to establish a big chain of movie houses."

The article also says: "Mr. Rothafel is more familiarly known to the movie public as 'Roxy.' Mr. and Mrs. Atkinson are at present vacationing in the south in Jamaica."

When informed of this report, Nicholas Schenck, in the Metro-Goldwyn home offices, stated that Atkinson had not resigned, but that he had been granted a long vacation upon his own request. Atkinson, Schenck said, had obtained this leave upon the plea of ill health. Schenck was emphatic in declaring that Atkinson was expected to resume his duties in New York some time during September. He said he had received no intimation when Atkinson departed that a resignation would be forthcoming.

S. L. Rothafel, when interrogated on the report, declared that he was not yet prepared to issue any statment concerning the details of his recently announced venture. He stated that such a published report about Atkinson was news to him.

The Sawyer Lubin interests, which are credited with financing the "Roxy" enterprise and his $6,500,000 theatre for New York City within the next year, likewise expressed ignorance of any knowledge concerning the report of Atkinson's severance.—T. W.

"Filmland City's" assessed valuation is $142,000.

Lawyer Re-Vamps Old Formula, Making Several Drastic Changes—T. O. C. C. Secretary Hails It as "Much Needed Want"—Seider Silent

By Tom Waller

ATTORNEY NATHAN BURKAN has completed work on his new film contract. Copies of it are in the hands of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce and Joseph Seider, chairman of the M. P. T. O. A.'s committee on arbitration and contract. Sam Moross, secretary of the T. O. C. C., admitted receiving a copy on the morning of June 23rd and then made known some of its more important details. When Seider was informed of this he said he also had a copy of the document, which he said would be taken under consideration by his committee following the New Jersey convention.

Burkan's contract is a great simplification of the present one. Instead of about 9,000 words and complicated phrases, it is concise, to the point and easily read. It is partly a re-vamped edition of the present contract with some drastic changes, according to Moross. One of its most significant features is that it absolutely prohibits stalling on playdates, informing an exhibitor exactly when a picture he has booked will be available.

With this contract, it is understood the T. O. C. C. lawyer also submitted a draft of a franchise and a formula of an agreement for the arbitration of the allocation of product. A copy of these and of the contract were not available for publication at this time. Moross said that not even the members of the T. O. C. C. have seen these documents since there was no meeting of that organization this week. The New York exhibitor unit will doubtless approve the contract in its entirety at their meeting next week, the secretary said. When the World inquired of Moross as to when the Burkan contract would be completed, he enthusiastically replied:

"I received a copy of it this morning. Some changes are quite drastic and some are revamped from the existent contract. The idea is that it lops off about one-third of the verbiage in the present formula.

"The most important point that it makes, as far as I can ascertain, is the designation of playdates. We have been battling on this point for the past three years. The ambiguous part in this respect in the present contract is changed entirely. In fact the whole contract is greatly simplified. It should prove a boon to the producer as well as the exhibitor. There is no stalling on the playdates under the Burkan plan. It provides that an exhibitor will know exactly when a picture which he has booked is available.

"Another thing in this contract which helps matters is that its clauses are arranged with perfect sequence. There is no leap-frogging here and there. Everything pertaining to one subject is included under one head.

"Burkan sat with me recently for an entire week. Together we whipped it into shape. It is equitable for both sides and it now remains for the exhibitors and the producers to accept it. It will receive the unanimous endorsement of the T. O. C. C., I feel sure and I am almost as certain that it will meet with the hearty approval of the producers. It will be submitted to the national organization, of course. My personal opinion is that this formula of Burkans solves one of the industry's most needed wants."

Seider refrained from acknowledging any receipt of a copy until this publication read to him the foregoing interview with Moross. He then dictated the following statement:

"Mr. Moross' statement is very impressive. I am happy indeed that Mr. Burkan has submitted his draft. He has been kind enough

$300,000 Suit Illustrates Flaw in Present Arbitration—Seider

RELATIVE to a report from Cleveland this week that an Akron exhibitor has filed suit in the Federal Court against several companies, alleging conspiracy in restraint of trade, Joseph Seider, chairman of the national committee on arbitration and uniform contract, refrained from making any comment upon the suit except to emphatically declare that it served as another glaring illustration of the "worthlessness of the present arbitration system."

Such a situation generally proved his contention, he stated, which caused such a furore of excitement when presented by him at the Milwaukee convention.

The suit is described as "a protest against the operation methods of the Film Board of Trade and the Arbitration Board." A Federal agent is said to be now in Ohio investigating the former. The action is reported to be one for $300,000 by John Romwebber, owner of the State Theatre, Akron, O., against the Film Board of Trade, Ohio Educational Exchange, Progress Pictures, Pathe, Skirboll Gold Seal Productions.

"The board of arbitration should not be both the judge and the sheriff," Seider declared. "The general manner of carrying out the awards of the boards of arbitration is confiscatory.

"In the States where there is a law on the statute books making valid and enforceable written agreements for arbitration of disputes arising out of contracts, the decision or award of an arbitration board can be filed in a court of record in that state. This makes it become a judgment of the court and therefore collectable through the proper officers of that institution.

"Therefore, what need is there for the present system whereby a judgment of the board is enforced through every exchange, members of the Film Club or the Film Board of Trade requiring from the theatre owner an additional deposit of from $100 to $500 from each exchange where he does not receive films under anew contract or the current contract of any exchange."

Seider says that the recommendations embodied in his report on arbitration now being considered by the committee which he heads and which was published in detail in recent issue of Moving Picture World, would tend greatly to alleviate such situations, rendering at the same time things of material accomplishment.

Buxbaum Heads Metropolitan Sales and Distribution for Fox

HARRY H. BUXBAUM has been appointed executive in charge of sales and distribution of Fox Film Corporation for the New York and New Jersey territory.

Buxbaum, one of the best known sales executives in the film business, will take active charge on next Monday, June 29. Harry Buxbaum has had a long and successful career in the motion picture sales field. He comes to Fox from First National Pictures, where for the past two years he has been holding a similar position.

Before joining First National, he was with Famous Players-Lasky for a period of five years. Before this, he has sold pictures for the old General Film Company, from whose offices he received his first training in the field of film sales. Prior to his business career in the motion picture industry, Mr. Buxbaum was a banker and was one of the organizers of the Harriman National Bank.

He is thoroughly conversant, not only with modern sales methods, but with every detail of other operations of the film exchange.

Louis Rosenbluh, who has been in charge of the New York and New Jersey sales force, will take a vacation before assuming important executive duties with Fox Film Corporation which will be announced later.

Buxbaum assumes control on June 29th at the new sales and executive offices on the fourth floor of the Capitol Theatre building, Broadway and 51st Street, where the metropolitan sales force for New York City, Long Island and Northern New Jersey will hold forth.

The physical handling of film and all accessories will continue in the present exchange offices on 46th Street, where film examination rooms, vaults, shipping room and advertising service departments will remain.

The sales offices in the Capitol Theatre building and the film exchange on 46th Street will be occupied only until January 19th, 1926, when the new three story Fox exchange building, to be erected on 44th Street west of Eighth Avenue, will be opened.

Burkan Presents Contract

to give me a copy. I have only received it this morning. I would like an opportunity to go into it and confer with Mr. Burkan, President Woodhull and my committee before discussing it with you.

"The national committee on arbitration and uniform contract held a meeting after the Board of Directors' meeting in the Hotel Roosevelt early this month. The committee was then completely organized. Immediately after the New Jersey state convention a special session of the committee will be called by me. Then the entire proposition and recent developments will be discussed when definite action will be taken. At that time our complete plans will be made public."

UNIONS MEET IN OTTAWA

A two-day convention of delegates from Moving Picture Operators Unions and the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes covering the Provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island was held at the Chauteau Laurier, Ottawa, on June 19 and 20, some 30 representatives being in attendance. Among those who attended the district convention were International President W. Canavan, Secretary-Treasurer R. J. Green, New York; Canadian Vice-President W. P. Covert, Toronto, while addresses were given by Mayor J. P. Balharrie of Ottawa; President Tom Moore of the Dominion Trades Congress; Capt. J. A. P. Haydon, president of the Ottawa Trades and Labor Association; J. Roberts, president of the Ottawa Musicians' Union, and E. Andrews, president of the Ottawa Moving Picture Operators Local.

MORE SUNDAY OPPONENTS

Clergymen in Methuen, Mass., again have taken up the cudgel against Sunday motion picture shows. They have just announced that they are not opposed to Sunday outings.

Fox Corporation to Rebuild or Enlarge 8 Branch Offices

GROWTH of business of Fox Film Corporation and plans for next season necessitate the rebuilding and reconstruction on a large scale of many of the branch offices throughout the country. It was announced by officials of Fox that five new exchange buildings will be opened in a short time, two present offices will be rebuilt entirely and a new building will be erected for the New York Exchange.

Of first importance in these plans is the proposed new home for the New York Exchange. The metropolitan sales organization has outgrown its present headquarters at 130 West 46th Street and, as previously announced, is to take additional space shortly in the Capitol Theatre building. In addition to this a site has been acquired in 44th Street between Eighth and Ninth avenues for the erection of a modern film building to house the sales and distributing organization for the New York City, Long Island and Northern New Jersey territory.

Plans have been drawn and the actual construction of the building will be rushed so that it will be ready for occupancy by January 1. This new building will be three stories in heigth and of fireproof construction throughout. The poster room will occupy most of the space in the basement. The first floor will be given over to the shipping and distributing force.

The offices of the metropolitan sales manager, salesmen in charge of the various districts, bookers for feature productions and short subjects, cashiers and other clerical workers will be located on the second floor. On the third floor there will be a film examination room, a miniature theatre where the Fox products will be screened for the New York exhibitors and all the film vaults which will be of the latest approved construction and wil include several new safeguards against fire.

New branch buildings, which are nearing completion, will be opened shortly in Philadelphia, Atlanta, Charlotte and Detroit. Plans are now being drawn for a new exchange building in Albany on a site recently purchased by Fox, it is also announced.

In Philadelphia the Fox exchange has outgrown its present headquarters at 1315 Vine Street and in a few weeks Manager Edgar Moss and his staff will be located in the new Fox building recently erected at 1238 Vine Street.

The Atlanta office in charge of George Allison is another exchange that is to be given its own building. The Georgia workers will move from their present location at 111 Walton Street to the new exchange at 114 Walton Street about July 1.

The next Fox exchange to move into its own building will be the Charlotte office, now located at 213 South Church Street. On July 15 Manager B. S. Bryan and his staff will occupy the new exchange at 505 West Fourth Street.

The new Detroit exchange, to be located at 66 Sibley Street, is being rushed to completion. Manager Frank Drew will move his office from its present location at 159 East Elizabeth Street to the new building on October 1.

In Milwaukee, where previously there was only an office for the city salesman, the new exchange opened this year has been completely reconstructed and is now in operation at 721 Wells Street with Manager John Lorontz in charge. This office will serve the exhibitors in the vicinity of Milwaukee and also many of the Wisconsin towns formerly handled through the Chicago Exchange.

The Cincinnati office, located at 514 Elm Street with Manager Rudolph Knoepfle in charge, has been altered and reconstructed so that the enlarged space will be ample to take care of the increased business in this territory.

N. Y. COMMISSION ENLARGED

Two additions have been made to the inspecting force of the New York State Motion Picture Commission, through the appointment of Abraham Klein and Frank Dermody, of New York City. The jobs pay $1,600 a year. Mary Farrell, a reviewer in the commission, will sail on July 3 for Europe, where she will spend three months.

ANNE DALE

This is the dainty Alabama girl who played the role of "Mary Margaret," the little crippled child, in Harry Millard's screen production of Channing Pollack's "The Fool," for the Fox Film Corporation. Miss Dale will appear in person in "the miracle scene" from the picture in a programme which is part of the banquet of the M. P. T. O. of New Jersey, at Asbury Park, on July 1

On Independence

In a letter to Moving Picture World, President Samuel Zierler of the Commonwealth Film Corporation agrees with a comment by Robert E. Welsh, editor, regarding "independents who are sitting supinely at their desks, wondering why play dates don't overwhelm them after the Milwaukee convention." The following, on the same subject, appeared in the Commonwealth year book:

"The favorable opinion toward independent distributors which has been created by Sydney S. Cohen and his colleagues in the various exhibitor organizations invokes a considerable responsibility upon these independent distributors. Undoubtedly, because of this favorable opinion, the market is more favorable to independent distributors than it has been in many years. To take undue advantage of it would be ruinous to the whole independent structure.

Commonwealth is extremely alive to its responsibility. As a foremost independent it has been more careful than ever before to gather a product worthy of the favorable opinion which has been created. No distributor has ever offered to the theatres a finer collection of pictures than our offerings for 1925-26. Super-quality, splendid variety, fair prices, excellent service—all these we have. Few distributors can offer as much; none can offer more.

"We solicit theatre patronage on the double-ribbed basis of fine merchandise and independence."

New Jersey Exhibitors All Set For Sixth and Best Convention

WITH the sixth annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey to be held in Asbury Park at the New Monterey Hotel only a few days off, everything points to the biggest attendance ever seen at a function of this kind. June 29, 30 and July 1 are the date!

The comprehensive campaign waged by Joseph M. Seider, president of the state organization, together with all the members of the various convention committees, shows every sign of bearing fruit of hard work and keen activity in making this convention one that will stand out in motion picture history as a splendid tribute to all those who have turned a hand to give the members of the New Jersey State body three days of business and progress that they will take away with them and remember for some time to come.

The success of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey for the past year, has reached the point of perfection where that body is working in closest harmony for the good of all its members, the point where all its members are sold 100% on their organization.

President Seider, together with the convention committees, has shown real genius in "staging" a three-day convention that will be of the utmost benefit to every theatre owner in the country. An unusual program—one that will work as entertainment and will also create keen interest by theatre owners from the box-office angle,—will hit the high water mark of the convention. Nothing has been spared to make the three days count for the utmost in the great campaign that has been waged for the past year by the New Jersey organization.

The program of events, published last week in the motion picture trade papers, has deepened interest in the convention. In addition to the events contained in the program there will be the appearance of the forty-eight girls and principals from Earl Carrol's Vanities, which will close their usual Wednesday matinee in favor of the convention. Many other special attractions will be presented for the entertainment of the convention guests.

Martin J. Starr, who has many motion picture stars under his personal supervision, will present some of the screen's biggest celebrities at the Asbury Park convention, Tom Meighan, Johnnie Walker, Johnny Hines and Dogmar Godowsky have definitely promised to come.

Among those who have accepted the invitation to be present are United States Senator Edward I. Edwards and Assemblywoman Mae Carty, sponsor of the New Jersey Sunday Opening Bill, and Nathan Burkan.

The Amateur Athletic Union has issued a special permit for the Water Sports Carnival. Special exhibitions will be given by Olive Filer, the junior Pentathlon champion and a junior national 100 yard free style champion, as well as a splendid diver from any height of board from three to twenty-five feet, and by Ruth Thomas, member of the American Olympic team, former senior national breast stroke champion and former senior national joint holder of the Pentathlon. The Pentathlon consists of five events denoting all around supremacy in swimming and diving.

FEEDING THE BEAUTIES TO PUT THEM IN FORM FOR THE M. P. T. O. OF N. J. CONVENTION

Here is Earl Carroll, prominent theatrical producer, helping to build that "bridge of thighs" that will startle the delegates to the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey at Asbury Park, June 29 to July 1. These dancers from the "Earl Carroll Vanities" will be guests of the convention on Wednesday, July 1. A friendly tip—line forms to the right when these divinities get set for their marks at the Water Sports Carnival!

Italy in Production Crisis; Foreign Competition Blamed

THE motion picture industry in Italy, which had developed rapidly and had achieved a considerable measure of success, has, according to Commercial Attache H. C. MacLean in a recent report to the Department of Commerce, been in the throes of a severe crisis on account of its inability to meet foreign competition, not only abroad, but also in the local market.

Italy possesses not only incomparable scenic advantages but also climatic conditions especially favorable to the production of films and at first had set an artistic standard that was exceptionally high as compared with the production of other countries. However, from the technical standpoint far more rapid progress has been made elsewhere, while money was spent too lavishly which, with the lack of efficient organization that exists, accounts for the present crisis. According to an article recently published in La Tribuna the number of films produced in Italy is decidedly limited and is not more than about twenty per annum.

The same article emphasizes the strength of the competition that is being felt from the American industry which has reached extraordinary perfection of organization and enjoys ample financial support while, at the same time, its local market is so vast that export business is a side issue and films can be sold abroad at prices which simply can not be met. Furthermore, it is admitted that American films have a quality of freshness and originality which made a strong appeal to the masses while, on the other hand, Italian films are somewhat heavy.

The Italians are reported to admit that they can only hope to succeed by improving the quality of their films to a point where they can compete, not only in the local market, but also abroad. Italy alone does not present a sufficiently wide field to justify large productions, and even if foreign films were entirely excluded, the crisis would not be solved. Other markets must be exploited if the local industry is to develop.

The Italian producers are again appealing to the Government to support their efforts, pointing out not only the necessity for protecting those who are dependent upon the motion picture industry, but also the importance of the film as a means of propaganda and of making known to the world what Italy really is. While no indication has been given as to the character of the aid that may be granted, it seems probable that the elements that have brought about the continued crisis will be carefully studied and an attempt will be made to put the motion picture industry in Italy on a sound basis.

Albany and Buffalo Zones May Seek Affiliation with M.P.T.O.A.

EXHIBITORS in the Albany Zone, or at least a portion of them, are advocating membership in the national organization. At first, laboring under the impression that the Albany Zone might be admitted as an organization, or a unit, these members including Silverman, of Schenectady, broached the subject to Louis Buettner, chairman of the Zone, and after some discussion, it was decided to take up the matter with William Dillon, of Ithaca, president of the New York State M. P. T. O., and not to act unless first seeking the opinion of the exhibitors in the Buffalo Zone. The whole agitation got under way when Silverman inquired how New York State, now that the New York City Zone has broken away from the other two, stands with the national body.

It has finally been decided to take up the matter with President Dillon, and stand by his ruling. If it is possible, the Albany and Buffalo Zones may seek affiliation with the national body, although it is the general concensus of opinion that a ruling made at the Washington convention precludes state organizations belonging to the national body and entering as a unit. It is the understanding of officers in the Albany Zone that any exhibitor can join the national organization as an individual, and that it would be possible for both the Albany and the Buffalo Zones to select two or three of their prominent and active members to represent the Zones in the national organization, but joining as individuals.

Both the Albany and Buffalo Zones have evinced a desire to be associated with all national movements and even though the two zones are now working quite apart from the New York City Zone, they feel that they constitute the New York State M. P. T. O., and as such are eager and anxious for recognition from a national standpoint.

JOHN J. SPURGEON

Spurgeon is Chairman of Editorial Council of Fox News

John J. Spurgeon, newspaper editor and writer of wide experience has become chairman of the editorial council of Fox News.

Spurgeon's newspaper career began at the age of sixteen when he became a reporter on the Philadelphia Press, then edited by former Postmaster General Charles Emory Smith. Later he served on the Cleveland World, and returning to New York, became associated with the Mail and Express. Upon retiring from the city desk of that paper, he became telegraph editor of the New York Herald and he left there to join the Joseph Pulitzer staff on The World. He was in turn reporter, copy reader, night city editor and acting managing editor of The World.

Spurgeon in 1915 returned to Philadelphia, where for seven years he was managing editor of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, and on the first day of January, 1923, became managing editor of the Washington Post.

The alliance of Spurgeon with Fox News, which continues under Truman H. Talley, director-in-chief, completes a staff of experienced journalists. That now completed editorial council comprises, besides the new chairman, Edwin C. Hill, Charles Sarver, John Weier, Gerald K. Rudulph, Ray Hall, Elizabeth Pickett, James Darst and William A. White.

KANSAS CITY EXHIBITORS GET ASSESSMENT SLASHED

Seldom has the benefit of organized effort been more forcefully or more frequently demonstrated than has been the case in the Kansas-Missouri territory in the last two months. The latest victory for the exhibitors is the lowering of a prohibitive license on theatres in Jackson County, in which Kansas City is located. The decrease was obtained through a sound, logical appeal by the exhibitor body to the county court, which rendered a fair and impartial judgment at a special hearing on the matter.

The old license scale called for an annual tax of $100 for all theatres of more than 600 seats and for $50 for theatres with less than 600 seats. The new court order, which will be in effect on and after July 4, sets the rate at $5 per 100 seats.

Cohen Announces Formation of Fair Play Bureau at Connecticut Meet

New Unit is Part of Playdate Bureau—Pledge Cards Signed by 90% of Conventionees —Walsh Is Re-Elected Chief

THE convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut held at the Hotel Garde, New Haven, Tuesday, June 23, was one of the best attended meetings in the history of the organization. Ninety per cent. of the theatre owners in the State were present.

State President Joseph W. Walsh, one of the Regional Vice Presidents of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, presided. National Treasurer L. M. Sagal, and Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, Sydney S. Cohen, attended the convention together with George P. Aarons, Recording Secretary of the National Organization.

President Walsh rendered a report of the activities of the Connecticut organization for the past year, reporting particularly on the legislative situation, also an account of the music tax and arbitration matters. He spoke of the many adjustments that had been made for theatre owners by way of film and other service and the splendid cooperation they had given to the Post Office Department in its various campaigns. He told how the Postmaster General had shown the appreciation for this assistance in the recent Connecticut legislative campaign.

State Treasurer C. M. Maxfield read the financial report for the year, showing all obligations and commitments had been taken care of.

National Treasurer Sagal addressed his fellow Connecticut theatre owners on the national and state activities and urged the prompt payment of dues to both organizations. A committee was appointed to expedite the collection of these moneys in Connecticut.

Mr. George Stanton, City Passenger Agent of the New York Central Railroad, appeared at the meeting and spoke of the special tour that is being arranged from New York for the Los Angeles Convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in June 1926 and gave a full itinerary of the trip, which met with much favor by those present.

George Aarons, Recording Secretary of the National Organization, in his talk stressed the Public Service features of the theatre, showing the great progress that exhibitors had made along this line and urging a continuation and even greater interest in such efforts, pointing out the business dividends that accrue from such work. He spoke at length regarding the Independent Motion Picture Producers and Distributors and pleaded that the strongest kind of support be given to them in the battle for Independence.

Sydney S. Cohen in his address spoke of the fine progress of the Board of Trade and Commerce inaugurated by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at the recent Milwaukee Convention and of the development of the Play Date Bureau. In this regard he announced the formation of a Bureau of Fair Play, as part of the Board of Trade and Commerce. This Bureau has been effectively functioning adjusting and conciliating differences between theatre owners and distributors. It is doing excellent work in bringing about a better understanding between these two independent branches of the Industry. Two recent occurrences Cohen mentioned were of special interest. One, a theatre owner in the Southwest was unable to secure any film for his theatres because of the opposition of producer-distributor houses. He communicated with the Board of Trade and Commerce and through the affiliated producing and distributing members, this theatre owner has been offered sufficient quality independent film first run for his own houses, Cohen reported. Another theatre owner in the Middle West advised that the price he was being asked for independent film was so high it was impossible to contract for same. The Bureau of Fair Play took the matter up with the home office of the distributing company, one of their representatives was dispatched to gather the facts in the matter and an adjustment has now been made, one equally fair to the distributor and the theatre owner, the speaker said. Similar situations are being adjusted at this time in different parts of the country.

In this connection it is requested that theatre owners having similar complaints, or complaints on any score, communicate immediately with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and their grievances will be turned over to the Board of Trade and Commerce so help and assistance of a definite nature can be brought to them. Cohen urged all theatre owners to bring their matters to the attention of this Bureau as it welcomes the opportunity of serving them. He also discussed the Greater Movie Season, asking all theatre owners to cooperate and help in this relation. He suggested that every theatre owner do his bit to make it the Greatest Movie Season for the entire Industry, including himself and the independent producers and distributors.

Every theatre owner present is reported to have signed a pledge card for Play Dates and agreed to increase his business for the coming season with independents.

The following officers were elected to serve for the coming year: President: Joseph W. Walsh, Hartford. Vice Presidents: E. S. Raffile, New Haven; Harry Cohen, Bridgeport. Secretary & Treasurer: C. M. Maxfield, New Hartford. Executive Committee: Jacob Alpert, Putnam; N. J. Stuart as manager of the Detroit branch; Diaz Callahan, manager at Dallas, and E. S. Olsmith, manager at Oklahoma City.

Lenehan, whose district comprises the exchanges at Washington, D. C., Charlotte, N. C., and Atlanta, Ga., will have his headquarters in Washington.

Ralph H. Clark newly appointed manager of District No. 6, will have jurisdiction over exchanges at Des Moines, Kansas City, Omaha and St. Louis.

The Oklahoma City branch of Producers Distributing Corporation is a new exchange, just opened to serve the Oklahoma territory. It is located at 108 South Hudson street, Oklahoma City. E. S. Olsmith, who has been placed in charge of this branch, is a veteran in the sales end of the industry.

Frank E. Stuart, new manager of Detroit exchange, is one of the pioneer film men of Michigan, having ranged that district since the early days of the General Film Company in 1911, for which he was branch manager.

Diaz Callahan, who succeeds R. A. Morrow as branch manager at Dallas, Mr. Morrow being made district manager, has been selling film in Texas for thirteen years.

Managers for the new exchanges opened at Charlotte, N. C., Des Moines, Iowa, and Portland, Oregon, have not yet been announced.

Prod. Dist. Sales Territories Now Embrace 8 Districts

COINCIDENT with the new system of handling contracts, devised by John C. Flinn, vice president and general manager of Producers Distributing Corporation, and announced at the sales conventions of the company held in New York, Chicago and San Francisco, a redistricting of the sales territories was put into effect by Mr. Flinn and Sales Manager W. J. Morgan, details of which have just been announced.

Under this redistricting plan, the sales territories which originally consisted of four divisions, viz: the Eastern, Western, Mid-West and Central Divisions, have been extended into eight Districts, as follows:

District No. 1, L. J. Hacking District Manager, with headquarters at Boston Exchange, will comprise New Haven and Boston branches; H. R. Olshan, New Haven Manager.

District No. 2, W. F. Seymour District Manager, with headquarters at New York Home Office, consists of Buffalo, Fred Zimmerman, Manager; Albany, Robert Mochrie, Manager; New York, G. M. Dillon, Manager; and Philadelphia, W. G. Humphries, Manager.

District No. 3, G. F. Lenehan, District Manager, embraces Washington, D. C., G. M. Falkner, Manager; Atlanta, Ga., Mrs. A. H. Sessions, Manager; and Charlotte, N. C., Dist. Mgr. Lenehan's headquarters are at Washington exchange.

District No. 4 Robert Cotton District Manager, with headquarters at Cleveland Exchange, comprises Cleveland, G. W. Erdmann, Manager; Detroit, F. E. Stuart, Manager; Cincinnati, N. G. Shafer, Manager; Indianapolis, Dudley Williston, Manager; Pittsburgh, G. R. Ainsworth, Manager.

District No. 5, Cecil Maberry District Manager, with headquarters at Chicago Exchange, includes Chicago, H. S. Lorch, Manager; Milwaukee, C. R. Lundgren, Manager; and Minneapolis, J. E. O'Toole, Manager.

Ralph H. Clark is District Manager of District No. 6, which comprises Des Moines; Kansas City, L. Reichert, Manager; Omaha, F. De Lorenzo, Manager; and St. Louis, C. D. Hill, Manager. Mr. Clark will make his headquarters at St. Louis exchange.

R. A. Morrow is Manager of District No. 7, with headquarters at Dallas, Texas. Oklahoma City, E. S. Olsmith, Manager; Dallas, Diaz Callahan, Manager, and New Orleans, G. C. Brown, Manager, are included in this district.

L. W. Weir, District Manager of District No. 8, will have his headquarters at San Francisco Exchange. San Francisco, M. E. Cory, Manager; Los Angeles, J. S. Stout, Manager; Butte, C. R. Wade, Manager; Denver, J. S. Hommel, Manager; Salt Lake City, C. F. Parr, Manager, and Portland, Oregon, are the exchanges under the control of Mr. Weir.

The manifold advantages of this redistricting are stressed in a statement made by Mr. Morgan.

"The District Managers will not have any more territory than they can cover thoroughly, and will be able to keep in personal touch with exhibitors and give direct supervision to every exchange in their District at frequent intervals," says Mr. Morgan.

"This concentration on territories by our district managers will enable them to carry out efficiently the new system of handling contracts which we have just put into effect; facilitate the official acceptance or rejection of all booking contracts, establish a more equitable trading basis, and serve exhibitors in a prompt, business-like manner by speeding up all matters of adjustment. Exhibitors will not be kept waiting weeks before being assured they will get the pictures contracted for as our district managers will have the fullest authority, under this new system, of accepting or rejecting contracts."

N. Carolina Thinking Over Re-Affliation With National

North Carolina Motion Picture Theatre Owners closed a three-day convention on June 24. This affair at Wrightsville Beach marks their tenth annual meeting.

The Carolina Theatre Owners occasioned some surprise by their refusal to take snap judgment on advisability of affiliation with the national organization, this state having been formerly affiliated with the allied state group. Despite the presence of National President R. F. Woodhull the convention voted against affiliation at this time, leaving the matter to further deliberation by the executive committee with advisement that national officials be conferred with before final action is taken, consensus of opinion however favoring alignment with the national organization.

R. D. Craver, of Charlotte, for years identified with the industry and an outstanding figure in both state and national confabs was elevated to the head office of the association. Paul McCabe Tarboro was elected vice president to succeed himself and A. Abbott Tarboro succeeds himself as secretary treasurer. The board of directors was elected as follows. Paul McCabe Tarboro, Capt. C. L. Welch, Salisbury, R. D. Craver, Charlotte, Percy W. Wells, Wilmington, S. S. Stevenson, Henderson, Fuller Sams, Winston-Salem, M. S. Hill, Ashville, Charles Picquot, Pinehurst, A. B. Huff, Highpoint, J. A. Estridge, Gastonia, Claude Lee, Hickory, R. T. Wade, Morehead City. The executive committee is composed of Charles Picquot, Pinehurst, S. S. Stevenson, Henderson, Fuller Sams, Winston-Salem, C. L. Welch, Salisbury, M. H. Hill, Asheville.

Pinehurst was selected as place for holding mid-winter convention.

Universal House Sacrifices Bookings to Aid Exhibitor

CARL LAEMMLE, president of Universal Pictures Corporation, recently faced with the alternative of withholding Universal product from a regular Universal exhibitor or seeing a newly acquired Universal theatre in the same town go without the Universal product, has come out flat-footedly in favor of the exhibitor, C. C. Dunsmoor, proprietor of the Legion Theatre, Marshalltown, Ia. The Legion Theatre will continue to show Universal pictures, while the Casino of Mashalltown, recently bought by Laemmle from Hostettler, must buy outside product.

This is Laemmle's answer to queries whether or not his theatre acquisitions would bring hardship to regular Universal customers. Wherever this question comes up, the Laemmle forces have been instructod that "the customer gets the preference." The Universal chief is backing up his oft-repeated statement that he is not in competition with his customers.

The case of C. C. Dunsmoor and the Legion Theatre is an important one, as it definitely establishes the Universal attitude on producer-owned theatres. The Casino Theatre was taken over by Universal as a part of the Hostettler chain. That chain, the storm center of the Omaha territory, was being angled for by several big producers and Universal bought in "self-defense" in order to keep from being frozen out of that territory altogether, according to statements made at the time of the purchase.

Dunsmoor has been a Universal exhibitor for some time. When he realized that the Casino, his competing house, had become a Universal house, he sat down and wrote to Carl Laemmle, asking what effect the purchase would have on the Legion Theatre. The Universal chief answered as follows:

"To prove that neither you nor any other exhibitor need have any fear that the Universal has any desire or intention of harming you, I am prepared to offer you the Universal product for your house for the 1925-1926 season and I am prepared to say that I will continue to do this as long as you and the Universal remain in business, if you are willing to meet even a part of the way in the matter of price. The fact that Universal may or may not have an interest in an opposition theatre will make no difference. It will not deprive you of Universal pictures.

"I don't want to compete with you or with any other exhibitor who gives me a half-way decent 'break.' Universal has not deliberately invaded your town. The opposition theatre simply happened to be a part of a chain of theatres which I had to buy because Universal was frozen out of some of the towns represented by the chain of theatres. So, even if Universal should harm one of its own theatres, or a theatre in which it has an interest, by giving universal pictures te you, I am ready to go through with it 100 per cent."

As a result of this communication, a Universal representative visited Dunsmoor and arranged a contract for the Second White List, Universals 1925-1926 product. Dunsmoor now says that he did not believe the contract would be approved by the Universal home office. True, the prices were somewhat higher than he had paid in the past, but still he was sceptical and questioned whether he would get the Universal product or not.

His astonishment and relief upon receiving the contract back approved was so great that he sat down and wrote a letter of appreciation and gratitude to Laemmle, praising him for his fairness. He also told the story of Universal's square shooting to the local newspaper which printed laudatory stories of the deal.

Independent Producers' Organization Has A New Name

At a special luncheon-meeting held in honor of Frederick H. Elliott, their general manager, at the Astor, New York, the Independent Producers, Distributors and Exchangemen ratified a proposal of the new executive to change the title of the organization. The name "Independent Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association" was deemed unwieldly and not sufficiently broad to embrace all the units that go to make it up. Consequently, the members adopted the title of "Independent Motion Picture Association of America" and a committee composed of M. H. Hoffman, J. G. Bachmann and S. S. Krellberg was immediately appointed to revise the constitution and by-laws.

It was announced that several accessory and equipment companies were anxious to affiliate with the association and it is regarded as almost certain that a division will be created to include them. A committee consisting of H. W. Pearlman, Ray Johnston and Oscar A. Price was appointed to submit recommendations as to ways and means for admitting them to membership.

State Standard Building Code Is Effective in New York July 1

WITH twenty cities exempt from its provisions, by reason of the fact that they already have their own building codes, the New York State Standard Building Code, of interest to every motion picture theatre owner in New York State, and which represents two or three years spent in investigation, will go into effect on July 1. On and after date, all certificates of compliance are to be issued by the New York State Troopers, who will be charged with the enforcement of the Standard Building Code in all towns and villages where three exists no authority enforcing such.

The adoption of the New York State Building Code has come about through the Washington catastrophe of a few years ago, and likewise a demand on the part of authorities that every possible prevention be taken to avoid a similar happening.

While the adoption of the Code will not materially affect modern motion picture theatres in New York State, it will have a direct reaction upon the smaller irresponsible theatre owner.

All exits hereafter constructed shall not be less than 44 inches in width. By increasing the width of exits, any possible congestion will be done away with and the chances of panic are just so much lessened. After July 1, no place of public assemblage in New York State will be permitted in a building, any part of which is used as a garage, dry cleaning establishment, or of a type of occupancy deemed hazardous by the State Industrial Commission.

No changes are to be made in the provisions and regulations covering projection booths.

The twenty cities in which motion picture theatres are exempt from provisions of the new Code are Albany, Binghamton, Buffalo, Elmira, Lockport, Long Beach, Mount Vernon, Newburgh, New Rochelle, New York, Niagara Falls, Poughkeepsie, Yonkers, Rochester, Schenectady, Syracuse, Troy, Utica, Watertown and White Plains.

In twenty-eight cities in New York State, the State Code will be enforced by the cities themselves through their own enforcing bodies.

1,600 Billboard Plants Pledge Greater Movie Season Support

WHAT is estimated to be a gift of more than $100,000 in billboard space was presented to the Greater Movie Season Campaign at a recent meeting of the board of directors of the Poster Advertising Association at the Hotel Traymore, Atlantic City, N. J.

This association, headed by W. W. Workman of Richmond, Va., which represents 1,600 billboard plants throughout the United States, investigated thoroughly the plans of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributers of America, Inc., for Greater Movie Season and adopted a resolution calling upon all its members to contribute billboard space to the various Greater Movie Season committees throughout the country.

At the request of the bureau in charge of Greater Movie Season, National Screen Service has undertaken the production of two unusual trailers for exhibitor use as their contribution to the drive. Entertainment value has been aimed for and attained to such a degree that the trailers can be regarded as featurettes, one of 200 feet and the other of 100 feet. Contrasting modern pictures with flashes from such early efforts as Vitagraph's "License No. 13 or the Hoodoo Auto," produced in 1905, and Universal's "Going Straight" of 1910, with Mary Pickford and King Baggott, the huge advance in screen-art is emphasized.

Will H. Hays announces he has already linked twenty-four key-cities into the national drive. Exhibitors' committees, embracing not only circuits but single-house operators, have been formed to develop campaigns in conformity with the general scheme, yet with such variations as are necessary to meet local requirements and to benefit the outer fields as well as the key-centers.

Jack Retlaw, special representative of West Coast Theatres, Inc., will be general manager of the Los Angeles campaign, working in conjunction with the Wampas Committee. A huge parade of stars has been arranged. Complete support of commercial interests is assured by the chamber of commerce, which will act as host to the winner of the second prize in the national contest during a two weeks' vacation here. It is expected that Greater Movie Season will open locally during the last week of July in order that publicity accruing from the stars' participation may be carried throughout the country in time to influence the coast-to-coast celebration. News-weeklies will include parade shots, while the various photographic syndicates will broadcast newspaper stills in the same way that gave Los Angeles' demonstration national interest last year.

Because Minneapolis inaugurated the first co-operative drive, Northwest Go-to-Movie-week in 1922, from which the national season developed and exhibitors have learned its box-office value, an extensive campaign is looked for throughout this territory embracing all the Finkelstein and Reuben houses and the membership of the Allied States organization, of which W. A. Steffes is chairman.

Atlantic City joined the Greater Movie Season Campaign on Wednesday when every theatre in the city and a great many outlying cities sent representatives to a meeting held at the Globe Theatre. Edward J. O'Keefe, manager of the City Square Theatre, was elected general manager of the Atlantic City campaign; Alexander Strauss, manager of the Colonial, vice-chairman; William Ford, manager Central Theatre, chairman of decoration committee; John Gillespie, chairman publicity committee.

Joe Mogler, president of the St. Louis motion picture theatre owners, was elected general manager of the St. Louis Greater Movie Season Campaign at an enthusiastic meeting of exhibitors. Fred Brinkmeyer, general manager of the Skouras Circuit, will be assistant general manager. The finance committee is as follows: George McKean, chairman; Oscar Lehr, assistant manager; Eugene Freund, Henry Shearer, Harry Keplar, Hershel Stuart, Harry Greeman, Tom Meyers, Charles Skouras, Fred Wohrenberg, William Goldman, Fred Cornwall, Mike Nast, John Karzin.

Spyres Skouras is chairman of the newspaper committee, with the following associates: J. Hill, assistant chairman; William Goldman, William Saal and H. Stromberg. Publicity Committee: Reeves Espey, chairman; D. Dygert, assistant chairman; George Gabriel, Maurice Davis, Al Marks, Morris Stahl, M. Reeves, Charles Goldman, Claude McKean, Harry Neimeyer, Jack Schultz, Charles W. and Arthur Wade. Parade Committee: Fred Wohrenberg, chairman; Sam Koplar, assistant chairman; Harry Weiss, Herbert Kraus, Thomas McKean, I. Koenig, Bessie Schulter, Dave Nelson, William Shearer, Benj. Harris, Jos. Wagner, J. D. Hill, Harry Hynes. Ten thousand dollars was voted for carrying on the campaign.

Tony Veiller, of the Mark Strand-Lincoln Theatre, Troy, N. Y., was appointed general manager of the Greater Movie Season at a meeting of exhibitors from the Albany zone. Veiller, an ex-newspaper man, is considered the ideal choice.

Exhibitors of Butte and Anaconda appointed the following committee to handle the drive: William J. Sullivan, Rialto Theatre, chairman and general manager; Merle Davis, Ansonia Theatre; William Woolfall, Peoples Theatre; George Buckmiller, Ansonia Theatre; Albert Nadeau, Blue Bird Theatre, Anaconda; R. C. Hudson, Universal; Frank Murphy, Famous Players, and W. J. Heineman, Warner Brothers. Theatres represented on the general committee have pledged themselves to participate, and at a further meeting an advertising appropriation will be determined to put the season over in vigorous style.

A strong organization has been formed to handle Greater Movie Season in Memphis, Tenn., with Lloyd Dearth, of the Pantages Theatre, as chairman and William A. Finney, of Loew's State Theatre, secretary-treasurer. George Brown, of Loew's Palace; Walter League, of the Strand, and Bert Jordan of the Majestic, comprise the board of directors, while members of the general committee are Joe Maceri, Paul Zerilla, Tom Ballas, Clark Porter, Tony Richards and Fred Suzorre, all prominent exhibitors in this territory. A special committee of exchange executives to work in conjunction with the exhibitors' organization consists of A. J. Carey, Pathe, chairman; W. E. Swipe, Universal, secretary-treasurer; C. E. Hilger, Famous Players, and J. L. Franconi, F. B. O., directors. Little Rock, Ark., being affiliated with Memphis, a solid campaign is also expected there.

Preliminary work for Greater Movie Season in Cleveland is being done with a view to submitting a concrete campaign to theatre-owners, who will attend a meeting together with exchange managers, exploitation and publicity men. To add weight and prestige to the movement several prominent business men will be made honorary members of the general committee.

Cincinnati will swing into line with other key-cities celebrating Greater Movie Season in August. Negotiations involving the Libson theatres and membership of the Greater Cincinnati Motion Picture Exhibitors are going forward to bring about an effective campaign. No general manager has yet been named.

With profitable experience of previous Greater Movie Seasons, San Francisco theatres anticipate further success this August when the season will have behind it the full weight of a national drive. Meanwhile Herman Wobber, who was largely instrumental in putting over previous seasons, is marshaling exhibitors.

Harry M. Crandall has been elected general manager of Greater Movie Season in Washington, D. C. The committee on finances consisting of Crandall, Julian Brylawski of the Earle Theatre, Larry Beatus of the Palace Theatre, Wm. P. Herbst, Morris Davis of the "M" Street Theatre, and Nash Weil, is preparing a budget to be passed upon by the next meeting of exhibitors and exchange managers.

The sum of $3,500 has been fixed as the Greater Movie Season campaign fund for Buffalo, the money to be divided between an extensive newspaper and billboard showing, commencing two weeks before the opening of the drive. Jules Michael, Chairman of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners, State of New York, Buffalo Zone, was appointed chairman of committees with Walter Hays of the Mark-Strand interests, Barnie Vohwinkle of the Oriole Theatre, Frank Nowak of the Lincoln, Jacob Rappaport of the Lovejoy as aides in planning the campaign. Additional committees will be formed at a meeting called for Friday, June 26th, when other cities will also be organized for the drive.

In Montgomery, Ala., H. C. Farley has been named general manager of Greater Movie Season.

Stork Strenuous

The bird that fetches new arrivals has to take a tonic these days to keep up strength enough to meet the demands made upon him by those of the Chalmers Publishing Company's staff.

Within a week Papa Stork has flown hither twice, and each time his beak bore along a boy!

Alfred J. Chalmers, a vice-president of the company that publishes Moving Picture World, has just welcomed a bouncing boy—making four generations of Chalmers now active in the exhibitor's interest; the new arrival yelling for better exhibitor conditions and his daddy, his daddy's daddy and his daddy's daddy's daddy seeing that the publication works to that end.

And only a couple of days earlier Tony Gaudy of the Circulation Department came in wearing the smile of a father who has been presented with a husky eight-pound son.

THE NEWSPAPER ANNOUNCEMENT

The idea is far from new. It is made a regular summer feature in many cities; particularly in connection with Rotary Boy's Week, and Mr. McDonough claims no originality for the idea. He does not even argue that his campaign is better than others, but he reports his stunt in the thought that it might help others, and it is so well planned and so complete, that we are passing his idea along, with the recommendation that you follow his ideas as closely as possible.

Mr. McDonough got the idea from the recent contest in New York City, which was played up in the news reels. His first step was to get in touch with the Hohner harmonica people. It will be recalled that a couple of years ago they got very solidly behind Wesley Barry, and they know the value of picture cooperation.

Found Them Helpful

They very promptly responded with assurances of full support. They gave him plenty of advertising material, ready-to-run press items and a lot of ideas.

There was no strictly music store in town, but he tied the drug stores to the stunt, and they put in orders for a supply of harmonicas. When he was all set, he planned up the news reel pictures, ran in the newspaper the Hohner story of a harmonica band in Philadelphia, and took a two nines to advertise the contest. This matter was lifted from the form and used for throwaways, as well. Note the entry blank and the spaces for the names of friends who might be interested.

Stores Helped Out

Of course the stores helped along with window displays of mouth organs and the announcement of the contest. This was the big publicity bet. The contestants were given four weeks in which to work up their repertoire and both displays were changed weekly.

As soon as the boys made an entry, the name was forwarded to the Hohner company, and an instruction book was sent. Coming from out of town these seemed far more important than the books locally obtained, for a generous supply was sent and handed out.

Not only was the night of the contest one of the largest the house has had for a long time, but the kids were advertising the Auditorium all over town with their assiduous practice, and it had a beneficial effect upon the running business for the entire four weeks—and afterward.

Good Results

And the stores sold more harmonicas in the four weeks than they had sold in the previous ten years. Don't forget that when you seek to interest the merchants.

And if you want to get the last ounce of kick out of the stunt, organize an harmonical orchestra, let them rehearse in the theatre mornings during the school vacation and you can use them for an added act now and then. The New York Harmonica Band, composed of both boys and girls, was one of the real hits of the recent Safety Parade in New York City. You can make it your own local sensation.

Prize Reviews

I'll Show You the Town was tried out in the Florence Theatre, Pasadena, before it was shipped east, but it made such a hit that T. F. McCoy decided to book it in for another and longer run.

To jazz the rebook he offered ten prizes for the best fifty word reviews printed in the Pasadena Post, the prizes being trips through Universal City with three friends, ten contestants were given awards. The deciding factor in the contest was the punch, and some snappy opinions were brought in.

Staged Night Club

A table with three chairs, glasses, whiskey bottles, (empty,) and a vase of flowers was the basis of John B. Carroll's display for The Night Club at the Victory Theatre, Tampa, Fla. The lobby wall was backed with compo board painted to suggest the walls of a restaurant, and a Japanese lantern added to the effect. This pulled in a neat extra business.

For Mme. Sans Gene Charles E. Sasseen, of the Criterion Theatre, Enid, Okla., used the 24-sheet cutout of Gloria Swanson. Smaller cutouts as the laundress and the duchess were perched on either shoulder, giving an odd effect.

BUT WHAT HAPPENS WHEN THE PASSENGER DOES NOT BUY

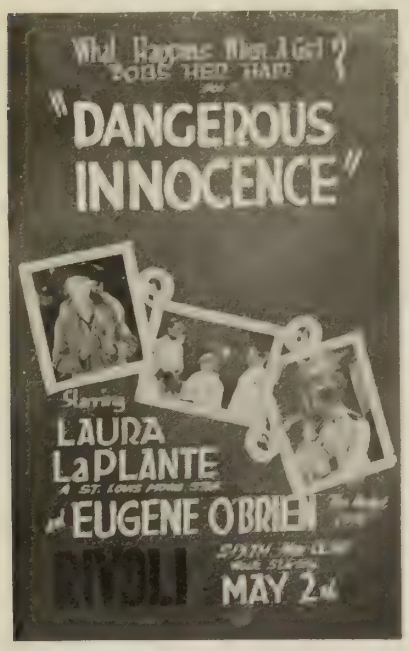
Innocence Stills Fine for Barbers

Universalist Davis, of St. Louis, had all the barber shops he wanted when they played Dangerous Innocence at the Kings and Rivoli theatres. It was not a question of what he could get but of which he wanted, and he did it all with cards prepared from the regulation stills.



A Universal Release

THE BARBERSHOP CHORD

The selling line appears at the top in "What happens when a girl bobs her hair?" and the answer seems to be that she gets married to a handsome young naval officer, for the set of stills show Laura La Plante in her youthful innocence, getting her hair cut and a clinch. You could not place a stronger argument before the few still unbobbed girls, and the barber shops and the beauty parlors literally eat it up. If you have the picture coming, lay in some of the stills.

The house angle was to stress the fact that Miss La Plante was born in St. Louis and spent the first nine or ten years of her life there. All of the papers gave spreads to stories with Hollywood date lines, and it helped business at a time when St. Louis needed every business help. Ever put in a nice, sunny June day in St. Louis? Then you know what we mean.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

COLLEEN MOORE in "The Desert Flower," the First National production, was surrounded by a program of five additional incidents. Four of these were musical presentations and the other was the customary Topical Review, making altogether a very well balanced show. The running time of "The Desert Flower" was 1 hour and 26 minutes, and the usual eight minutes for the Topical Review. The four musical presentations requiring 30 minutes, brought the full show up to 2 hours and 4 minutes.

The overture was selections from "The Bat" by Johann Strauss and played by the Famed Mark Strand Orchestra with the following lights: 2 medium amber floods on orchestra from dome; light green and light blue ceiling spots reflecting through the trees covering the transparent windows at either side; new purple spangled curtains closed across the production stage lighted by four lemon arch spots and green foots. The large stage was in green foots and blue borders. Eight minutes for this overture.

Harry Breuer, xylophonist of the orchestra, was incident No. 2 and played "Opera a la Carte," giving his conception of how the operas should be played in ragtime. He played from his accustomed place in the ensemble, under a medium blue spot from the dome. Two blue floods on the orchestra from the balcony. Blue and light green ceiling spots reflecting through the trees and covering the transparent windows at either side as in the overture. The purple spangled curtains still closed across the production stage. Four minutes for this solo.

A most pretentious stage number was "Indian Love Lyrics," from the "Garden of Kama," set to music by Amy Woodford Finden, and 8 minutes long. The set was oriental, with minarets, mosques, temples in front of a starlit sky and a very large moon. Highly colored pillows and various oriental props were used. A baritone as the reconteur seated left of stage, reciting first verse of each song while the introduction to the number was played by orchestra. A baby spot reflecting on this singer dimmed off as he concluded his readings. The selections were "Less Than the Dust" by a contralto; "Till I Wake," sung by a soprano; and the "Kashmiri Song," "Pale Hands I Love," by a tenor. Nine deep blue box lamps gave a fine depth to the sky drop and small electrical bulbs in the sky drop for the stars, presented a very realistic effect. Spots used were light blue, light green, orange and magenta; large stage in blue and ceiling in mass of light blue and light green reflecting through transparent windows. Two violet floods on the orchestra from the dome.

After the Topical Review, with its specially scored music, and immediately preceding the feature photoplay, "The Desert Flower," came another elaborate stage presentation programmed as "Garland of Roses." For this scene 3 rose covered arches with large door at center were used. Two of the arches on the extreme ends of stage joined the center arch and gate by means of balustrade, hedge, and rows, and backed by a black cyclorama, giving it a most pleasing effect, that of a mid-summer garden. After each selection a complete change of lighting was used. The sequence of the incident was as follows: "Rose Marie" danced by the ballet; "Mighty Lak' a Rose" by soprano; "Rose of My Heart," as a duet by baritone and contralto; "Rose of Washington" another dance by the ballet; "Red Rose" a tenor solo; and "Roses of Picardy" by soprano and contralto.

The organ recessional was a selection from "Aida" by Verdi.

Bannered Jax

Among his other stunts for Old Home Week, including street car dash signs and spare tire cards, Guy Kenimer, of the Arcadia Theatre, Jacksonville, used banners across the streets reading "This is Old Home Week."

A Producers' Distributing Release

AN EFFECTIVE DESIGN FOR CHARLEY'S AUNT FROM THE CAPITOL THEATRE, LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

R. T. Newton gets unusually good effects on his front, though the front itself has little beyond its width. He does not give the color combinations on his displays, but we would like to bet that the checkered effect on the banner is either blue or yellow or blue and white, probably the former. At any rate, he offered an announcement that would be hard to overlook.

Shimon Contributes Good Program Copy

Louis C. Shimon, of the Milwaukee Theatre, sends in some capital card posters, which unfortunately will not reproduce. They are the work of Shirby Youngbeck, of the Art Department, and are different, both as to form and copy.

He also sends in a piece of program copy which other managers may find interesting for reproduction or adaptation. Here it is:

Frankly—I don't want to be ordinary—to show pictures like everybody else—look like everybody else.

I don't want to be self-conscious.

When thousands of people think of motion picture entertainment, I want to be nice to the other theatres, but I want them to choose me.

I don't want to show just the ordinary run of pictures.

When I offer a picture program, it's chuck full of novelties—variety that's it. Reels of good wholesome entertainment.

I don't want to be conspicuous, but I love to have people stop and watch the crowds that are waiting in the lobby.

I am the Milwaukee Theatre.

I have personality—a little touch of charm—the pep of youth—the comfort of being well-to-do.

I am the companion of people who can choose their companions.

As I said—Frankly—I don't want to be ordinary.

"If it's at the Milwaukee, it's the best show in town!"

Jones Hustled Ads

Raymond B. Jones, of the Palace Theatre, Dallas, Texas, has been doing fine exploitation for that house since he moved over from Atlanta, but he did better than usual when he put over an eight page special section of the Times-Herald to mark the fourth anniversary. He made the usual arrangement of so much space for so much advertising, and he went out and rustled all but three of the advertisements in addition to writing most of the copy for the reading columns, and the paper was generous with the free space. It was a nice working of the idea, and he deserves an especial pat on the back from Manager John J. Friedl. Probably he got it, for they team up well.

HERE'S THE DEVIL WITH THREE SOULS ON A STRING

An effective display on Playing With Souls, from the Strand Theatre, Nashville, Tenn. Strings run from the Devil's hand to the heads of Jacqueline Logan, Buster Collier and Clive Brook to carry out the suggestion conveyed by the title.

Many Hookups Are Help in Nashville

In addition to the effective lobby shown on this page, G. P. Banniza, of the Strand Theatre, Nashville, with the assistance of W. R. Arnold, exploiteer, effected a number of trade hook-ups for Playing With Souls.

One tied in a candy store to the idea that nothing could be sweeter than Jacqueline Logan and the Ocean Arcade candies; the second was tied to a facial cream on the statement that the preservation of beauty was one of the themes of Playing With Souls, while the third hooked a dress display to the costumes in the picture.

None of the three was out of the ordinary, but all three windows helped much toward a better business, and getting even a forced hook in is better than a display without any particular reason offered.

Business Men Were Basis of a Stunt

Frank J. Miller turned the local businessmen into real money when he staged a take-a-chance week, following the usual lines and making Excuse Me the picture. All of the features were shrouded in deep mystery except the "Who's Who" which was widely advertised. Mr. Miller had read that the stunt was a wow, but he wanted an anchor to windward, and he played up the idea to the limit.

Fifty one business men were shown in a motion picture, back and partial side view. Each had a number on his back, and the shots were shown one at a time.

Each patron was provided with a blank with 51 spaces and cash prizes were offered for the most nearly complete list of identifications. The same men were shown the following week, full face and full identification. Most persons came back to see how closely they had followed the list. The stunt was backed by the merchants in a double truck co-op.

For the take-a-chance angle the front was decorated with dice, cards and other paraphernalia of Lady Luck, which offset the lack of poster billing.

The week was a big success and probably would have gone over big without the added feature. Better save the latter for some sick sister.

SCRIPT LETTERS ON A GAUZE GROUND A SEATTLE EFFECT

The Strand Theatre mounted the white signatures on the gauze which served as a sky for a scenic banner and then lighted from behind to get prominence. This style was very effective, and gave strong prominence to the star's name.

This is Clever

When H. E. Long played The Last Laugh at the America Theatre, Denver, he staged a special showing for the sidewalk men at the hotels and stores, asking them all to come in their uniforms. The invitation was extended through the managers of the stores and hotels, who could see the publicity possibilities, and the attendance was large.

It not only made a good story, with a cut but the hotel men were able to tell patrons where "the best show in town" was. They were unanimous.

Thanked Patrons For Thief Crowds

Fred S. Meyer, of the Palace theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, has found another new one. Very often the second day of a big run is marked by some special advertisement either calling attention to the large attendance or apologizing for lack of space for all.

This one is different. This single seventy-five liner was run the day after the run was ended.

A United Artists Release.

MR. MEYER'S THANKS

Thank You!

As a rule, pictures are advertised before they come to town, not AFTER they depart from our midst.

We feel, however, that there is no rule without exception; your patronage, reception and appreciation given to Douglas Fairbanks'

"The Thief of Bagdad"

calls for grateful acknowledgement, and we wish to take this opportunity of saying

THANK YOU!

After seeing some of the best bets of the year flop while some less deserving do the business, we imagine that Fred was moved to gratitude. In any event it clinches in the mind of the reader the fact that Palace has a wonderful show, and that's worth more than the space cost, and will not only make for good will but help sell the next big one.

A DOUBLE FACED CURB SIGN FOR THIEF IN PARADISE

This was made by G. M. Pedley, of the Empress Theatre, Owensboro, Ky. A three sheet cutout was pasted on the street side while the left hand cut shows the lettering on the sidewalk face. Where this can be worked, the curb sign saves lobby space.

White Has Moved

Oscar White, who has been holding down the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., very successfully, has been moved over to the Liberty Theatre, Greenwood, in the same state, and has started in to show the folks. "Watch this space."

HOW NICHOLAS USED THE 24 ON THE WIFE OF THE CENTAUR

Sunk to the floor level this made a bigger flash at the Paris Theatre, Durham, N. C., than had it been skied. The stunt was worked by Don Nichols, who planned the metal paneled banner that shows just above the box office. See the story.

Makes His Banner on Tin Foundation

Most 24-sheets are now planned with especial reference to their use as cutout material and even the smaller houses, which do not post such large stands find them useful as lobby material, which increases the sales.

Don Nicholas, of the Durham Amusement Co., Durham, N. C., used a cutout on The Wife of the Centaur, but instead of placing it on his marquise, he put it on the floor, where it got many times the attention. The side pieces shown in the cut are made from the three sheets, one of which repeats the figure.

Mr. Nicholas writes that his lobby is illuminated by spots shot from across the street, making possible effects not obtainable at close range. The only cost is for the current and a weekly pass to the woman who owns the tea shop. The shooting is done over the heads of the crowd to the top of the lobby.

Just above the box office he has a permanent shadow box for his banner. The latter is painted on tin, and Mr. Nicholas writes that it gives much better service than wood or pasteboard. It slides in and out of a groove at the rear and can be taken out and repainted with a minimum of work. As it is done in water colors, it takes but a moment to wash up the sign and recoat with a different color. He has tried all sorts of fabrics, but says that once you use tin you never will be content with the usual material.

In spite of the larger first cost, we think that zinc should be preferable, since it will not rust. If finances permit it would be a good scheme to have several backs, oil painted in different colors on which the water color lettering and design can be made with less danger of running.

This was the lobby front of the Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, designed by Pat McGee. Tri-colored bunting under the awning was a fine touch of color. The design is simple but rich and effective and gave real dignity to the run.

Library and Paper Helped Lost World

In addition to their own substantial campaign on The Lost World, at the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago, Balaban and Katz received material aid from the Public Library and the Daily News.

The paper had serialized the novel about twelve years ago and republished this serialization, with the original cuts. Half a million reprints of the first instalment were distributed to non-readers through the Balaban and Katz houses and the news stands. The paper also used 560 special 24-sheets and 1,600 threes, pasted its delivery wagons and gave front page mention to the story.

In return the theatre used slides to urge its patrons to read the story before the picture came.

A week before the opening the paper gave the Roosevelt 175 24-sheet boards on which was posted paper different from that earlier used in the News.

The street cars and elevated roads gave free space to the Public Library, and all of this was turned over to The Lost World, in addition to which the Library used stuffers in all books handed over the counter.

A drawing contest was laid off to the Chicago Journal and an essay contest was given the Post, while the cadet battalions of the high schools shot for ticket prizes, the target being an outlined dinosaur.

The crowds necessitated the early opening of the house, which ran from nine in the morning until after midnight.

Cooled 'Em Off

John Hannon, who is the new manager of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., tied up with the handlers of a new ice cream lollipop and announced that on a certain afternoon each person buying a ticket to The Lighthouse By the Sea would be given one free between the hours of three and four. All it did was stop traffic for an hour and a quarter and sell all the seats the house had.

Keep your eye peeled for people with novelties in eats and drinks. It's found money.

Number One

Vinton Sholl, of the Empire Theatre, San Antonio, is the first to report a Bathing Beauty show for 1925. He worked one in conjunction with The Night Club, and the prettiest of the six girls who modeled suits from the local store was sent to Galveston, for the annual review at which the Atlantic City contestant is selected.

Guy O. Kenimer, of the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, got them in the first of the hot weather with a series of "Four Perfect Program Weeks," of which Sans Gene was the first.

The quartet was so strongly advertised that merchants were unusually willing to give their windows for hooks.

Got One Return on 2,700 Mailing List

In a recent check-up on his mailing list of about 2,700 names, Don Nickols, of the Durham, (N. C.) Amusement Company received only one return; a capital showing. Mr. Nichols knows that the letter that never comes costs the house money and brings no return, so he is particular to keep his list up to the moment.

The mailer was for Charley's Aunt and warned hysterical persons to stay away, ending with "Funny? Why man, that word is as weak as prohibition beer when you use it to try to describe this picture. It's nothing short of an hysterical spasm. Before it's half over you'll be gasping for breath and wishing you could get a minute to catch up with the laughs. It gave the Durham public the suggestion that Charley's Aunt was worth seeing.

On the side he hooked a local candy store to a display of nuts; all sorts of nuts, with Brazil nuts featured, and a nut, neatly enveloped, was given each patron the previous week. The store supplied the nuts in return for the window display idea, and did not even ask for a credit line on the envelope.

And for a final kicker Mr. Nicholas pasted a 24-sheet upside down and about half the residents rushed to tell him of the billposter's error. It was the first time he had ever worked it, and it had the town all looking for a four letter word meaning excited. Even the newspaper gave a reader.

The natural result was an unusual business.

Hooked It In

There is not much connection between Mothers' Day and Any Woman, but George E. Brown did the best he could to link them by announcing that "any woman" who also was a mother over fifty years of age could see the picture the day following.

AN EFFECTIVE USE OF LAMPS ON A LOBBY SIGN

Frank Steffy, of the Coliseum Theatre, Seattle, wires his banners for small bulbs and makes his announcements much more attractive. This display on If I Marry Again is "sponge" work, which gives a soft blending of the background color.

Knives Were Tacks for Spaniard Bills

To say that George E. Brown, of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., stuck up his bills for The Spaniard is entirely correct.

He used 100 heralds in the business district and each was held in place by a knife thrust into the wood.

The bills did not stay up beyond the first day for a lot of people liked the knives. But Brown got enough out of the first day to get his money back, as the knives cost only nine cents each.

Getting Radio Fans

Brown worked another new one. He adapted the name idea to the radio broadcast from a local station. Persons listening in and hearing their names mentioned by the announcer could claim single tickets at the box office. Naturally the announcer had to brag up the show a lot, which alone was worth the six admissions, and each of the six tickets were accompanied by one or more paid admissions.

The names can be taken from the telephone book, local directory, mailing list or any other source. It's a whale the first time and a good regular stunt as well.

With the single exception of Sans Gene this pair of ideas gave George the best business he has had since the weather warmed up.

An Author, Too

Frank Holland, manager of the Victory Theatre, Evansville, Ind., is a member of the local Rotary Club, and when the club recently decided to make a local production for the benefit of the treasury, it was Holland who framed the presentation and put it on.

Naturally everyone in town was interested in the venture, and it brought no little goodwill to the manager and the house. Stunts like this are worth a great deal to a theatre. It has an effect that lasts long beyond the showing—if it's a good show, and this one was.

Made Junk Wagons His Ragman Prams

It cost Charlie Morrison, of the Imperial Theatre, Jacksonville, only a few passes to get Ragman banners on the collection wagons of the leading junk dealers, and for a week they went about town telling of the coming of the Coogan picture.

The advantage of a junk wagon over the usual auto perambulator is that it runs more slowly and the matter can more easily be read.

Morrison also fished the old clothes stunt out of the discard and put it to work again. Children were admitted to a matinee on presentation of a bundle of junk, and the lobby was piled high. Then Morrison placarded the pile with a card to the effect that this material was to be given the Salvation Army and later exhibited in the lobby an appreciative letter from their captain.

He got a nice hot weather business with a small cash outlay.

Painted Sidewalks for Mme. Sans Gene

Naturally Mme. Sans Gene might be expected to go over in Montreal, with its large French population, but Harry S. Dahn, of the Capitol Theatre, believed in helping a good thing to be better.

He got after the French newspapers for about five and a half pages of publicity, ranging from small readers to two column stories and about every cut he could get hold of.

A special French Night was appointed for the Monday after the opening, when the French Consul General and the aristocracy were all present, much as at the five dollar performance in New York.

The guard boxes, similar to those used for the New York run, were in use, and two former service men in French uniforms were stationed as sentries. Instead of the red carpet that was one of the features of the New York run, the sidewalk was painted in strips of red, white and blue water color.

For a prologue the Robespierre overture was used. When the Marseillaise was reached, the lights were dimmed and the patriotic music was punctuated by cannon shot. When the lights went on at the finish they revealed a well-staged battle tableau.

The combined stunts put the picture over to two full weeks with capacity at almost every performance.

Tagged Ushers

Eddie Collins not only used the street car hook-up on Excuse Me, but he tagged his ushers at the Queen Theatre, Galveston, Texas, a week ahead of the showing. Each of the boys wore a tag on his back with the legend and was instructed to be demonstratively polite to carry out the Courtesy Week idea.

The street car hook-up, in case you have forgotten, is to give a period pass to the street car conductor who is the subject of the most appreciative letter during a given period. The newspapers play up the idea as a local story and the traction company likes it because it gives emphasis to the idea that conductors can be courteous.

Don Nichols Uses Odd Shaped Space

Don Nicholas, of the Durham, (N. C.) Amusement Company, sends in some of his small spaces with the remark that while some of them are a bit old they may interest through their size. land, a special children's matinee and an underline all in two twos. The result is that he has no room for a proper display of his main title. The dumb bell shape is a good one and had the title been run straight across, with smaller type in the four corners, this would have made a very good display, with room for the special matinee in the jog at the bottom. This would have cut out the underline, but would have given a better return on the investment. A straight across line could have been used for the underline, were it regarded as essential. As the space stands the title is too small to be impressive, though type of this size might have carried in a single column measure. Better work is done on North of 36, in which the

It isolates the various portions of the appeal without separating them, and the three-point rule has almost the value of a cut. The last line is in the nature of a personal endorsement, since he announces that he believes that it will please as well as The Covered Wagon. In the third example we have the panel within a panel, but in this instance the design is made more striking through slanting the sides to meet a narrower piece of rule work at the top. This is more effective than the right angled panel, because any departure from the usual gains attention. In theory the circle is the best attention-getter, because the circle is most remote from the square or oblong, but in practice there are many other effective designs. selling than the average picture because few outside of the cities know the title, and are not apt to connect it with a remarkably good play. For this reason we believe that more selling would have been good here, even to the exclusion of the cut, or at least a trim to leave only the clown head, setting the title in type. The lower panel seems to refer to a local offering. Probably the town knows what it is all about, but it would not sell a traveling man. This takes four and a half inches double, more than twice the average display, and unless we miss our guess, it was the least profitable of the lot. The first three are fine examples of small all-type displays. All four are interesting.

Parading a man in Spanish dress, who strummed the guitar and sang was one of the ways C. B. Stiff took to put over "The Spaniard" at the Tivola theatre, Chattanooga. The only advertisement was a small card on the man's back, but everyone turned to look, so it got over.

This Double Truck Good for The Hawk

This double truck for The Sea Hawk comes from Sydney, marking the Australian opening. Evidently the Australian papers will not lift the bars of their chases to permit a two page cut to be used, or perhaps it is not possible to plate a double. At any rate the drawing is cut to make the jump, though this effect is less noticeable in the original; where you expect it, than in the reduction, where the white space is emphasized. These drawings are all wash, and specially made, which assures good reproduction. Wash drawings, of the right sort, are expensive here, but Australia makes frequent use of them in launching important productions, and the resultant pages are well worth while. The copy is written with great care, and the quality of the appeal is strong. This was put on as a full entertainment with an elaborate prologue, the latter being sold in the special panel to the extreme left. Evidently there was also a morning show, without the prologue, in addition to the matinee and night performances. Of course the run is history now and the results prove that the investment in extra publicity were well worth while. It must be remembered, too, that in a sense this double truck sold the picture to all of Australasia. It was not merely the advertisement of the local showing, but an appeal to showmen everywhere. Even at that it is a notable display, for size, conviction and elegance.

been done very artistically and is one instance where hand lettering is much superior to type. We think that design got the eye better than any possible use of cut and there is a positive selling value in the Griffith name. We do not always like the Kings-Rivoli spaces, for the artist works overtime, but this is exceptionally well done.

Reduces a Cut for a Better Display

M. W. Larmour, of the National Theatre, Graham, Texas, sends in his display on The Narrow Street with the plan book mat from which it was made. The original is a two nines, the National ad is a two sevens, and Mr. Larmour not only saves four inches of space but we think that he has produced a more inviting display. The main idea, however, was not so much to save space as to get a place for a kicker line at the top of the space. Mr. Larmour knew that he would have to raise his voice to get attention, and he wanted that "it's a howl" where the Warner trade mark runs in the original. He knew, too, that the illustration would look better to his readers if set at the top, and would have a more immediate interest, so he sawed the cut apart, on a slant at the bottom, matched it in with the title and got what we regard as a more attractive space than the original. There is a much better display for the reading matter. It is set in straight Roman instead of full face, gets a larger letter and is easier to read, and yet the net space is shorter than the original because a lot of excess illustration has been cut away. It does not always pay to slice the mat, but very often a manager can get a mort practical result than he would obtain from the original layout. The staff artists do not always turn out good advertising. They seem more concerned with pretty looking spaces than good sellers, but you almost always can work it over into a sensible and practical seller if you will set down and think instead of just cussing around. Mr. Larmour cannot afford a house artist, but he does not need one, for he has good taste himself and fine co-operation from his printer; in which he is very fortunate.

Another Good Idea From the Beacham

A poor advertisement from the Beacham Theatre, Orlando, Fla., would be more of a novelty than a good one, for Frank H. Burns has trained the compositors to help him realize his white space ideas, so he gets large values from small space investments. This is only a three sevens, but it looks more because the blank border and the open composition both serve to give the suggestion of a larger space. The lettering is very probably taken from the press book, as we be-

"How Baxter Butted In"

Matt Moore and Dorothy Devore in Jolly Warner Brothers Farce
Comedy
Reviewed by Sumner Smith

The whole footage of "How Baxter Butted In," a Warner Brothers picture adapted by Owen Davis from Harold Titus' novel, "Stuff of Heroes," is given up to angling for laughter. William Beaudine, the director, is well known by reason of previous comedy successes and in this instance he again has turned out a picture that should please all but sour-visaged people. It deftly combines humor and pathos and is generally amusing throughout.

Matt Moore and Dorothy Devore easily lead the field in arousing laughs. Moore has an excellent part, that of a bashful clerk burdened with responsibilities and in love with a most competent little stenographer, and Miss Devore is about as good a foil as could have been found for him. More comedy is contributed by Otis Harlan, and Ward Crane is well cast as Moore's shrewd and crooked boss in the business office of a newspaper.

A lot of comedy is extracted out of each situation, thanks to the capable work of Moore and Miss Devore and the direction of Beaudine. The director has used a dog and eight spotted puppies as foils for a lot of fun with two children, Turner Savage and Virginia Marshall.

There are some five or six flash-backs in the picture. Ordinarily so many of these would tend to slow up the action, but Beaudine has managed to make each one earn its right to inclusion without checking the story.

This picture is filled with familiar gags and they are well handled. Some corking comedy and gags are wound around a banquet given a police department hero. It is unfortunate that the actor playing this role is not given credit, for he is uproariously funny. Called upon for a speech, all he can say is, "I seen my duty and I done it." His facial expressions are marvels.

His hard luck increases when a widowed sister-in-law and her two children descend upon him. He works days at the office and nights doing clerical work for a druggist until his health fails him. Walter Higgins, his office boss, has stolen Henry's idea of boosting newspaper circulation by giving valor banquets to heroes. When Henry recovers from his illness he is invited to attend one and finds that his struggles are appreciated as real heroism. His home takes fire, and spurred on by a desire to be the other sort of hero, Henry thrusts aside the firemen and rescues the children himself.

Stage Play Furnishes Evelyn Brent with Best Vehicle in Her Series of Crook Films for F. B. O.
Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Bayard Veiller's play, "The Chatterbox," adapted to the screen under the title, "Smooth as Satin," serves as the newest F. B. O. starring vehicle for Evelyn Brent and gives her the opportunity to again appear in the type of role with which she now seems definitely identified: that of a girl crook who ends up by going straight.

This story differs from her previous offerings in which she was reformed through the influence of some upright person with whom she came in contact, for in this instance both the hero and heroine and, in fact, practically all of the characters are crooks, with the exception of the detective, and it is the pitiable plight of a former safe cracker combined with the growing realization that crime does not mix with romance that brings about the regeneration.

The plot has been cleverly constructed and there is a distinct surprise in the disclosure that a nice old couple are really clever crooks. This brings in good comedy in the situations where each band of crooks await the opportunity to outdo each other. The action is fast and snappy throughout and works up to a good thrill in which the girl races to the pier, poses as a detective and gets back the money from the other crooks; then races the train on which the hero is being taken to prison. Just after she catches it, the train is wrecked by a cave-in in the tunnel. This scene is effectively handled and introduces a situation which clinches the audience's sympathy and brings about the happy ending, for the girl persuades her husband to rescue the detective who is pinned under the wreckage, and in return he is given his freedom.

This type of role seems to fit Evelyn Brent to perfection; she is attractive, alert and vivacious and admirably suggests the clever girl crook, and at the same time always retains your sympathy. Bruce Gordon gives a good performance in the opposite role.

There are points in the story that put quite a strain on the credulity, as, for instance, the ease with which these expert crooks allow themselves to be taken in by the elderly couple and the simple manner in which the girl trails them and gets back her money; but the fast action, melodramatic climax, good comedy and cleverness of some of the situations make it a picture that should register well with all who like crook stories and prove a good audience attraction. In fact, we consider "Smooth as Satin" to be well up in its class and the best of Miss Brent's starring vehicles.

Milton Sills Makes Debut as Star in Pleasing Human Interest Story of a Policeman's Life

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

As the climax to an enviable record of success in leading roles for a number of years, during which time he has been featured in some of the screen's biggest hits, Milton Sills has at last achieved stardom in the First National production, "The Making of O'Malley," based on a story by the well-known writer, Gerald Beaumont.

Sills portrays the title role in this story which deals with the career of a member of the New York police who was a good officer but a little too strict in his enforcement of the law, and shows how he was softened and found romance when he was detailed to regulate traffic at a bad crossing used by school children.

The picture follows the general lines of plots of this type and is filled with the type of situations that have proved their audience appeal. Heart interest, pathos and sympathy play a large part in its development, centering in O'Malley's interest in a little lame girl who is eventually cured by a surgeon that O'Malley persuades to operate on her.

The plot is melodramatic and coincidences figure prominently as this little girl proves to be the daughter of a man whom O'Malley has sent to prison for bootlegging, and the sweetheart of the heroine turns out to be the leader of the bootlegging gang. This situation gives the hero a chance for heroic self-sacrifice as he allowed himself to be disgraced rather than have the girl experience unenviable notoriety. The repentant crook, however, exposes the leader and O'Malley, of course, wins the girl after all and is restored to his position on the force.

Sills is congenially cast as the big cop and gives an excellent performance, and Dorothy Mackaill handles the role of the girl to entire satisfaction. The remainder of the characters are capably portrayed, especially that of the little lame girl by Helen Rowland.

Lambert Hillyer has given this picture good direction. The story is smoothly developed and holds the interest and there is some good thrill stuff in the latter reels during a raid on the warehouse. Sills and the gang leader are shown as swinging off of a roof on one rope and struggling in mid-air. The different elements have been nicely balanced, so that the story is pleasing and it should prove a good audience attraction. Children especially should like this story of the big policeman who was beloved by the school kids and so kind to the little lame girl.

Story

Policeman Jim O'Malley was recognized by Capt. Collins as being an excellent officer except that he was too intolerant of minor infractions of the law and was continually issuing summons, so when Lucille Thayer, a school teacher, asked for a traffic cop to protect a crossing near school, Captain detailed O'Malley, believing the effect of the children would soften him. It did; O'Malley became a favorite with the children and arranged with a surgeon to operate on Margie, a little lame girl. He then discovered she was the daughter of Danny, whom he had sent to prison for bootlegging. O'Malley finally located the headquarters of the bootleggers and in a raid all were captured but the leader, but O'Malley traced and got him. When he found out the leader was Browne, supposed to be Lucille's fiance, he let him go for her sake and allowed himself to be "broken." However, it came out all right, for Danny, released from prison, exposed Browne, and O'Malley's self-sacrifice was made known. He was restored and won Lucille in the bargain.

Menjou Shines in a Sophisticated Comedy of Marriage and Remarriage in a Clever Paramount Production

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

William C. De Mille stops just short of one of the great accomplishments of his career in this play from Clare Kummer's stage version of Alfred Savoir's "Banco." As it stands it is a delightful entertainment, but it lacks an intangible something of being truly a great play. Just what it is it is difficult to say, but there is lacking a convincing air of sophistication to match the play. Mr. De Mille is at his best in stories of charm and sincerity, and at times is at a loss in the advancement of this fantastic plot.

Adolphe Menjou does a great deal to get the atmosphere over, and is delightful in his suave playing, but he stands almost alone in this. Greta Nissen, a newcomer, is capitally cast as the young wife. She looks as well as she acts the part. Edgar Norton in a character role is a capital foil and the entire play is well cast, though the burden of the work lies to these three, in spite of the fact that Robert Agnew is featured over Norton.

But if the play falls short of greatness, it does not follow that it lacks appeal. It is a thoroughly delightful comedy, just as it stands, with a somewhat daring climax, so handled as to be without offense. The scenes in which the first husband spends his wife's second bridal night in her apartment is absolutely without suggestiveness. The presentation keeps in mind only the eventual aim and not the situation of the moment. Here Mr. De Mille probably has done better than would those who might better have handled some of the other scenes. The play will appeal chiefly to the better class of patrons, but these will find it highly diverting, and probably few will realize that more might have been done.

Fourth F. B. O. Picture Starring Yakima Canutt Is Typical Western with Plenty of Action

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

As his fourth starring vehicle in the series which is being distributed through F. B. O. Yakima Canutt, the rodeo champion, is being presented by Ben Wilson in "The Human Tornado."

This picture contains about all of the usual ingredients of a western worked into a plot which introduces more than the ordinary amount of complications; however, they dovetail into each other smoothly, so that there is no difficulty in following the thread of the story. The result is a picture that has plenty of action, melodramatic plot and counter plot, and should provide satisfactory entertainment for western fans.

The story involves a couple of murders, a robbery, the inevitable romance, the cheating of the hero out of his inheritance, the digging of a buried treasure by the hero under the guns of the villain's gang and his crafty escape after a wild ride and jump into a stream, and altogether, Yakima is certainly kept on the go and proves to be an exceedingly busy chap.

The star again proves his ability as a fine horseman and fighter, and does some fine riding stunts and also is very clever in the handling of a "gat." Nancy Leeds, an attractive girl, plays opposite him, while Bert Sprotte is entirely satisfactory as the villainous half-brother, and the other roles are capably handled.

Ben Wilson personally directed the production and he has turned out a picture that makes up in action and stunts for any inconsistencies and lack of originality in the story. Altogether it is one of the best of the series.

Crowley fires at Daley and kills the watchman and later kills the mail carrier in attempting to obtain a letter ad-

"A Man of Iron"

Chadwick Pictures Corporation Offers Another Production with Lionel Barrymore as the Star

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Under the title, "A Man of Iron," Chadwick Pictures Corporation is offering on the independent market another production in the series starring the well-known stage and screen actor, Lionel Barrymore.

This title has a double meaning, for not only is the hero the owner of a big iron works but according to the story he is a man of iron will although there is little in the characterization to bring this out.

The picture is in reality a narrative concerning a man who brusquely declares his love for a woman who loves a dissolute prince. When the prince turns her down to wed a woman of greater wealth, she marries the hero to save her pride but resents his affection. Attempts of the prince to reopen their romance leads to a duel in which the hero is the victor and a reconciliation is brought about.

It will be seen that the theme follows along familiar lines. There is very little characterization and a dearth of drama and this, combined with a lot of unnecessary detail and an apparent effort on the part of the director to cover up story weakness by keeping his characters moving about, causes the story to drag, with a tendency to cause loss of interest before the climax is reached.

While there is melodramatic punch in the duel scene where the hero holds his fire and, after he is shot, manages to pull himself together long enough to kill the villain, but a sub-title in which he states he would have killed him had he been shot through the heart overplays the situation.

Mildred Harris is satisfactory as the wife and Jean Del Val is well cast as an extremely unctious and disagreeable gentlemanly villain. Lionel Barrymore of course is capable but he has been given little to do, and as a whole we consider this picture as failing to measure up to his previous pictures for Chadwick. His name, if properly exploited, should bring them in, but patrons will probably consider "A Man of Iron" as mediocre entertainment hardly worthy of this star's talents.

"After Business Hours"

Columbia Pictures Offer Good Domestic Melodrama with Elaine Hammerstein and Lou Tellegen

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

A magazine story by Eethel Watts Mumford, "Everything Money Can Buy," has been transferred to the screen by Columbia Pictures with Elaine Hammerstein and Lou Tellegen in the leading roles under the title, "After Business Hours," and is being distributed on the independent market.

The story is built around the popular but somewhat familiar theme as to whether it is right for a husband to simply provide for his wife's wants or whether he should trust her with money as well. The characters are in the extremely wealthy class and their problems are only to a limited extent those with which the majority of the spectators meet; however, in a measure they will probably strike home to many.

The author has taken the position that to find happiness not only should the husband trust his wife with money but that the wife should be perfectly frank with her husband, and in this picture which has been worked out along the lines of a domestic melodrama in which the wife loses money at cards, pawns her jewels to cover it, gambles to recoup her losses and loses more and finally finds herself in the toils of a money lender who is a blackmailer. Her husband comes to her rescue and admits that his theory was all wrong and responsible for all the trouble.

The story has been smoothly developed along lines that retain the interest and the wife, admirably portrayed by Elaine Hammerstein, holds your sympathy even though you are apt to feel that the character and incidents are rather overdrawn and that she was foolish and weak and should have at least known better than to pawn a lost piece of valuable jewelry and forge her friend's name in the bargain. In fact this is the weakest point in the story, but it leads up to a good melodramatic situation in which the husband goes to the money lender who was all prepared to receive the wife. Most audiences will like the snappy fight in which the money lender gets what he deserves and also his clever pantomime in which he rehearses the conversation he will have with the wife. This is clever and a vital point in rounding out the story, and John Patrick does some excellent work here; in fact he proves to be a likeable villain and threatens to walk away with the picture. Lou Tellegen is satisfactory as the husband but his role is really a minor one in the development. Phyllis Haver gives a good performance as the wife's worldly friend.

"After Business Hours," we believe, will prove a pleasing program attraction for audiences in the average theatre.

Story

John King, wealthy, starts his married life with the determination that he will give her everything she wants but will not trust her with money, and only gives her a few dollars for incidental expenses. June, his wife, gets in a friendly bridge game and loses heavily and her friend, Sylvia, persuades her to pawn a pin to get the money. To recoup her finances, while at a party given by Downing she gambles and loses still more and this time she gives her pearls as security. Her chauffeur, Hendricks, blackmails her and to prevent him from telling her husband she takes a pin that Mrs. Wentworth has dropped and pawns it, forging Sylvia's name to the loan slip. Downing, who is ambitious and has been turned down by King for membership in a swell club, sees his chance and demands that June come to his home as the price of keeping her out of jail for theft and forgery. John, returning home unexpectedly, learns of the situation and goes to Downing, gives him a severe thrashing and secures the jewelry. Returning home, June tells him the truth and blames him for not trusting her with money. John declares he has learned the folly of his plan and that they will start out on a new basis.

"Beauty and the Bad Man"

Well Handled Sentimental and Romantic Story of a Generation Ago Will Probably Please

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

It is a story of California a generation ago that is unfolded in "Beauty and the Bad Man," a Producers Distributing Corporation production adapted from a Peter B. Kyne story, "Cornflower Cassie's Concert."

This story is a sentimental melodrama built around the romance between a gambler in a small mining town and a girl with a wonderful voice to whom he loans enough money to study music abroad. She becomes a great opera singer but returns to the town and finds happiness as his wife.

While the main idea is improbable, for such things seldom happen in real life, and this is further accented by the coincidence of the hero, the girl and her villainous husband, all of whom are introduced to the spectators in one small town, finally landing together in another and more out of the way place, nevertheless the picture should provide satisfying entertainment, especially for the romantically inclined.

The characters are well developed and rather out of the ordinary and there is a pleasing quaintness about the costumes which seems reflected in the action and suggest more romantic atmosphere than that of the more matter-of-fact present, making the action seem more plausible.

The continuity is smooth, the production details adequate, the story has been capably directed by William Worthington so that it holds the interest. Effective suspense has been worked up around the character of the girl's dissolute husband who seems to have consumption and you are kept wondering,

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

"Isn't Life Terrible"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Vacation subjects are now popular and this one shows Charley Chase, Katherine Grant and Babe Hardy off on an ocean voyage. Lon Poff is an excellent type as the ship's carpenter who mends the leaks. Investigation discloses that the boat is about ready to fall apart. The best gags in the picture have to do with this. Charley leans against a railing and it breaks, he closes a bureau drawer in his room and a section of the hull falls into the ocean. Then there are laughable moments when, in the excitement of boarding the vessel, Charley and Katherine leave their daughter behind and take a little colored girl by the hand. She is a good little comedian and might have been used more. The subject measures up well to the Charley Chase standard and ought to please almost all audiences.—S. S.

"Ko-Ko Celebrates the Fourth"

(Red Seal—Cartoon—One Reel)

As a special for Independence Day, Red Seal is offering an Out-of-the-Inkwell Cartoon, "Ko-Ko Celebrates the Fourth." The clever little clown gets a note that the boss will be away and finding some fireworks he places them all over the office and starts to set them off. One big rocket carries them to a cannibal island where Ko-Ko is to be the chief article in a stew. His dog comes to the rescue and feeds the fireworks to the natives and soon they get sick, the powder explodes and they give imitations of roman candles, sky rockets, pin wheels, etc. Fleischer returns in time to get in the midst of it and comes near being wrecked himself. Besides being especially timely, this is one of the cleverest and most amusing of the "Inkwell" cartoons.—C. S. S.

This reel is featured by exceedingly beautiful views of the mists of the morning over a lake. These cannot be too highly recommended. Then there are views of "St. Louis, the Mound City," and a chapter in the Roy Chapman Andrews Mongolian expedition called "The Fossil Fields." This deals principally with a Mongol pony market and is very interesting.—S. S.

"Never Fear"

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

The familiar topic of a pipe bursting in a bathroom, the plumber making matters worse, and the guests being deluged below is presented by Educational under the title of "Never Fear." House wrecking, floating bath tubs, and drenched evening clothes get the laughs in many houses and this picture should prove to be no exception in such respect. Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance are featured.—T. W.

Fitzpatrick and McElroy are releasing through Educational official pictures of the recent wrestling bout between Ed "Strangler" Lewis and Wayne "Big" Munn. The film is one of the most complete of its kind. It shows the two men in training for the contest performing feats testing to the limit their great strength. The highlights of the bout are also depicted with admirable clarity. Although the affair was staged in Michigan City on May 30 it should prove real entertainment to wrestling fans at almost any time. Lewis winning the encounter with his dreaded head-lock, thus retaining for the time the diamond belt and the world's championship, they will find is a most interesting sight.—T. W.

"Plenty of Nerve"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

The newest Century Comedy for release through Universal has Edna Marian as the star, and the action concerns her romance with a would-be sheik. Considerable of the humor in this two-reeler is based on the superstition of the hero. For instance in attempting to walk around a black cat he knocks a vase off a shelf which lands on his head. Attempting to feed this cat a horde of black cats appear on the scene and he acts like he is crazy. The girl's mother inherits an asylum and the manager, who had hoped to own the place, locks the girl and her mother in a cell but the sheik manages to get them out. There is considerable slapstick and a fair amount of humor, but this offering is not up to the Century average as a laugh-getter.—C. S. S.

"Chasing the Chaser"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

In this subject Jimmy Finlayson appears as the husband who has never gone wrong but who is constantly skidding. His suspicious wife engages a female impersonator to get the goods on him, and James promptly falls into the trap, dancing with the supposed siren in his home and before his wife's eyes. She confronts him, whereupon James draws a gun and shoots up the landscape, without, however, scoring a single hit. Man and wife are balmy with love again as the detective flies. The comedy has a very slight story and very few incidents even for a single reeler.—S. S.

"Bobby Bumps & Co.

(Educational—Cartoon—One Reel)

Earl Hurd sketches a vaudeville house with an overture by the orchestra and the regular line of performers. This one-reeler is like a vaudeville bill on the screen, only Hurd's pen can make his actors do things which could never be realized on the legitimate stage. The cartoon contains the average amount of entertainment.—T. W.

A farewell dinner was tendered Frederick Cuneo, who has managed the Rialto and rk theatres in Glens Falls for the past ar, by friends in that city one night last eek. Mr. Cuneo is now a resident of Am- erdam, where he is associated with J. A. tcheson in the management of the four eith theatres there.

The American Theatre in Troy, which was quired several months ago by the Strand terests, following Ben Apple's financial dif- culties, will reopen about August 15 as a st-run house, three changes to the week d with a 15-cent admission. No one has yet en named as manager. Walter Hays of uffalo and Moe Mark of New York City ent an entire day last week in Troy, ar- nging the many details incidental to the opening.

Honeymooners John Garry and Company Glens Falls arrived back home on Thurs- ay, Mr. Garry resuming his duties as man- ger of the Empire Theatre a day or so ter. Of course they went to Atlantic City, nt back a few dozen postals, and all that rt of thing. The World wishes the young uple many years of success and happiness.

Sangster and Fitzgerald of Alexandria Bay ave just opened theatres in Redwood and heresa, nearby towns. They have bought a uck to assist in transporting advertising atter and film over the triangular circuit.

June 16 always means a whole lot to El- er Crowninshield, former owner of the ijou in Troy but who is now devoting his ntire time to the repair of picture theatre uipment. In the first place, June 16 marks r. Crowninshield's birthday and this year it also marked his twenty-fourth year in repairing projection machines. During some of the years that have passed he has run theatres along with his business. He started in with Edison and now looks after the machines in no less than twenty-four counties in this state.

A Cool Reception

Having installed new ventilating fans, Jake Rosenthal of the Rose Theatre in Troy next planned to tell his patrons that it was 20 degrees cooler inside, but forgot the fact that his neighborhood falls somewhat short of college, or possibly high school, graduates. Mr. Rosenthal rigged up a sign, reading as follows: "20° cooler inside." Instead of business picking up, just the reverse took place. Mr. Rosenthal, plainly worried, stationed one of his men outside in an effort to ascertain why so few were entering.

A couple of foreign-born came along who as a rule visited the theatre four or five nights out of the week. They glanced at the sign, and then one was heard to remark: "Twenty cents, too much," and moved down the street, seeking another 10-cent house. Jake lost no time in having the sign yanked in and now his 10-cent admission sign looms twice its usual size. Mr. Rosenthal is mighty proud of his new ventilators and in bragging about them goes even so far as to say they are strong enough to draw the garlic right out of many of his patrons.

Walter Hays of Buffalo was all smiles the other night when he hit Albany and Troy, discovering the crowds standing at the Mark Strand in Albany where "A Little French Girl" was playing, while the Troy Theatre, as well as the Lincoln, were doing almost as well. "That's the sort of a greeting I like to get," remarked Mr. Hays.

There must be more money in the world than $25, but film salesmen declare that Julius Byck with theatres in Tannersville, Hunter and other places in the Catskills, and who is deaf and dumb, must be under the impression that the finances of the world stop when they reach the twenty-five dollar mark. Forced to do the most of his business with pad and pencil, Mr. Byck has nevertheless trained his vocal chords to articulate "twenty-five." There never seems to be anything more nor less. It's his price.

How is Morris Silverman, who runs the Pearl and the Happy Hour in Schenectady, doing these days? Well, as Morris says, in reply to the inquiry, he is just "pegging along," adding that it's not like the old days.

Harry Lazarus, Kingston exhibitor, is a fly fisherman, and like all of their cult looks down upon the man who would stoop to entice the sporty trout with the lowly worm. Mr. Lazarus was out one morning last week after browns and rainbows, and in telling the story measured off about two-thirds of his arm in describing their size. Mr. Lazarus belongs to a fishing club where the man who so much as uses a worm is liable to be ousted.

Miss Betty Feuer of the Crescent in Schenectady would close for the summer if some of the other 10 and 15-cent houses would do likewise. These exhibitors, however, are the flies in Betty's ointment and refuse to enter into any such agreement. And now Miss Betty with little overhead, declares that if they can stand it, so can she.

Abe Stone of the Arbor Hill and the Delaware theatres in Albany lost nineteen dollars and also nineteen pounds during the recent hot spell. He was far more worried over the former than the latter, although still scaling better than 200 pounds.

Dave Seymour, who runs the Pontiac in Saranac Lake, has just made a record. But perhaps it would be better to permit Mr. Seymour to describe just the sort of record he made during the recent hot spell. It was a record for "non-attendance." Mr. Seymour, in a letter to friends in this city, declared that he was not very well pleased with independent pictures with Thief of Bagdad prices.

Not just pictures—opportunities!

Buffalo, N. Y.

Buffalo exhibitors will be interested to learn that Bruce Fowler, former manager of the Olympic and Elmwood in Buffalo, has been transferred from the McVickers in Chicago to the management of the Newman and Royal theatres in Kansas City. Howard Waugh, former Jamestown, N. Y., exhibitor, has been transferred from the Palace in Memphis to the Howard in Atlanta. Earl Crabb, who managed the Buffalo Strand for many years, is still district manager for Paramount in Texas, and Art Amm, another Buffalonian of other days, is still sitting on the world in Florida as district manager of F. P.-L.

Robert Kane has resigned as manager of the Hi-Art Theatre in Lockport, N. Y., and it is rumored he may be appointed managed of the new theatre which Paramount has leased in that town. Mr. Kane has been at the Hi-Art for many years.

Merritt A. Kyser, manager of the new Aurora Theatre, East Aurora, N. Y., is a recruit from the musician ranks to the exhibitor forces. Mr. Kyser is a member of long standing in the Buffalo "musikers" union, he having blown a mean French horn for, lo, these many years in the principal theatre orchestras of the city, including Shea's Hippodrome. So if the Aurora Theatre orchestra ever "walks out" Merritt can walk in and do a one-man orchestra stunt.

A New York Corporation has applied for an option on the Hotel Wiss property in Leroy, N. Y., owned by John Hepps, for the purpose of erecting thereon a picture theatre, with four stores on Main street and an arcade going through to the theatre which will have exits on Lake street. The company also plans to have from twenty to twenty-five sleeping rooms with baths and showers on the second floor for tourists and travelers, with a cafeteria and lobby on the main floor. Jack Latta, a resident of Le Roy, through whom the deal is being handled, has not as yet announced the name of the Gotham corporation interested in the venture.

Gilda Gray comes to Shea's Hippodrome this week, commencing Sunday, and it is predicted that her shaking shoulders will shatter all box office records at this big Buffalo house. There has been a large advance sale of opera glasses, according to local optometrists and George Mason, assistant manager of the Hipp, has postponed his vacation for a week. Ah, but you're wrong; he wants to help take care of the crowds.

Charley Hayman, president of the Strand and Cataract theatre companies in Niagara Falls, is planning another trip to Europe.

Genesee Amusement Enterprises, Inc., of Batavia, N. Y., has taken over the old Community Theatre site on East Main street near Center and proposes holding the property with the intention later of erecting a theatre and business building. The company now controls two theatres in Batavia, three

To inject a cool feeling into Shea's Hippodrome atmosphere, Manager Vincent R. John J. Farren, manager of the Victoria Theatre, Rochester, addressing a letter to J. Emerson Dickman, as "president of the Knife Throwers, Sword and Dagger Association," but who in real life is a Fox salesman, warns Mr. Dickman that he must keep away from the "Vic" office until all traces of the fertilizer cure for baldness have been removed. In a postscript John suggests that any time "Emmy" is around the lake that he drop in. It is this kind spirit of camaraderie that is helping the film industry so much in this neck of the timber. "Emmy" in his behalf denies using anything other than the old oil drained from the crankcase.

One film salesman has departed from this territory for whom Mrs. A. E. Milligan, who runs the theatre in Schuylerville, will never shed a tear. The salesman was so close that, according to the story, when he opened his purse one day, a moth flew out. Hitting Schuylerville, the film salesman invariably would inquire of Mrs. Milligan, if her "stove was lit," as he had a couple of eggs he would like to fry. Later on Mrs. Milligan would see the same film salesman standing outside of her house waiting for some friendly automobile to give him a lift to the next town. Mrs. Milligan was along Film Row during the past week and told of arrangements for a lawn festival on July 2, in her home town, at which she will furnish free motion pictures. Business is none too good, and the house is now running on Friday, Saturday and Sunday only, the Sunday business, as Mrs. Milligan says, being about the only thing that keeps them going. The fact that the wall paper company has decided not to rebuild the mill that was recently burned in Schuylerville, makes the outlook rather a dark one.

Oscar Perrin was right on hand at the Empire in Glens Falls the other night when in connection with entertaining the members of the G. A. R. and their wives of that city at a showing of "Barbara Frietchie," he gave away about 3,000 small silk flags to everyone attending the theatre.

From now on, the Board of Arbitration, as well as the Albany Film Board of Trade, will meet but once a month instead of every other week.

Charlie Sesonske, who owns the Grand Theatre in Johnston, has a good manager in Edwin F. Russell and isn't afraid to say so. In fact, Mr. Sesonske leaves him pretty well alone and devotes much of his time to handling vaudeville bookings.

Sam Hochstim of the Star in Hudson is certainly knocking 'em dead these days, sporting both a car and knickerbockers. Mr. Hochstim, who was formerly a film salesman in Albany, appears to be doing very well as an exhibitor and his many friends are naturally pleased.

William Smalley of Cooperstown, who has fifteen theatres in his chain and who is said to be contemplating the erection of four new houses in places not yet disclosed, has bought the old stage coach that used to travel between Richfield Springs and Albany. For nearly a half century, the old coach has been gathering cobwebs, but now, drawn by two prancing black horses, it is covering the 400-odd miles between the Smalley houses, with a schedule calling for the journey's completion within thirty-four days. Of course, as might be expected, the old stage coach, as it rumbles through the country, carries some reference to Mr. Smalley's theatres.

Lew Fischer announces that his theatre in Chatham will run but three days a week for the remainder of the summer, and that the one in Port Henry is now on a four-day-a-week basis. The business situation in Port Henry, which depends almost entirely upon the iron mines, presents few signs of encouragement.

Jake Golden, running the Griswold in Troy, is planning to use a Troy vaudeville week along with pictures some time in July. Last week Mr. Golden featured Forrest L. Willis in his own songs, Mr. Willis later broadcasting from one of the local stations. Both Mr. Gilden and Mr. Saperstein, who is now managing the Hall in Albany, will hold screen try-outs in connection with a magazine, seeking stars for "Polly of the Ballet."

He began in Dayton, Ohio, in 1906 as an operator in his brother's theatre, incidentally the first picture house ever built in Dayton. Irving MacDonald, ye genial major domo of Fox's (William) Theatre in Springfield, missed a chance to give ye scribe a pass the other day. We happened to be passing through Springfield and there paused, once again to say "hello" to Manager MacDonald after more than a two years' absence. But we can't blame him for being absent at the time. Ye courteous ticket snatcher informed us (special to William Fox) that Mr. MacDonald had gone to the bank. Our time was limited so we couldn't wait.

Marks Brothers Close Lease on New Chicago Film Theatre

Marks Brothers theatres have closed a lease on the new Harding-Lawrence Theatre at the northwest corner of Harding and Lawrence, Chicago, for twelve years from the date of completion of the building, at an annual rental of $22,000 in addition to 50 per cent. of the net profit, with option for extension of the lease for an additional five-year period at the same terms. The new 1,500-seat structure, with a 42 by 17 foot stage, is being erected for the Harding-Lawrence Theatre Corporation, of which H. A. Schwartz is president and James J. Reddy is secretary, under plans by Architects Gallup and Joy. The term rental exclusive of the percentage of profits totals $391,000 for the seventeen-year term. This makes the third house the Marks circuit have added to their management this year.

The Haymarket Theatre on West Madison street has received a loan of $100,000 on the property for five years at 5½ per cent.

Two new picture theatres are projected for Springfield, Ill. The Midwest Circuit has organized the Lincoln Square Building Corporation, with J. J. Rubens as president and Floyd Brockell as vice-president, and the site selected is on Jefferson at Fifth street. It is reported that the Orpheum circuit also is planning a new house.

Will Hollander, publicity manager of Balaban and Katz, is getting into the real estate business. He has bought the southwest corner of East 55th and University avenue for $87,500, subject to a mortgage of $60,000. Bill bought the property from Edmund J. Stafford, but what he is going to do with it he has not announced as yet. Maybe another house and maybe not.

The Strand at Calloa, Ill., has reopened under the management of the Goodrich Brothers Circuit. The house has been fixed up for an all summer run of pictures.

Manager Charley Ryan of the Milford Theatre of the Lynch circuit is having good success despite the warm weather with a Syncopation Night each Friday night at his house. He books several live numbers besides the regular picture and musical program, and has been able to hold his own despite the heat wave.

Friends of Harry Marks, house manager of the Chicago Theatre of Balaban & Katz since its opening, are extending congratulations on his promotion to supervising manager of all the houses of the circuit. Captain M. A. Knight, assistant manager of the Chicago, will succeed Mr. Marks.

Louis Laemmle, well known exhibitor and brother of Carl Laemmle, has gone abroad with him on a ten week's tour of the Old World.

R. C. Williams has given up his lease on the Puritan Theatre at West Salem, Ill., and will devote his time to other lines of business.

E. S. Harris is remodeling the Princess at Peoria and adding a new organ and a complete projection room equipment. He will open the house about July 1 with a second-run policy.

President Charles Nathan of the Illinois association has returned from New York where he attended the directors' meeting of the national association. Jack Miller represented the Chicago association at the meeting, which they report was well attended.

In the stock selling contest put on by Balaban & Katz among the employes of the various houses, the winners for selling the largest amount of circuit stock to the patrons of the various B. and K. theatres were the Roosevelt Theatre ushers under Manager Laurance Shend. They won a $100 dinner. The boys at the Central Park Theatre under Manager Leslie Turner came in second and were awarded a $50 dinner. The contest stimulated a lot of enthusiasm among the boys and brought out teamwork that is valuable to the circuit in more ways than one.

I. Levine, theatre builder here, has bought the ground at Gravois and Ellenwood avenue in St. Louis and will build a 2,600-seat house there, starting work in the next thirty days, he says. The new house will be of a Roman type of architecture and will be ready for business early next year. His company has several other houses under construction. It will announce plans soon of other houses projected by his organization in this city and nearby places.

The many friends of Bruce Fowler, former managing director of the McVickers Theatre under Paramount, will be glad to hear he has been made general manager of the Paramount theatres at Kansas City, Mo. W. L. Busby, manager of the Empire at Quincy, Ill., has been named treasurer of the Illinois Poster Advertisers.

S. S. Holland has sold his interest in the Liberty, Atlanta, Ill., to O. L. Ogg.

Loop Robberies

Besides his many other worries the manager of the Chicago Loop theatres, especially the movie houses, has to look out that the hold-up men do not get his daily receipts. Witness the hold-up of Manager Rosenblum and his men by three bandits who got away with $5,000 of the Sunday receipts. These payroll hold-up men are pretty slick folks as they generally know the lay of the ground before they tackle the job, and the only failure chalked up against them so far in the Loop was the attempted hold-up of the Randolph Theatre box office. House Manager Bachman was on the job and scared them away. The Roosevelt Theatre robbery a few months ago was never solved. This was pulled off at night right across the street from the main store of Marshall Field & Co. Now and then a neighborhood house gets it, as witness the recent robberies at the Peoples and Bryn Mawr theatres.

Other worries of the Loop manager are the sneak thief and pickpockets who work in the popular houses. The other night a woman had to borrow 25 cents from the box office of a theatre to get home, as the pickpocket had cleaned her purse out while she was in the aisle with the crowd to get a better seat. The theatre folks may have to do like the outlying bankers here—organize a patrol to supplement the police and house employes' efforts to thwart these lawbreakers.

Omaha

Universal will build a new picture theatre in Omaha on Farnam street between Sixteenth and Seventeenth streets. E. H. Goldstein, treasurer of Universal, made the announcement. The location is to be just west of the seventeen-story First National Bank Building, and is on one of the most valuable pieces of property in the city, not to exceed fifty feet from the most valuable spot in the city, which is Sixteenth and Farnam streets.

A. H. Blank is considering three different sites in Omaha for a new picture house here. He already has the Strand and Rialto, both big, conspicuous first-run houses. Rumors are out that Warner Brothers also may build a first-run house here soon. About a year ago it was pretty definitely stated that Omaha was in the list of towns they were considering for a string of theatres.

The Pastime Theatre at Logan, Ia., had a booth fire recently which destroyed a film to be shown the next night. R. E. Brown, who operates the house, had to rush to Omaha to get a film for the following night. He said the cause of the fire was a bad print which clogged in the machine. He has made temporary repairs in the booth and will operate there until his fine new theatre at Logan is completed, which is expected to be about July 1.

H. M. McGaffin has bought the Viking Theatre at Polk, Neb., from M. Thompson.

Three new houses are planned for St. Louis. George Skouras will build a $100,000 theatre at Southwest and Midwest avenue. Plans have been prepared by Preston J. Bradshaw. Reubin Levine of R. Levine & Company, Chicago, has purchased a 647-foot site on Gravois avenue and plans to erect a 2,500-seat theatre there. The building, which will be 147 by 213 feet and three stories high, will contain seven stores and forty apartments. F. Hoff, 6602 Hoffman avenue, is building a theatre and store building at 3239 Ivanhoe avenue to cost $45,000. It will be two stories, 46 by 125 feet.

Henry Halloway, owner-manager of the Gem Theatre, St. John's, Mo., is a newspaper editor on the side. He has been conducting the Weekly Gem and the past week took over the Overland-St. John's Record and will merge the papers.

Contracts have been let for the remodeling of the West Main Street Theatre, Paragould, Ark. The improvements will cost $75,000.

Charles Byrnes has assumed his duties as director general of Phil Cohn's Avenue and Lyric theatres in East St. Louis, Ill. Frank Nelson will continue as house manager at the Avenue. Ray Netermeir, who sold fillum for Universal and F. B. O., now is managing the Waverly Theatre, East St. Louis, succeeding Charles Byrnes.

St. Louis friends of Ben Prince, formerly manager of the Washington Square Theatre, Quincy, Ill., were grieved to learn that he took his own life at Memphis, Tenn., on June 15. He had been in ill health in recent months as a result of being gassed in the World War.

Bill Beynon, Divernon, Ill., exhibitor, has lost his famous German police dog. The animal was strangled to death when his collar caught on a strand of bobbed wire as he was jumping over a fence. It was valued at $1,500. Tom McKean of F. B. O. has one of its pups, while others are owned by Eddie Collins and Ray Schalk of the Chicago White Sox.

Bob Clarke of the Opera House, Effingham, Ill., recently underwent an operation for gall stones.

Thursday, June 18, Compton Airdome, $10 cash and 5,000 tickets taken. In each case three young men participated. The police have arrested one suspect in the Arcade robbery. All the robberies occurred while shows were in progress.

C. E. Lilly came to town and bought an organ for his Star Theatre, Hannibal.

Charley Goldman has given up the Opera House at Dupo, Ill. Mr. and Mrs. Hall are again in charge.

The Lyric, Center, Mo., has been taken over by L. K. Myers.

Houses reported closed are American, Cambria, Ill.; Gem, Leachville, Ark., and Home, Donnellson, Ill.

Callers of the week were: C. C. Jones, Cambria, Ill.; Ray Miller, Mexico, Mo.; C. E. Lilly, Hannibal, Mo.; S. E. Brady, Cape Girardeau, Mo.; John Pratt, Fulton, Mo.; Mrs. Paul, Carlinville, Ill., and Oscar Wesley, Gillespie, Ill.

Newman Tells Story of His Life

As a farewell tribute to Frank L. Newman, Kansas City's premier exhibitor, who leaves for Los Angeles to manage three theatres for Paramount, having disposed of his Newman and Royal Theatres in Kansas City to Paramount, the Kansas City Star published a column story of his life which rivals the most fanciful fiction.

From working all night in an iron foundry for $1.75 a day to $1,000 a week salary and $500,000 laid away as a nest egg—those are the two extremes of Mr. Newman's career thus far. After saving diligently in a small ready-to-wear establishment which he later founded, Mr. Newman eleven years ago opened the Royal Theatre in Kansas City, but the house didn't come without a fight, as there was an injunction against having a theatre in the downtown block. Last year's proceeds of the house netted nearly $70,000, according to Mr. Newman. Then came the Newman Theatre six years ago, which is by far the most elaborate theatre in Kansas City. The lowest profits for any of the six years has been $54,000, Mr. Newman said.

"I haven't done anything spectacular or unusual," Mr. Newman said modestly. "I am doing now at 40 what a lot of men do when they are older, cashing in on what I have, seeing that there is something laid away and enough to take care of my family as well."

The biggest tribute received thus far in life, Mr. Newman said, was when the employes of the theatre came to him and begged him to take them half way across the continent so that they might continue working for him.

"I don't desire a yacht or many luxuries," Mr. Newman said. "I desire to live simply and well, with as many games of golf for recreation as possible."

Although the deal whereby Paramount will purchase the Newman and Royal theatres is not yet closed, according to Mr. Newman, Paramount is paying $900,000 for the two houses. Since Mr. Newman owns the controlling stock in both theatres, his proceeds from the sale will be more than $500,000.

Cincinnati

Joseph Neiser, who operates two houses at London, Ohio, is proving himself a Good Samaritan. At least once a month Neiser invites some fifty children from the local Children's Home to be his guests at a suitable juvenile picture, and occasionally plays host to the older wards of the county Home for the Aged, as also the County Infirmary, at which time he arranges a special exhibiton for their particular benefit.

The new 1200-seat house being built by A. G. Constant at Steubenville, Ohio, and scheduled to open on Labor Day, will be known as the Capitol. It will be elaborate throughout.

Carl Lertzman, Cleveland, Ohio, is planning a new theatre on West 35th street. At Columbus, Ohio, the Pythian Temple Society will erect a lodge, theatre and office building at corner of Mt. Vernon and Talmadge streets at an estimated cost of $150,000.

Charles O. Hoffman, Columbus, Ohio, claiming to own 66 shares of stock and $2,000 worth of bonds in the Majestic Theatre Co., Sidney, Ohio, upon which the interest has not been paid, recently asked for a receivership for the company. Robert E. Marshall has accordingly been appointed and assumed charge of the house. A detailed report of the company's affairs is not yet available, but it is understood that the liabilities will reach well over $100,000.

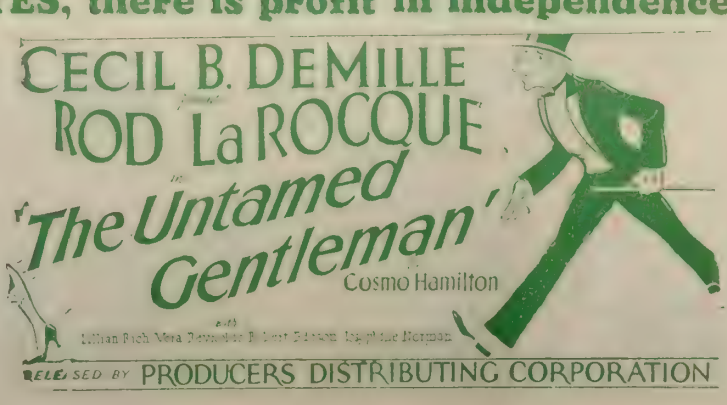
Kansas City

Operating only the Murray Theatre, small suburban house, three years ago, Jay Means, vice-president of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri, soon will begin construction on his third theatre, to be built between Thirty-ninth and Fortieth streets on Prospect avenue. The second theatre to be acquired by Mr. Means was the Prospect Theatre, Twenty-sixth street and Prospect avenue.

With the night life of Kansas City rapidly moving south, there are persistent rumors afloat that Metro-Goldwyn and Werner Brothers are contemplating the erection in the near future of large suburban first-run theatres. Werner Brothers are known to be negotiating for three sites.

"Rube" Melcher has taken over the management of the Waldo Theatre, suburban house of Kansas City. "Rube" formerly was city salesman for Midwest Film Distributors, Inc., at Kansas City. The Sedalia Theatre, Sedalia, Mo., owned by Jack Truitt, will be managed by George Planck.

Earl Cunningham, Paramount exploiteer, and the Burford Theatre management of Arkansas City, Kas., could have not made a more complete job of it than was done last week. At a meeting of all the civic clubs and chamber of commerce of the town, it was decided to stage an "Old Home Week" in conjunction with the showing of the picture, September 29 and 30 and October 1 and 2.



Canada

Howard Conover, manager of the Imperial Theatre, Montreal, recently found it necessary to make a public announcement that he did not have anything to do with the production of a local moving picture which is to show comparisons between Montreal today and what it was 100 years ago. He learned, he says, that the film promoter had been using the name of the Imperial Theatre to secure co-operation and cash advancements for the making of the picture.

"The Imperial Theatre merely contracted to pay the promoter $100 for the privilege of running such a film if, after its completion, it proved to be satisfactory and acceptable, but undertook no other responsibility or sponsorship," declared Mr. Conover.

Hagersville, Ontario, lost its picture theatre on June 14 when the structure was completely destroyed by fire from unknown cause. There was no one in the theatre when the outbreak occurred. The owner was Howard Hager, who intends to rebuild. The loss entailed in the burning of the theatre and adjoining property was estimated at $200,000. The house was known as the Regal.

Manager Charles A. Meade, manager of the Lyceum Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, has shown real aggressiveness in going after summer business. First making sure of the cooling system of the theatre, Manager Meade announced a healthy list of first-rate bookings for the hot weather and then coupled everything up with effective advertising.

Manager H. Walmsley of the College Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, a handsome suburban house, adopted a special policy for the summer whereby programs were changed three times weekly instead of weekly as before. Mr. Walmsley only recently took over the management of the College Theatre, going to Winnipeg from Vancouver, B. C.

Donat Paquin, proprietor of the two theatres in Hull, Quebec, took an important part in the jubilee celebration which was held in Hull on June 14 to 16 to commemorate the 125th Anniversary of the founding of the city. Mr. Paquin is a member of the Hull Rotary Club and is active in community enterprises generally. His theatres are the Laurier and Eden theatres.

A. H. Coplan, proprietor of the Princess Theatre, Rideau street, Ottawa, had another fire scare on June 16 when flames were discovered in the roof of the structure shortly after midnight, the apparent cause being defective electric wiring. Fortunately little damage was done and no loss was sustained by the theatre proper.

Joseph M. Franklin, manager of B. F. Keith's Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, secured some honest-to-goodness publicity in the Ottawa Journal when he gave an interview on a community topic on June 17, the subject being the desirability of securing motor tourists.

Denver

Greater Movie Season Campaign is well on its way in Denver. Harry Long, manager of the America Theatre, has been elected general manager of the campaign. This will be primarily one of publicity rather than advertising, and if plans are carried out as arranged a very successful season will result.

James Pace, owner and operator of the Pace Theatre, Chadron, Neb., arrived in the city for a business visit with all exchanges. He is a veteran exhibitor of the Nebraska territory.

James Lynch, owner and operator of the American and Empress theatres at Laramie, Wyo., has returned home after a visit with his Denver film exchange friends.

W. P. Perry, operating the Midway Theatre at Burlington, suddenly appeared in Film Row a few days ago. Perry is buying service for the coming season. He reports a very bright outlook on business conditions in his part of the state.

A. J. Talbot, manager of the Colorado Theatre, has returned from Pueblo after a hurried business trip to one of his circuit of theatres.

Good business was enjoyed by all Curtis street theatres the latter part of this week because of the state reunion of the B. P. O. Elks of Colorado.. The downtown streets were colorfully decorated, and approximately 10,000 Elks helped to swell the theatre attendance in all houses. The theatres in turn extended every effort to make the convention a success.

The new Mission Theatre at 1465 South Pearl street has had its grand opening. It is one of the most beautiful ever erected among the suburban houses of Denver, and from all indications it will be one of the most popular suburban theatres. This theatre was built by Fred P. Brown, former manager of Metro-Goldwyn, and J. B. Michiletti, an old-time suburban operator, having owned and managed the Pearl and Folly theatres of this city. The house seats 700. The design is of a mission effect throughout. The new theatre is welcomed in its neighborhood as it has not only beautified but increased the value of surrounding properties.

Milwaukee

At the Milwaukee Theatre, Manager George Fischer allows the ushers' staff a generous vacation every summer. Three of the boys, Ray Kress, Arnold Kaliebe and Bill Ludwig, thought themselves flushed with money, so they pooled their savings and bought a second-hand Ford.

The boys left for a two-week motor trip through Wisconsin to Yellowstone Park. A working schedule has been mapped out whereby each one will have certain duties to perform. The boys plan to camp out and cook their own meals.

San Francisco

Arthur F. Rousseau, president of the Marian Realty Company, which owns property in the vicinity of Eighth and Market streets, San Francisco, and which has erected many buildings in this neighborhood during the past three years, has announced plans for the erection of a picture theatre which has been leased to Warner Bros. for fifty years. The theatre will have a frontage of 205 feet on Market street and 200 feet on Eighth street and will be the largest west of Chicago, with 2,700 seats on the main floor and 1,300 in the balcony. The erection of the theatre means that the two new buildings occupied by a large clothing store will be demolished. Immediately following the beginning of work on the theatre construction work will be commenced on a four-story garage at Mission and Eighth streets to serve patrons of the house. The new theatre will face the Civic Center and the house already under construction for Alexander Pantages.

The Californio Theatre, San Francisco, was the scene of an unusual mid-night show following the regular performances on the evening of June 12, the affair being for the benefit of the endowment fund of the American Legion. The details of the big show, which packed the house, were arranged by Nat Holt and Charles Kurtzman of this theatre, while Henry Duffy of the President and Alcazar theatres was master of ceremonies, with Max Dolin in charge of the acts.

Plans for a theatre on Polk street, north of Green, to be built by T. & D. Junior Enterprises, Inc., have been announced. The theatre will occupy a lot 100 by 150 feet and will seat 1,750. It will follow Moorish lines, with minaret towers and a mosque-dome interior. The organ will be located in the ceiling.

The Varsity Theatre at Davis, Cal., which has been closed for a time, was opened the third week in June.

Frank Vesley, who has charge of the American Theatre, San Jose, Cal., for the National Theatres Syndicate, was a recent visitor at the home office at San Francisco. He fills the role of utility manager for the organization and has served at Porterville, Modesto and other places.

VANITY'S PRICE. (6,124 feet). Star, William Hughes. Many favorable comments on this one. Some say it's extra good. Sure is a fine picture. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Farmers, town of 185. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (150 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

WHITE FANG. (5,600 feet). Star cast. This picture made a big hit. Strongheart does great work. This picture did a big business and I made money. Give me more like this one. R. B. Christian, Byers Theatre, Excelsior Springs, Missouri.

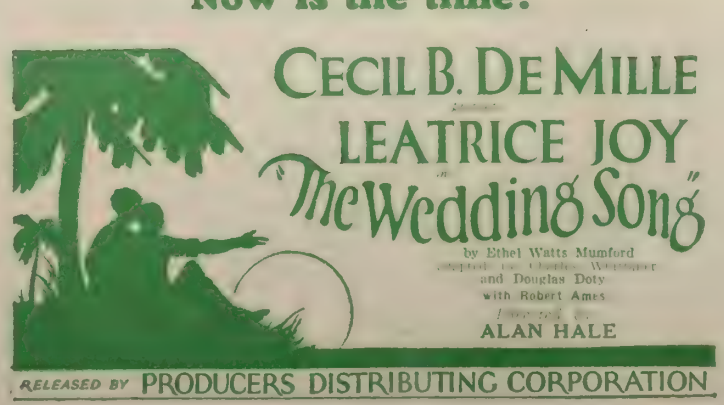
WHITE SIN. Star, Madge Bellamy. Another F. B. O. picture that made good for me. This is a mighty fine picture and should please any audience. Tone good. Farming class, town of 800. Admission 15-25. A. B. McCullough, Community Theatre (250 seats), Neosho Falls, Kansas.

First National

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (9,759 ft.). Star cast. Excellent offering. Pleased everybody. Sure this special would go anywhere in the United States. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred percent. Town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (9,759 ft.). Star, cast, George Billings. We had a misout on the booking some weeks past and played it on Saturday night after arrival to light business. We were given a return date and last night we took in ten dollars and five cents on this return showing. Fine tone. Sunday, yes. Extra good audience appeal. Farming class town of 1,021. Admission 10-25-30. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre (240 seats), Ruleville, Mississippi.

Now is the time!



ANNA CHRISTIE. (7,631 ft.). Star, Blanche Sweet. This was a disappointment. Ince don't usually make 'em this poor. Too low brow, long, overdrawn and too much drink, cigarettes, and fights. Star does well but actors in cast get on your nerves. Tone, poor. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, twenty-five percent. Good class town of 800. Admission 20-30. C. S. Chapman, Belvidere Theatre (300 seats), Grove Hill, Alabama.

BLACK OXEN. (7,837 ft.). Star, Corinne Griffith. You'd better look out and not step on this too hard. I bought this for a special and on strength of Corinne Griffith and Conway Tearle being in the cast but the ending ends awful and I cannot hand the story anything either. Raised admission and crowd came out very, very disappointed. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, fifteen percent. Good class town of 800. Admission 20-30. C. S. Chapman, Belvidere Theatre (300 seats), Grove Hill, Alabama.

CIRCUS DAYS. (6,000 ft.). Star, Jackie Coogan. Ran this at program prices and it pleased everyone. Jackie's best picture to date. Good class town of 800. Admission 20-30. C. S. Chapman, Belvidere Theatre (300 seats), Grove Hill, Alabama.

DECLASSE. (7,889 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. Just a picture. No drawing power and not very satisfying. Guess the title was too highbrow for the common people; at least they did not fall for it here. Griffith did not seem to be enthused in her part, and whole story rather wishy-washy. Mixed class, town of 4,000. Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

HER NIGHT OF ROMANCE. (7,211 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. Good comedy drama that was a little bit too long drawn out. Six reels would have put this over much better as the action would have been swifter. However, as only a few walked out on this one, we must class it as fair entertainment in a small town like this. Tone fair. Sunday, possible. Special, no. Fair appeal. General class, town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

HIS SUPREME MOMENT. (6,565 feet). Star cast. Picture opens up like a world beater but falls to commonplace pace and drags to the end; did not please very much, although no complaints; did not draw. Mixed class, town of 4,000. Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

IN HOLLYWOOD WITH POTASH AND PERLMUTTER. (6,750 feet). Star, Alexander Carr. Very good comedy drama. Tone good. Sunday, yes. Just above program schedule. Good appeal. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,649. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

PAINTED PEOPLE. (5,700 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Mighty fine picture. Several comments. Should go good in any theatre. Good tone. Farming class town of 800. Admission 15-25. A. B. McCullough, Community Theatre (250 seats), Neosho Falls, Kansas.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

You'll all be glad to hear that Carl Anglemire, who has reported with sincerity and constancy during the years of Straight From the Shoulder's existence, and who was introduced to you as projectionist-booker of the "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania, has been made Manager of that theatre.

The boy has the stick-to-it-and-win quality that takes a fellow ahead.

That's the spirit that has dominated Straight From the Shoulder, and in the same spirit that you folks have taken pride in the integrity of your dependable tip senders, we take pride in hearing of Carl's step ahead.

Everybody wishes him luck. Let's all boost for him. He deserves success.

And we always like to hear from you folks when you're going ahead—just as much as we like to try to help if it's possible when you're up against it.

VAN.

PERFECT FLAPPER. (7 reels). Star, Colleen Moore. Good picture, but think the younger bunch got wind that gives their conduct a swift kick and stayed away. Every boy and girl from six to sixty should see it. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, one hundred per cent. All classes town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

SEA HAWK. (12,045 feet). Star cast. Paid a big price and advertised it heavily but couldn't get them to come out. Many who saw it said they didn't like it and several walked out. It just naturally didn't appeal to my patrons. Personally I thought it a wonderful production. If I had it to do over would charge 15-25 cents instead of 25-50 and believe I would come out better. General class town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

SKIN DEEP. Star, Milton Sills. This is a story of a series of thrilling scenes that Milton Sills knows so well how to make real on the screen. An ex-service man from the underworld displays great bravery in the front line trenches and tries to make good on his return. Hounded by the police he is railroaded into prison but in the end aids the district attorney to clean up the political crooks and weds the daughter, Florence Vidor, of the man who befriended him. This picture has punch and should be a cleanup. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerrville, Texas.

SON OF THE SAHARA. (8 reels). Star, Bert Lytell. Interesting from start to finish and well produced. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Conservative class city of 23,000. Admission twenty-five cents. D. J. Adams, Auditorium Theatre, (1,000 seats), Concord, New Hampshire.

Fox

BLIZZARD. (5,800 feet). Star cast. This stood up better than most of Fox specials, while this is not what you can call a special, but good average. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Small town class town of 450. Admission 10-30. A. F. Thomas, Pastime Theatre. Almyra, Arkansas.

DANTE'S INFERNO. (5,680 feet). Star cast. Fair attendance and not much comment either way. Personally considered the picture good, but hardly the extra special which it is shouted to be. Special rent but not special attendance. Tone, okay. Sunday, I think so. Fair appeal. Farming class town of 1,021. Admission 10-25-30. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre (240 seats), Ruleville, Mississippi.

DICK TURPIN. (5,224 feet). Star, Tom Mix. An attempt to get Mix out of westerns and make him fit into bigger parts. Went over okay because of Mix being the star, but did not compare with "Last of the Duanes." Keep Mix in westerns. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, eighty per cent. All classes city of 230,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre, Birmingham, Alabama.

DRAG HARLAN. Star, Bill Farnum. A good picture with lots of action of a two gun man of the old West. Good for roughnecks, too much killing. No tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, fifty per cent. Town of 2,800. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

GENTLE JULIA. (5,837 feet). Star, Bessie Love. Too gentle. Paid for a special, but unfortunately ran as a program. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Weak appeal. Small town class town of 450. Admission 10-30-35. A. F. Thomas, Pastime Theatre, Almyra, Arkansas.

HEARTS OF OAK. (5,326 feet). Star, Hobart Bosworth. An extra good drama of the sea and sea folks. Bosworth is always good. Tone, okay. Special, no. Appeal, okay. All classes in small town. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

Hal Roach's well known Spat Family in a scene from the comedy, "The Royal Four-Flusher," which is on Pathe's list

IT IS THE LAW. (6,000 feet). Star cast. This is a Fox special but not worth the price they charged for it. To me nothing more than a good program offering. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Poor appeal. All classes in big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

LAST OF THE DUANES. (6,842 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Everything that a picture should be. Author fine; story good, and the star, Tom Mix is still the dean of all western actors. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Working class town of 3,500. Admission 15-30, 20-40. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

NO MOTHER TO GUIDE HER. (7 reels). Star cast. Title misleading. Another so-called special. Audience disappointed. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Small town class town of 450. Admission 10-30-35. A. F. Thomas, Pastime Theatre, Almyra, Arkansas.

ST. ELMO. (6 reels). Star, John Gilbert. A good dramatic attraction that pulled some extra business for us. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Town and rural class town of 1,028. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

SIX CYLINDER LOVE. (7 reels). Star, Ernest Truex. This was accepted here as an entertaining picture. It could hardly be called a special. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, fifty per cent. Small town class town of 450. Admission 10-30-35. A. F. Thomas, Pastime Theatre, Almyra, Arkansas.

TEMPLE OF VENUS. (8 reels). Star cast. Rotten. Too much "nude" stuff. Better lay off this if in small town. Tone, bad. Sunday, no. Special, no. No appeal. Small town class town of 450. Admission 10-30. A. F. Thomas, Pastime Theatre, Almyra, Arkansas.

TRAIL RIDER. (4,752 feet). Star, Buck Jones. This is one of the best western features Jones ever made and where he is popular it will get by as a good western. Tone, okay. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Industrial class town of 7,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (750 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

WINNER TAKE ALL. (5,949 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Best Jones I've had for a long time. Very suitable for theatres whose patrons like lots of action. Half the film taken up with prize fights, but how Buck does fight. Has an excellent plot and supporting cast. Tone, all right. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Mixed class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

WOLVES OF THE NIGHT. Star, William Farnum. This picture holds you from beginning to end. Farnum is supreme. A wonderful picture for the boys. Applause continuously. Audience enjoyed every moment. MISS BLUEBEARD. Star, Bebe Daniels. A comedy with Bebe Daniels starring. Enuf said. There are two kinds of comedies, raw and rare, slap-stick and snappy. This one is of the hot house variety classy with brilliant Bebe and Robert Frazer giving us real art in humor, and the gifted comedian Raymond Griffith almost running away with the picture. Only one man left the show and he changed his mind and turned back. If you want to please your folks get "Miss Bluebeard" and her many husbands. It's a scream. City and country class town of 3,000. Appeal ninety per cent. Farmers town of 185. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (170 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

PIED PIPER MALONE. (7,264 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. A mighty fine clean type of picture that did fine at the box office. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety-nine per cent. Town and rural class town of 1,028. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre, Vermont, Illinois.

SALOME OF THE TENEMENTS. (7,017 feet). Star cast. Picture was not liked. Business bad. I believe the race of the characters was the cause. Special, no. No appeal. All classes in town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

SIDE SHOW OF LIFE. (6,511 feet). Star, Ernest Torrence. A very poor picture. Had lots to walk out before it was over. This is the kind that puts Paramount down with all others. Tone, none. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, twenty per cent. College class town of 2,145. Admission 10-25. R. X. Williams, Jr., Lyric Theatre (345 seats), Oxford, Mississippi.

TONGUES OF FLAME. (6,763 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Thomas Meighan again in his usual hero stuff. Not as good as most of his plays, but the story is interesting. War heroics, with our Tom going over the top with a company of Indian buddies and on his return aiding the Red Men in a fight against unscrupulous capitalists getting hold of their property knowing that there is oil on the reservation. Bessie Love comes near grabbing the honors in the role of the little Indian school teacher. It's a good bet for it will please all comers. City and country class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerrville, Texas.

TOP OF THE WORLD. (7,167 feet). Star, James Kirkwood. This is a story of Africa. Somewhat similar to "Ponjola." It pleased all who saw it but did not have the drawing power of the other. Tone, okay. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes in town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

WAGES OF VIRTUE. (7,093 feet. Star, Gloria Swanson. A good heavy drama with a special cast. Situations that require serious acting and continued saucy humor furnished by Gloria makes a picture my patrons thought good. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, ninety per cent. General class city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

ZAZA. (7,076 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. This was a real disappointment. First time this star ever flopped here but she was a decided flop in this. Her part ruins her because we always like her best in a real love picture. She had too much temper, fought, kicked and bossed around too much. Tone, none. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, twenty-five per cent. Good class town of 800. Admission 20-30. C. S. Chapman, Belvidere Theatre (300 seats), Grove Hill, Alabama.

Pathe

WAY OF MAN. (9,000 feet). Star, Allene Ray. Ran this picture one show and print was in such terrible condition was compelled to close house for the day therefore cannot make any report on this subject. No appeal. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

CHARLEY'S AUNT. (7,243 feet). Star, Syd Chaplin. A farce comedy that's a winner anyway you look at it. Real honest-to-goodness comedy fast and furious that will positively make even the crabs part their thin lips in hearty guffaws. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. General class city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Make your lobby invitingly cool-looking.
Let folks know the house is cool inside.
Get the riders riding to your theatre.
Pick features that have a strong hot-weather pull.
Watch your short subjects; pick them for quality — laughs, news interest, serial suspense— and tell the world they're good!
AND SEND TIPS FOR OTHERS!

CHARLEY'S AUNT. (7,245 feet). Star cast. Have five hundred seats and only wish I had had 2,500 when I played this picture. Greatest picture played in long time. Book it twice as long as you think you can play it. William Dable, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pennsylvania.

CHARLEY'S AUNT. (7,245 feet). Star, Syd Chaplin. This is a knockout, and, boys, do not be afraid of this one. Just warn your patrons that you will not be responsible for split sides, etc. Chock full of real, honest-to-goodness funny comedy. Ed. Malhiot, Monarch Theatre, Medicine Hat, Alberta, Canada.

FLAMING FORTIES. (5,770 feet). Star, Harry Carey. This is Bret Harte's famous story "Tennessee's Partner" and that fact makes it an extra good drawing card. The picture pleased. Tone, okay. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes in town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

LET WOMEN ALONE. Star cast. Not worth the express we paid on it to us. Farming class town of 1,021. Admission 10-25-30. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre (240 seats), Ruleville, Mississippi.

NIGHT HAWK. (5,115 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Good program picture. Fair western makes a good Saturday night show for small town. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Farmers town of 412. Admission 10-25. John C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

WHAT SHALL I DO. (8,000 feet). Star, Dorothy Mackaill. This was very good picture. I would advise anyone to book it as it should please most anyone. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good audience appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

United Artists

THIEF OF BAGDAD. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. Had my fingers crossed from the time I contracted this and my intuition was correct. Aimed too much for the highbrows and had no appeal for the common classes. Lost a plenty on the engagement, truly a wonderful picture from an artistic standpoint, but art does not ring the bell at my box office. Mixed class town of 4,000. Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

Universal

BURNING TRAIL. Star, William Desmond. This is the worst Desmond that I have ever run. But he goes for me. Have seen him in lot better pictures. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. Working class city of 13,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (160 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

BURNING TRAIL. Star, William Desmond. William Desmond is a lead bud in this town and I can't much blame them for not coming out. His pictures are entirely too tame for westerns. Am glad I am about through with him. All classes town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

RECKLESS AGE. (6,954 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. A fairly good picture. Poor attendance. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Just a little above program picture. Fair appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,649. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

RIDERS UP. (4,904 feet). Star cast. Good program picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

ROARING ADVENTURE. Star, Jack Hoxie. Will please your western fans. General class town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

SADDLE HAWK. Star, Hoot Gibson. A corking good western with lots of action. Not quite the picture that "Riding Kid From Powder River" was, but a mighty good western. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. All classes city of 230,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

Always glad to get tips on the late releases, folks.

Whenever you run a late picture, send in the tip right away.

The older films are fine to get tips on, too—of course!

But I'd like to get all the late runs that you can send, as well.

THANKS FOR THE BLANKS —FILLED!

SECRETS OF THE NIGHT. Star, James Kirkwood. Excitement, nerves, suspense and laughter surround and gallop through this mystery picture from tsart to finish in rapid succession taking the audience along with it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. General class city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

SIGNAL TOWER. (6,714 feet). Star, Virginia Valli. Very good railroad story. Plenty of action. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

TORNADO. (6,576 feet). Star, House Peters. A sensational and spectacular picture which had no appeal for local people at all. Receipts were less than film rental. Guess the fake storms have been overworked until people are tired. Farming class town of 1,021. Admission 10-25-30. H. S. Stansel, Ruleville Theatre (240 seats), Ruleville, Mississippi.

TORNADO. (6,576 feet). Star, House Peters. I have never run many House Peters pictures, but if they are all like this one, why I can use more of them. The best picture of its kind I ever seen. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. Working class city of 13,500. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (168 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

TURMOIL. (7 reels). Star cast. This is a good picture but for some reason Universal does not go here. I think the title is weak. Did fair business for me. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Better class city of 12,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. Ed. Malhiot, Monarch Theatre (550 seats), Medicine Hat, Alberta, Canada.

Vitagraph

BAREE, SON OF KAZAN. Star, Anita Stewart. Played this to stiffest Spring opposition of the year, tent show and high school class play and it drew fine. Picture as near one hundred per cent satisfaction as anything of late. Far better and drew better than the old "Kazan" of years ago. It is sure a fitting requiem to Vitagraph's closing days. Grab it by all means. Mixed class town of 4,000. Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

BEHOLD THIS WOMAN. (6,425 feet). Star, Irene Rich. I don't like to knock this as some of the acting was fine but it was rather suggestive in spots, in fact lots of them. It may be all right in places and in fact I did not hear any kicks but just the same I would have been just as well satisfied if I had not run it. No tone. Sunday, no. Sepcial, yes. Fair appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

CODE OF THE WILDERNESS. (7,000 feet). Star cast. A real western picture. A picture that runs along nice and smooth and liked by everyone. They went out of their way to tell me how good it was. Tone good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Audience appeal, ninety per cent. All classes, town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

ETERNAL STRUGGLE. Star, Earle Williams. A good picture but no story to it. Draw mixed class, town of 800. Admission 15-25. Jerry Wertin, Winter Theatre (250 seats), Albany, Minnesota.

GREATER THAN MARRIAGE. Star cast. Proved to be an unusually good and pleasing production. Fair appeal. Small town class, town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

PIONEER TRAILS. (6,920 feet). Star cast. A great picture. Many of our patrons said it was better than the "Covered Wagon," had more action all the way through. Appeal, ninety per cent. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (264 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

REDEEMING SIN. (6,227 feet). Star Nazimova. Very good Paris underworld picture. Acting is fine. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fair appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre, (175 seats), Galt, California.

TIDES OF PASSION. (6,279 feet). Star, Mae Marsh. Fair picture of the program type. Just average, that's all. A picture showing the worse side of the British soldier. This one had a wife in every port, and he does a lot of damage; however, there is a moral, "the woman pays." Tone, no. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, fifty per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

Warner Bros.

CONDUCTOR 1492. (6,500 feet). Star, Johnny Hines. A very good picture from all angles, can stand one week's run anywhere. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Town of 2,800. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

DADDIES. (6,800 feet). Star cast. An excellent comedy drama that kept the audience in a good humor from start to finish. However, Miss Marsh getting too old to play 18 year old girl parts. Claude Gillingwater easily took the honors in this picture. He can't be beat when it comes to character parts. This one pleased kids as well as adults. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Strong appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

FIND YOUR MAN. (7,300 feet). Star, Rin Tin Tin (dog). A remarkable picture. Interesting at all times. The dog has many thrilling scenes. Many of his moves are real acting. Audience enjoyed all of it. The dog is almost human. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Working class city of 100,000. Admission 10-15-30. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

Comedies

BIG RED RIDING HOOD. (Pathe). Star, Charles Chase. Another good one reel comedy of this star. Good appeal. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

FLYING FINANCE. (Educational). Sub for another comedy. Print looked old and rainy but it's some comedy. The wind storm near the end was a riot and they laughed all right. Neighborhood class city of 15,000. Admission 10-15. Ulysses Ponsant, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Waterville, Maine.

GO EASY. (Educational). Star, Cliff Bowes. Only a one reeler but it was fairly good. Tone, okay, Sunday, yes. Fair appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

MOTOR MAD. (Educational). Star, Lige Conley. The fellow who wrote the sub-titles tried to be funny and almost ruined the action in the picture which was a cyclone from start to finish. Lige is always greeted with laughter by the fans and this one seemed to please them, but let's have the fun in the pictures, not in the titles, that is, in slapstick comedies. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Fair appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

OVER THE FENCE. (Educational). One of the Educational Juvenile comedies which give a fair amount of laughter but they could be better. Print rotten. It ran through the machine like a machine gun. All classes town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

RACE. (Fox). Another Van Bibber story and very good. If you haven't run any as yet get them but start at No. 1, "The Hunt," No. 2, "The Fight," and this is No. 3. Very good. All classes town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

ROUGHEST AFRICA. (Mack Sennett). Star, Stan Laurel. If Mack Sennett doesn't mend his ways he will soon be requested by all exhibitors to do as Ben Turpin has done. Retire. His name won't draw much longer. No appeal. All classes town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

SPOOKS. (Educational). Star, Lige Conley. This one is fair but not up to standard set by previous Mermaids. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

STAY SINGLE. (Educational). Star, Dorothy Devore. A very good comedy. Will hold any show. All classes town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

TAKE YOUR CHOICE. (Educational). Star, Bobby Vernon. Pretty good comedy. Vernon is always good, but he has made better ones than this one. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

TREASURE ISLAND. (Educational). Animal comedies have lost their pull. Lay off. Small class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre, Greenfield, Tennessee.

VAN BIBBER SERIES. (Fox). Star, Earle Foxe. Very good and two reel subjects adopted from famous Richard Harding Davis stories. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Good appeal. High class. Al Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

WHERE IS MY WANDERING BOY THIS EVENING? (Mack Sennett). Star, Ben Turpin. Think Ben should have retired to take care of his wife about two years sooner. He's lost his power to make people laugh. No appeal. All classes town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

WIDE OPEN. (Educational). Star, Lige Conley. Another real good comedy from Educational. They are all good. I haven't seen a poor one from them yet. Neighborhood class city of 15,000. Admission 10-15. Ulysses Ponsant, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Waterville, Maine.

WILD WAVES. (Educational). Star, Cliff Bowes. Another one reel Cameo that is up to the standard. We are getting these right off the bat and have dandy prints that are clean and clear. Tone, okay. Appeal, good. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

WINTER HAS CAME. (Educational). Star, Dorothy Devore. Poor comedy offering. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

Ever run a weak feature and have a great comedy pull the show out of trouble?
Did you send a tip on it?
It's just as important to consider your bookings on short subjects, advertise them and make capital of them as it is with the big things you run.

BATTLING BREWSTER. (Rayart). No so good. Fair tone. Sunday, okay. Special, no. No appeal. High class patronage. Al. Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

GHOST CITY. (Universal). Star, Pete Morrison. Pete Morrison and Marguerite are introduced as the stars, but owing to the rottenness of the story, direction, etc., no one shines. The poorest serial in years. No appeal. All classes town of 2,517. Admission 10-25. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre (500 seats), DeQueen, Arkansas.

GREAT CIRCUS MYSTERY. (Universal). Star, Joe Bonomo. This serial started off very good and should be a life saver during the very hot weather due to it being a circus serial. Prints new. Sunday, yes. Good appeal. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore. Maryland.

INTO THE NET. (Pathe). Here is as good a police story that I have ever seen or expect to see. Good enough for anybody. Good tone. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. Working class city of 13,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (160 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

INTO THE NET. (Pathe). Exceptionally good ten episode serial. Each episode good. Very interesting story. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Good appeal. High class. Al. Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

RIDDLE RIDER. (Universal). Star, William Desmond. Best serial I ever ran, and Universal doesn't take it all for rental. Brothers, they leave you some bread and butter. Appeal, ninety per cent. C. E. Dellinger, Dorie Theatre (240 seats), Wardensville, West Virginia.

Short Subjects

AESOP'S FABLES. (Pathe). These cartoons are very good but have run them so long it is best to make a change before they get tiresome. Prints always good. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

FITZPATRICK MUSIC MASTER SERIES. (James Fitzpatrick). A series of high class one reel subjects, with perfect music scores, properly presented these subjects deserve feature advertising. Fine tone. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Al. Hamilton, Rialto Theatre, South Norwalk, Connecticut.

FROZEN WATERS. (Educational). Star cast. These Hodge-Podges are fairly good but I believe a comedy is better for our house. Prints are in good shape on these subjects. Tone, okay. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

ACE OF THE CACTUS RANGE. (State Right). Star, Art Mix. When the man said "some Bologna" he didn't apply it to this star but it certainly fits him all over. The story wasn't so bad but like the Universal he-men he doesn't register at all. Punk tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, sixty per cent. Working class town of 3,500. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

ACROSS THE DEAD LINE. (William Steiner). Star, Leo Maloney. A good picture for a western. Maloney is, I think, a comer. The dog "Bullett" peps up the picture. Tone good. Sunday, no. Fine appeal. Small town class town of 450. Admission 10-30. A. F. Thomas, Pastime Theatre, Almyra, Arkansas.

BORDER RIDER. (State Right). Star cast. Nothing much to this, he is too slow and drags the picture around too much, and will take a long time to get going. Will do for anybody that likes just westerns. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair appeal. Working class city of 13,500. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (168 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

BRANDED A THIEF. (State Right). Star, Neal Hart. Fairly good western, but they don't like him here. Not much tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, sixty per cent. Farmers and laborers town of 343. Admission 15-30. J. M. Patterson, Little Gem Theatre (250 seats), Hunter, Arkansas.

CYCLONE BUDDY. (Weiss Brothers). Star, Buddy Roosevelt. Average western feature, not so good as "Rip Roarin' Robert" the one before. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Neighborhood class city of 15,000. Admission 10-15. Ulysses Ponsant, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Waterville, Maine.

FANGS OF WOLFHEART. (State Right). Star cast. The dog in this picture is very good and with the usual good work of the star it made a very good offering for Saturday attendance. Print new. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

FIRE PATROL. (Chadwick). Star cast. A real honest-to-goodness picture but the very hot weather made me lose out on it. Print fair. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theate, Baltimore, Maryland.

GAMBLING FOOL. (State Right). Star, Franklyn Farnum. Fair western should please those who like western pictures. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20-10-30. H. W. Bachelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

KNOCKOUT KID. (Rayart). Star, Jack Perrin. The first of Rayart's whirlwind westerns and it's far above the average Independent western. Nothing to boast over but will please where westerns are liked. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, seventy per cent. All classes city of 230,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre, Birmingham, Alabama.

MAN FROM THE RIO GRANDE. (State Right). Star, Art Mix. Good little western. Tone, just fair. Not suitable for Sunday. Special, no. Appeal, sixty-five per cent. Farmers and laborers town of 343. Admission 15-30. J. M. Patterson, Little Gem Theatre (250 seats), Hunter, Arkansas.

PELL ST. MYSTERY. (Rayart). Star, George Larkin. Another Larkin with plenty of action, and all of the Larkin's have action and lots of it. Tone, good. Special, no. Good appeal. Working class city of 13,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (160 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

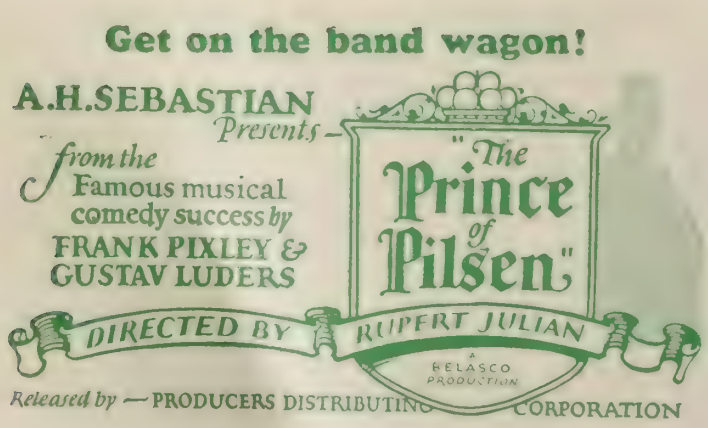
POISON. (State Right). Star, Charles Hutchison. Good picture for Saturday or days that demand action. Hutch is still going strong and seems to be popular with the fans. A picture of bootleg whisky and revenue men. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, sixty per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

SANTA FE PETE. (State Right). Star, Pete Morrison. Pete is getting there all right. In medium sized towns where westerns are mostly always popular, exhibitors should keep an eye on Pete. Tone, all right. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Mixed class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

SUPER SPEED. (State Right). Star, Reed Howes. A fairly good thriller, but the direction lacked punch; not near the thrills as Fox injects into his melodramas. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, seventy per cent. Masses city of 230,000. Admisison 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

TWO FISTED THOMPSON. (State Right). Star, Lester Cuneo. Started off as a biff, bang, western, then swung around to the East and then back again to the "wide open spaces." Good amount of action with lots of comedy, but the fight between Lester and the villain in the last reel would make a slow motion study look like a streak of greased lightning. One of the boys must have been scared of getting hurt. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

VERDICT OF THE DESERT. (Arrow). Star, Neal Hart. Just another Hart western. Not much to it, but the Neal Hart's go over for me. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. Working class city of 13,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (160 seats), Piqua, Ohio.



F. B. O's "Smooth as Satin" Praised by New York Critics

THE ascent of Evelyn Brent into the stellar ranks of stars with a huge fan following, and the popularity of the series of melodramas which F. B. O. is producing starring the beautiful brunette, prompted S. L. Rothafel to book "Smooth as Satin," an underworld melodrama based on the famous stage success by Bayard Veiller, for the Capitol Theatre, commencing Sunday, June 21.

That the underworld melodrama has again come into its own and is here to stay is evidenced by the enthusiastic reception tendered this production by the New York newspaper critics.

The Morning Telegraph says: "'Smooth as Satin' cleverly contrived and a genuinely amusing crook drama, well directed, adeptly put together, with . . . . humor and dexterous twists of plot. It is unquestionably a good audience picture."

The American says: "'Smooth As Satin' is far above the average of crook plays. A most unusual train wreck adds more excitement to the scene of a handcuffed convict struggling with a detective. As the train rushes into a tunnel, an entire mountain collapses on it. There's a lot to enjoy in this picture."

The Evening World says: "There's a very fast-moving melodrama at the Capitol, with plenty of thrills in it. And for the most part its story is. . . enthralling. Evelyn Brent takes the lead in this picture and puts over her crook character in great shape. She is at all times convincing and manages to hold the sympathetic interest of the audience. There is a thrilling wreck when a whole hillside tumbles into the tunnel it is traversing. Feature is breath-taking. Movie fans who like their melodrama will have a great time watching 'Smooth As Satin.' And there's a double treat for admirers of Evelyn Brent."

Western Critics Endorse Schulberg's "The Boomerang"

DAVID BELASCO'S nationally famous comedy drama, "The Boomerang," transferred to the screen by Gasnier as B. P. Schulberg Production was the object of praise from the Los Angeles newspaper reviewers at its premier in that city at the Criterion Theatre last week. Anita Stewart, Bert Lytell and Donald Keith were especially lauded.

The Los Angeles Times said: "Bert Lytell and Anita Stewart do the best work of their two careers. Donald Keith holds great promise in the juvenile role."

The Los Angeles Examiner said: "Many of the episodes are highly amusing. With Bert Lytell and Anita Stewart in the leading roles the picture is well acted and the romance attractive."

The Los Angeles Journal said: "The sparkle and pep of this scintilating comedy are admirably sustained by the cast. New frills and clever situations are added in the adaptation."

The Los Angeles Record said: Bert Lytell as the doctor does excellently in a light part. Anita Stewart prettier than ever, swings from the melodramatic aspect of the play to its comedy with great versatility."

Goulding Adapts "La Boheme"

Edmund Goulding, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer director, whose "Sun Up" has just been completed, has laid aside his megaphone long enough to adapt "La Boheme" to the screen for Lillian Gish.

Goulding, whose story, "The Beautiful City," is now being made in the East as the latest screen vehicle for Dorothy Gish, was induced by Louis B. Mayer and Lillian Gish to postpone his next directorial effort for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer long enough to enable him to handle the adaptation.

"Sun Up," directed by Goulding, has been scheduled for release in September. Picturization of the play, which had a record breaking run on Broadway, includes in the cast Conrad Nagel, Pauline Starke and Lucille LaVerne. Goulding's success as author, playwright and director has made him one of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's most valuable acquisitions. His adaptation of "La Boheme" is expected to materially enhance the success of Lillian Gish's initial vehicle under her new contract.

"Black Cyclone" in West

"Black Cyclone" has won the plaudits of the critics on the Pacific Soast just as it did upon its premiere in New York at the Capitol when Metropolitan reviewers went to great lengths to express their enthusiasm over the work of the wild horse, Rex. This Pathe release, produced by Hal Roach, was given its California premiere at Grauman's Rialto Theatre in Los Angeles on June 6.

New Series for Alberta

Alberta Vaughn has completed her role in "The Pacemakers," and next week she will start work in a new series, entitled "The Adventures of Maisie," based on the magazine stories of Nell Martin. In the new series, which will be supervised by General Manager B. P. Fineman of the F. B. O. Studios, Alberta will portray the role of a beautiful but rather dumb stenographer who gets her youthful employer into scrapes and then adroitly pulls him out. Others in the cast will be Larry Kent, recently signed to a long term contract by F. B. O., Kit Guard and Al Cooke, comedians who have appeared in many of the F. B. O. Short subjects.

"Evolution" Film Nearly Ready

The Urban-Kineto Corporation announces the completion in a week or two of its six-reel film, "Evolution," a scientific film on the evolution theory that is suitable for theatre presentation. A two-reel version of the film is also nearing completion.

The film, originally produced by Raymond L. Ditmars, curator of the New York Zoological Society, and shown before scientific bodies and lay groups, is now being made into a theatre version by Max Fleischer, under the scientific supervision of Edward J. Foyles of the American Museum of Natural History.

Books Red Seal Picture

Red Seal Pictures playing a Fourth-of-July "Inkwell" comedy at three Broadway theatres during the week of the holiday, day and date. The three New York theatres that will play "Ko-Ko Celebrates the Fourth" are the Rivoli, the Strand and the Rialto. Balaban & Katz have booked it for the same week for the Chicago. The Stanley in Philadelphia, Kuntzky's Capitol in Detroit, the Wisconsin in Milwaukee, Shea's Hippodrome in Buffalo, the Newman in Kansas City, the Knickerbocker in Nashville and the State in Jersey City are some of the other leading picture theatres that will present "Ko-Ko" during the week of the Fourth.

Plugging Comedies

Pathe two-reel comedies were featured by four first-run theatres in Dayton, Ohio, the week of May 17. Mack Sennett's "Good Morning Nurse" was at B. F. Keith's State; "Our Gang" was seen at the Strand in "Ask Grandma"; at Lowey's Dayton was "What Price Goofy," and on the Columbia screen "The Fox Hunt."

Four Pictures Started At Warner Bros. Studio

THE Warner Bros. studios in Hollywood are busier than ever now. So far this month five new companies have gone into production, bringing the number now working on product to be released on the 1925-26 schedule up to seven. As eight of the forty specials on this program already have been completed, the company is off to an unprecedentedly good start.

The five photoplays on which work has started recently are "Satan In Sables" from Bradley King's novel, "The Easiest Road," "The Ranger of the Big Pines," "The Love Hour" and "His Majesty Bunker Bean."

Lowell Sherman is starring in "Satan In Sables" with Pauline Garon in the leading woman's role. Richard Batsford as Billee, Frances Raymond as Sophia, Francis J. McDonald as Emile, and Robert Barry as the student. James Flood is directing.

The cast of "The Love Hour" includes Ruth Clifford, Huntly Gordon, Louise Fazenda, Willard Louis, John Roche, Gayne Whitman and Charles Farrell—all stars. The story is by Bess Meredyth. Herman Raymaker, whose production, "Tracked in the Snow Country," is creating a sensation wherever shown, is the director.

The cast for "The Easiest Road," a comedy by Lewis Milestone and Darryl Zanuck, includes Marie Prevost, Clive Brook, John Patrick, Charles Conklin, Claude Gillingwater, and Mr. Milestone is directing.

Matt Moore and Dorothy Devore are the principals in "His Majesty Bunker Bean," the picturization of Harry Leon Wilson's novel. Helen Dunbar will impersonate Mrs. Breede and Gertrude Claire has the role of Grandma. Harry Beaumont is directing.

Kenneth Harlan is featured in the outdoor story, "The Range of the Big Pines," with Helene Costello, Charles Farrell, John Standing, Gayne Whitman, and Kathleen Ca houn.

Program of Enlargement for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

A PROGRAM of enlargement and reconstruction that has entailed an expenditure of more than a million dollars, and which makes the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios the largest in the world, is rapidly being carried to completion in Culver City, Cal.

Almost every department of construction in the studios has been enlarged and new buildings added until there are now more than fifty buildings on the lot. In the last five months six new stages have been built making in all 14 stages with a total of 200,000 square feet of stage space.

Every stage has been equipped with innovations for handling the huge lights by mechanical devices in place of hand labor. Water has been piped into all stages and an additional electric power plant has been established to supply power for the new stage. The additional stages have necessitated increased expenditure on an overwhelming scale for the installation of new, elaborate and complete electrical and mechanical equipment.

Aside from the 200 dressing rooms for featured players the general dressing rooms for extra talent have been enlarged so that they can now accommodate as many as 5,000 extra people. The purchasing department and the transportation department have been installed in a new building. The carpenter shops and the mill have been made double their former size. The commissary has been redecorated and new equipent installed. Additions have been made to both the still department laboratory and the projection rooms.

Lumber is being used at the rate of more than 10,000 square feet a day, and this will be greatly increased shortly when work begins on the Circus Maximus for "Ben Hur."

This tremendous constructional activity was made necessary by the huge production program that has been outlined for the coming year. Within the near future the following companies will be or are now in production: Lillian Gish in "La Boheme," directed by King Vidor; Marion Davies in "The Lights of New York," directed by Monta Bell; Lon Chaney and Norma Shearer in "The Tower of Lies," directed by Victor Seastrom; Ramon Novarro, Kathleen Key and Carmel Myers in "Ben Hur," directed by Fred Niblo; Eleanor Boardman and Conrad Nagel in Elinor Glyn's "The Only Thing," directed by Jack Conway; George K. Arthur, Gertrude Olmstead and Charles Murray in "I'll Tell the World," directed by William Wellman; Ramon Novarro in "The Midshipman," directed by Christy Cabanne, Eleanor Boardman, Lew Cody and Renee Adoree in "An Exchange of Wives," directed by Hobart Henley, and Pauline Starke in "Paris," the Robert Z. Leonard production for which Erte is designing the sets and costumes.

F. B. O. Buys Two Stories

"Hair Cartoon"

(Red Seal—Cartoon—300 Feet)

The newest issue of Marcus' Hair Cartoon distributed through Red Seal is a special for the Fourth of July. A sign calling attention to the fact that Independence Day is July 4 changes into a picture of Uncle Sam. This is different from Marcus' usual line of work. However, he gets back to his clever hair manipulation in drawing a cartoon of George Washington and then changing it into one of Uncle Sam. A timely and interesting number.—C. S. S.

"Beauty and the Bandit"

(Universal—Drama—Two Reels)

While classed as a Mustang Western, this two-reel drama distributed by Universal featuring George Larkin is a tale of outlaws and the Northwest Mounted Police. A government geologist and his niece seeking a precious mineral chance upon a man answering the description of a celebrated outlaw known as "The Snake." Later it develops that he is one of the "Mounted" and in seeking to capture "The Snake" he is overpowered and tied to a chair and sees the girl embrace him. He escapes and it later develops when he rescues the girl from another rascal named Higgins, that Higgins is actually "The Snake" and the other man on whom he has cast suspicion is innocent and is the girl's brother, so all ends happily. This line of action brings about surprises but the story is somewhat confused and hard to follow. It is of average entertainment value for patrons who like stories of the Northwest involving the "Mounted Police."—C. S. S.

"Married Neighbors"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Billy Engle and Beth Darlington are featured in this two-reel Century Comedy which deals with a bachelor's last night of freedom. He meets several of his married cronies at the club and they have a wild time, and start home in a hansom cab. They start doing stunts and unhitch the horse, pulling the cab themselves. As each of the married ones arrive home he is met with such a reception that Billy almost decides to remain single. He is late for his wedding and his fiancee starts out after him. While crossing a bridge he is thrown out over the railing and lands in her car and soon they are starting on their honeymoon. The cab idea is a familiar one but it should be good for some laughs. Altogether, it is well up to the Century standard.—C. S. S.

first, as how long he will live and then as to how he will finally be disposed of to bring about the happy ending. This character has also been used for comedy which, however, at times is rather morbid. There is a noticeable absence of unnecessary details to retard the action and every foot has been used to advance the story, develop characterization or provide comedy relief.

Mabel Ballin is attractive and capable as the girl and a good type for the role. Forrest Stanley has one of the most effective roles of his career as the suave, soft-hearted gambler. Andre De Beranger's handling of the role of the dissolute husband is so forceful that he easily dominates the scenes in which he appears. He gives an excellent characterization, although he at times slightly overacts. Edna Mae Cooper and Russell Simpson do good work in character roles as companions of the two leading players and provide most of the comedy.

Length, 5,794 feet.

Story

Cassie, an orphan singing in a small town church, agrees to marry the organist on his promise to send her to a teacher to develop her voice. They go to San Francisco and Cassie is so disgusted with her husband, Hall, and his low companions that she leaves him within a few hours. Answering an ad she applies at a dance hall in a mining town. Her singing charms everybody, including Modoc Bill, who has just won a big sum at faro, and struck with her innocence he turns over a check for $10,000, telling her to go to Europe and study. She wins great success and sings in the Grand Opera in Moscow. Modoc Bill, who has killed a man in a gambling brawl, allows himself to be arrested and serves his time. His partner, Chuckwalla Bill, has worked their claim and struck it rich. When Modoc is freed they build a fine house for Cassie. Hall, ill with consumption, comes to the town and Modoc nurses him back to health. Cassie returns to keep her promise to Modoc to sing for him. Hall recognizes her and when she refuses to come with him he starts to kill both. Chuckwalla kills him, however, and Cassie, confessing her love for Modoc, marries him.

"The Light of Western Stars"

Paramount Offers a Nicely Staged Version of Zane Grey's Story of the Vivid Went Done by W. K. Howard

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

Acting and direction do more than the plot to make "The Light of Western Stars" a vivid and even gripping play. In the last analysis the plot offers nothing new, but the good acting, under even better direction, gives a reality to the trite scenes, and a leisurely development works the action up to a really gripping climax with a minimum of gunplay and a maximum of emotion. The tempo even drags at the opening, but the interest is soon engaged and never let down.

Noah Beery, as the cattle rustling outlaw, is almost engaging in his villainy. He has a wonderful death scene that is hurt a little by a somewhat similar scene early in the play. It is a fine bit of work and it really chills the blood of the hardened playgoer. There are no violent contortions and no suggestions of pain, but rather a curiosity as to the strange sensations, and the scene closes before the tension is stretched to breaking. Only a physician or a hangman can watch this scene unmoved. It is the big scene in the play and far outweighs the cowboy-rustler battle that precedes it.

Jack Holt gets almost as much chance just before in "the walk of death" in which he is turned out into the streets, to roam at will, unharmed so long as the sun shines on the walls. Here, too, there is real dramatic tensity without overaction and not once does the player spoil the effect by an ill-timed gesture.

These two big scenes make an ordinary plot into a remarkably impressive play, and to the work of Beery and Holt should be added the name of William K. Howard, who directed their actions. Billie Dove is appealing as the heroine and Alma Bennett plays a small part effectively, while William Scott does the best he can with the repellant role of the rather spineless brother, and George Nichols is capital as the bluff ranch foreman. Robert Perry and Gene Pallette have some rather ordinary material for their comedy relief, but make the most of it and score more through their personalities.

The story should satisfy a wider clientele than the average western. It should please the more discriminating patron as well.

Story

Madeline Hammond comes west to meet her brother, Al, a rancher. Engrossed in a poker game, he forgets about meeting the train. Gene Stewart, the worse for drink, sees her and sends for a minister, declaring that he has vowed to marry the first white woman he meets. When he learns her name, he sends for Al's ranch foreman and the girl goes to the ranch. Brand runs off the stock and Madeline appeals to Gene to help them. He organizes a posse and runs off the rustlers. But Madeline sees him talking to Bonita, the girl for whose sake Al shot her insulter. She thinks he is in love with her and he is too proud to explain. He leaves the ranch and Brand returns and captures the girl. His band also capture Al, and Gene, searching for Madeline, also walks into his trap. Al is sent to town to raise $10,000 ransom, failing which Gene is to take "the walk of death." He arrives with a troupe of cowboys just in time to save Gene from death and his sister from dishonor. Brand's death dissolves the outlaw band and the story closes with a double wedding pending.

PRESENTATIONS – PROLOGUES – MUSIC

ON WITH THE DANCE

IT is never our intention to pose as an instructor, nor to become "preachy" in this department, but to act in this advantageous position merely as a barometer. Criticism given by one producer to another is usually more obstructive than constructive, and it would be extremely unethical to directly indicate mistakes or call particular attention to some chronic state of program monotony. Consequently opinions and ideas as are advanced are born out of communications from various parts of the world, and from personal contact with producers and patrons.

"On with the dance" is a progressive term, but through making a survey of various houses, the word "continue" seems a better appellation than "on." The "dance" is one of our chief forms of expression in the presentation field. We have found it capable of lending itself to many phases of expression, and as an interpretive factor it has proved itself a vital element. However, for some unknown reason the development in the dance divertissement has not been as profound as in vocal and other musical offerings.

To the artist there has undoubtedly been a weekly change and diversity in the routine, but to the patron, merely the scenery and costumes have changed. A similarity is bound to breed monotomy, and monotony is the greatest foe of the producer. He must combat it constantly, and the moment he becomes a victim or even lurks within its shadow, it may be said that his days are numbered as a successful and popular exponent of the art of presentation.

It is a suggestion that the various dance numbers should carry a marked routine with each week, particularly where a group of dancers are members of an Ensemble. The routine of the dance must be marked to the degree that the patrons notice the variations. A ballet number can be followed the next week with a folk dance, or syncopated and popular turns, or numbers giving a marked interpretation in various steps. There is a wide angle in which the ballet master or producer can operate without the aesthetic note being constantly foisted upon the audience.

Following this plan the producer will find that the dance divertissements are received more enthusiastically. The artists themselves work with more zest, welcoming the change each week since it dispels an atmosphere of the common-place.

This argument may be contested by those who are familiar with certain Broadway houses where a similarity in program is maintained. These houses, however, have such a large transient patronage that this is permissible, even in comparison with the long run of legitimate shows, but for the producer in a theatre catering to a regular weekly patronage, it would surely be to his detriment to pattern after the metropolitan houses.

However, "On With the Dance," but in ALL its forms. This coming season is rich in opportunities. Again we say, make your plans now for your future presentations. Don't overlook a diversified dance schedule.

MODERN JAZZ POLICY IS RIVOLI INNOVATION

Outstanding among recent movie announcements is the one just made by Hugo Riesenfeld concerning the change of policy at the Rivoli Theatre to take place July 12 when Ben Bernie and his band will introduce an entirely original plan of entertainment. The present performance routine which includes symphony orchestra and presentations will be discontinued on that date and in its place Bernie will establish jazz-band specialties and stage innovations. Riesenfeld, for years past, has been the sponsor of new ideas in motion picture presentation, having been the originator of symphonic orchestral picture accompaniment and the inventor of Classical Jazz. His new scheme is in exact accordance with his progressive activity and it is predicted will probably mark the beginning of another new era in this sphere.

Ben Bernie and his band as an individual attraction need no introduction on Broadway. Phonograph record fans and radio enthusiasts from coast to coast laud the Bernie product making the Rivoli innovation quite certain of immediate success. The orchestra ensemble as it will appear on July 12th will consist of twelve collegian jazz-musicians, each claimed to be an artist in his particular field. Riesenfeld states that the present Rivoli-Paramount picture policy will remain unchanged, first-run weekly change arrangements to continue.

FINE ART OF COSTUMING

TOO many producers fail to realize the importance of engaging a costume designer experienced and trained in the ways of the theatre. The best of interior decorators will not necessarily turn out good stage settings. An illuminating engineer of note is apt to do a worse job in lighting a scene than a stock journeyman electrician.

Just so the most exclusive of modistes, who may turn out the smartest gowns seen on the avenue in Paris or New York, may fail utterly to get effect in the theatre. Stage costumes should be designed for viewing at a distance. They must express not the character of the wearer but the character of the person that the wearer represents. A thorough knowledge of the script of the play, the ideas of the director and scenic artist and a sense of dramatic value are absolutely essential. Details do not count across the orchestra pit. Elaborate trimmings on dresses arrest people's attention too long for the good of the play or the unity of the general ensemble and effect of the stage picture in its entirety. Each costume must be reduced to its lowest terms in color and line, broad and almost bold. The audience should be able to get all in a flash and then concentrate on character and the general beauty of the scene.

A gown that is extraordinarily chic and lovely in a ballroom or garden, may fade into nothingness on the stage. The society modiste, the fashionable dressmaker, designs and turns out a creation, a single individual gown, with little need for thought of its juxtaposition with other costumes. In the theatre there must be harmony with the book, the music, the other costumes and the background. Each unit of the production must be a part and an uplift of the whole.

As a special service to producers, we will begin next week a series of reviews of various books which will be valuable aids in costuming, music, etc. We feel that by giving a general analysis and examining the various treatises which are published, a service can be rendered to the producer, enabling him to get books which will really help him in his work.

Detailed information relative to the production of the presentation suggested are printed herewith. Permission is given to any producer or exhibitor to use the Colby Harriman suggestions appearing in this section. Any other information desired to stage the presentation may be secured upon request.

Greater Movie Season Special No. 3
"THE SHRINE OF SYNCOPATION"
A Colorful Novelty for Jazz Program
A Moving Picture World Presentation
Devised by Colby Harriman.

FOR the third number in the series of four suggestions offered for Greater Movie Season, it is our idea that a syncopation number embracing modern dance and musical selections, would be welcomed for this particular period.

The scenic arrangement is one which digresses from the usual trend of jazz festival settings, and while it may appear massive and apparently cumbersome to set it is extremely simple to construct the various units, as "shells," flat pieces and fabrics are used as the basic materials.

The action which transpires should be one embracing a large ensemble which should include a novelty orchestra or jazz band arrangements, the program interspersed with clever specialty dancers and singers.

The band may be secluded back of the colonnade and brought into an alignment in the foreground. The entrances of the setting are made through the center with an opening right and left. The whole arrangement is devised to lend color and a gradual scenic progression from softer tones ascending towards a glittering finale. The various essentials of scenic construction together with lighting, etc., are found in the detailed description of the various units which follow:

Ground Plan

The stage placement as indicated in the ground plan chart herewith shows the simplicity of the setting. The shaded sections marked (A) are the columns or pilaster section. (B) is the base upon which the statute stands. The set trees (C) are placed in arrangement as indicated. The foliage row (D) to mask at extreme sides back of the wall (E) has a pliable flibber (DD), which is attached to the foliage piece, (D), the ends falling over the tops of the wall. The three horizon rows are constituted of fabrics and spangles which are indicated by (F), (G), (H). The sky drop (I) is used to mask.

Unit Details

The accompanying chart marked "Elevation" will give the producer an idea of the set-up of the various units over the Ground Plan. The construction, etc., follows:

(A) Columns

These columns may be two and three-sided, made of a light 2-inch batten covered with a muslin, particular attention being given to eliminate any cross pieces in the sides of the column visible to the audience. The columns should be set in the order specified in the Ground Plan, and there should be a slight divergence in thickness between the columns at the rear and those in the front, but the heights of the columns in the back must not be lowered in like proportion as the perspective would not then be maintained. The top of the column is surmounted by a hemispherical crown which may be painted on a flat piece set vertically or on an angle to give the effect of a circular fence arrangement. This should be cut in the center between the various spindles painted on it. The columns should be toned a medium buff on the front surface and these should be done with dyes. The reverse side of the column should be painted to give the effect of stained glass in mosaic treatment. At the top of the column an urn or pan should be placed, at the base of which a red light flickers, and incense arises from the pan, the red light highlighting the lazily rising smoke. Lights placed at the base of the column may be turned down towards the climax illuminating the columns presenting a very beautiful effect.

GROUND PLAN

(B) Base

A pedestal treated in the same manner as the columns is in center upon which a player who may be dressed in white tights poses as a statue. This can be an introduction for a dance number. The characters should represent the spirit of syncopation, and the various members of the ballet during their entrance may fling garlands, balloons, etc. at the character, piling the base high with festive adornments. Silver metallics can be thrown on the front of the pedestal so that a baby spot in the foot trough can highlight the pedestal, causing it to appear as diamonds.

(C) Set Trees

Three set trees in the colonnade cluster should be painted in olive green with green metallics thrown in to give a scintillating effect. This can be done on compo-board cut out and set.

(D) Sectional Set Trees

A set tree painted on beaver-board and cut out should be placed back of the enclosure and run on an angle from off right on and up stage to right center. A very good effect can be accomplished by having a strip of muslin painted to match the tree design, one side of it being fastened to the set tree unit which runs on the angle, and the other side stretching over the area between the set tree piece and the fence, the ends fringed and jagged and falling over the fence. Short sticks can be used to prop up this piece to make it appear uneven as found in tree top outlines. To simplify the work of striking the sticks can be mounted on a couple of 2 x 4s and placed accordingly. This arrangement will give a depth and thickness to the tree piece and will permit an excellent surface for lighting.

(E) Enclosure

The fence and accompanying posts which carry off from the colonnade right and left should be painted the same buff tone as the colonnade, and when the lights are brought up a variegated medium should be used to cast green, red and amber shafts over this area.

(F) Foliage Row

The various rows which follow for the background treatment are all done in fabrics. The general treatment for this unit and the two following units should be a batten or frame made on an angle, the various materials draped and shirred over the diagonal piece which runs from a spot back of the colonnades up and off stage. This particular unit should be made of green silks or metallic cloth shirred in uneven folds.

(G) 1st Horizon Unit

A metalline cloth in narrow folds placed on a frame similar to the one unit ahead of it should be made of orange, or can be a shell pink tinted light to get the effect.

(H) 2nd Horizon Unit

The same construction should be made on this unit with the exception of a peak piece which connects the two units. All-over-spangles-on-net should be used to drape this unit, and a sun-burst arrangement in the center accomplished by a white spot secluded below the horizon focused to catch the center area of the peak with a flash. To accentuate this, tinfoil can be placed underneath the spangles on the peak to aid the reflection. Use a light blue sky piece for backing.

(I) Sky Drop

Costumes

The accompanying chart suggests three costumes which may be made or secured which will aid color to the number. The costume may be combined with many colors and the "pirate" outline and carnival spirit seem very fitting for this particular number.

John Wenger's new stage setting at tthe Rivoli, seen for the first time this week, is an interesting attempt at novelty decoration. The entire proscenium has been bordered by long rows of giant organ pipes and at either side are tall Gothic cathedral windows illuminated in a variety of tints from the rear. The whole effect is majestically conservative yet striking in its originality.

(c) Capitol Ballet Corps with Mlle. Gambarelli, Doris Niles and Lina Belis, Nora Puntin, Millicent Bishop, Elma Bayer, Ruth Flynn, Muriel Malone.
"Farandole" from "L'Arlesienne Suite," Bizet.

The settings for the various divertissements are as follows:

(a) A small set piece painted and cut out to represent a piece of Dresden bric-a-brac, a suggestion of a rose stem curved in the shape of an interrogation mark with large pink roses painted on it, and a few birds done in pink on opposite sides of the stem. The base of the stem is done in blue and green and attached to a small platform upon which the two dancers, dressed in white oilcloth costumes, Gambarelli in a ballet costume, and Miss Niles in a white jacket coat. The black spangle on lace is used as a backing which is toned with red and blue from the sides; the figures on the stand being highlighted magenta and amber from the sides working in a white spot from front. Green foots and flood to tone.

(c) A very conventional fabric set using gold curtains in two formations. Light gold fabrics hung in two with center opening and an orange border to mask. Back in three is seen a gold fabric hung to back. The background is tinted canary, the foreground in amber and green from the sides is the girls of the Corps, dressed in gipsy costumes present a colorful dance with Gambarelli appearing in a red Spanish costume, Doris Niles in typical gipsy raiment. This was a very charming number.

(9) "Tattoo," Trumpeter.
(10) "Taps," Mr. Abbott (Assisted by Trumpeter.)

Setting consists of a set piece in two representing several army tents which are done in the browns, the set piece painted in such manner as to lend a good perspective. Back of the tent tops is a cut drop with a high ledge running up about 12 feet from center and carrying off to left upon which a large tree trunk is placed. The top branches disappear above the opening. Pine trees up right are silhouetted against a back sky drop which takes on the various colors of afternoon, sunset and evening, being gradually toned as the action progresses, and lends a colorful treatment to the entire setting which would otherwise be drab. The male members of the Ensemble appear in soldier uniforms, the ladies who enter dressed in modern togs. For finale a tattoo and the various posting effective work is done. Stage is left vacant following the exit of the Ensemble, voices in the distance can be heard in the relay of calls. Finally the foreground goes black leaving but the outline of the trees and upper part of the ledge visible against a deep blue sky. A sentry appears in silver on the high prominence and sounds taps. The entire presentation closing in a very impressive and highly artistic manner.

RIVOLI THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Lost—A Wife" (Paramount)

Music

Selection from "Pagliacci" (Leoncavallo) is played by the Rivoli Orchestra with Willy Stahl conducting, and is followed by a very popular selection of the well-known Risenfeld "Classical Jazz" collection. Harold Rambotton at the Console plays "Mamie" by Jack Shilkret.

Under Hawaiian Skies

This divertissement is preceded by a Castle Color Film, "Alahoe Land", showing several scenic shots of the familiar Hawaiian Beach. The music of the Hawaiian Orchestra is heard back stage as the film fades out. The foots and floods are brought up, curtains part revealing a Hawaiian exterior which consists of several palm trees with thin trunks and heavy fronds set across stage in irregular alignment. A thatched hut is up right with a ground row which connects to either a trunk or rock piece, although it was rather difficult to define this part of the setting. A thick border of palm fronds is suspended in about two, and back of this is a border which appears to be green oak leaves hung in three. In the front a painted palm border is hung in one. There is a profusion of large palm branches intertwined in netting at the sides, and is so placed to render a conglomeration which gives the appearance of a dense growth. Japanese lanterns are placed on the lower part of the roof of the thatched hut. A flowering set piece used as a seat is up center. A blue sky drop with a large pink moon up left center visible in full over the horizon. The number introduces Panly Makenza, famous Hawaiian tenor, accompanied by Hawaiian orchestra.

Of five pieces dressed in white, four hula hula dancers with a specialty dancer dressed in a white silk hula costume, the Quartette dressed in white sailor costumes, and Alfred Brower (?) dressed in a sailor costume doing a Russian dance. Green, pink and canary highlight the set from the sides, which is very colorful and animated at all times.

COLONY THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Sporting Chance" (Tiffany Truart-Renown)

Music

The overture for this week is particularly well done, and Dr. Edward Kilenyi conducting the Colony Melody Masters, gave an excellent rendition of melodies of yore which introduced the novelty, "I'll See You in My Dreams." The overture did not open the program, but was changed to a spot prior to the presentation.

The Mystic Voice

The question asked in a program of "What is it?" and "Where is it?" proved rather baffling to a curious audience. John Priest at the Console played "Shadowland" and presently from the area of the balcony, a voice of a singer was heard, a blue spot was presently thrown on the chandelier over the box-house left, then to stage left in the spot to be taken by the singer. Owing to the trickery of placing sound it would be rather difficult for one to say exactly where the voice is located, but apparently it came from the dome and through the grill work of the sounding board or through the organ chambers. We will confess it was as baffling to us as to others in the audience. It is a very good novelty, and the air of mystery surrounds it. It would have been easy to have overdone this.

Carnival of Sports

This is the most pretentious presentation offering which the Colony has offered, and the management is to be commended for this type, as this theatre has excellent facilities for doing such wonderful things in this particular branch of production work. Too often we have seen vaudeville acts dominate the presentation spot, and this should not be the case as there are so many things which can be done in a presentation way that will earn for the house the popularity enjoyed by competitors who specialize in straight presentations. This presentation carries with it the element of an excellent divertissement plus the element of a prologue to the picture. Ten simple scenes constitute the number. The action opens with canary flood, amber foots and blue borders on the gold close ins. A singer enters who sings the theme song of the picture, "A Sporting Chance." Eight girls enter in two's, dressed as fencers, baseball players, polo players and gymnasium girls. They do a walk on and off with the singer at the finale of his song. Leo Donnelly, dressed in a gray golf suit, appears before each scene and presents a humorous introduction in his laconic style. The first appearance is the El Rey Sisters in an excellent roller skating number, dressed in light colorful costumes. They appear in full stage in a simple setting. Silver curtain hung back in three-toned green, blue, and rose from the sides. Two large silver vases are right center and left center. A vase at right carries large bouquet of vari-colored tulips highlighted in white to bring out the pigments of the flowers, and the one at the left has the bamboo flowers toned amber. A large crystal ball is hung from the center, and for the finale red and green spots are played upon it, as it revolves, causing a charming effect on the silver drop. Pink spot is used on the girls in the first movement of the number, with a blue spot for the second.

The Tennis Number

The Tennis Number is given next by the Colony Dancing Ensemble: Eight clever dancers who appear in numbers arranged by Billy Smith. They appear before a black plush drop hung in one with a cut-out stranded (?) cloud motif painted in blues, greens and pinks, the cloud motif appearing like winged birds in silver. A tennis net is tacked on the drop at the base, blue foots to tone. Helen Grinnell presents the golf number in an exquisite dance interpretation, black cyc is hung back. A set tree painted on beaver board cut-out is placed up right. The balance of the set is the customary equipment found on the green. Canary highlights the caddy who stands up left center dressed in a white outfit. The dancer appears in a white sport costume.

Swimming Number

The Swimming number is the next feature introduced. A blue drop hung in about two with three set pieces representing a dual palm tree cluster, a boat and water motif and a water row. These three set pieces are painted on beaver board cut-out and set against the drop. Pink flood is on the eight dancers who appear in bathing suits of silk of a heliotrope shade.

This is followed by a race track scene which introduces the Colony Quartette. A scrim hung down in one back of which is a strip set piece cut to resemble a low white fence which runs across the base of the scrim. Up left center is a set piece resembling the end of a judge's stand done in white with an awning top. Light fabrics are used for backing. These are toned light blue to flood. Light amber flood used on the singers who appear in one dressed in the conventional costume of the day, and labelled by Mr. Donnelly as book-makers. They sing two numbers and then go into the handicap which brings on the eight girls dressed in jockey suits working in a canary spot. Then comes the "punch" of the presentation, which is a perfect blending with the picture, and rounds out a good show. The entire ensemble rush on at the finale of the song by the Quartette and the Dance Ensemble and with much action, hilarity, etc., announce the race. Presently the clatter of hoofs is heard in back of the curtains as the lights in front dim, the light fabrics is then taken away revealing two horses on a tread-mill executing a race against a black background highlighted from the right with blue. This is labelled as "Kentucky Boy," alive and in action. At the climax the opening shot of the picture is shown, which is two jockeys riding in the same direction around the racetrack as photographed in the picture. The lights dim down back as the screen in brought in. There was an evidence of good mechanics back stage and the technical division is to be commended.

MARK STRAND THEATRE
New York City

Feature Picture: "The Making of O'Malley"
(First National)

Music

"Fantasie Orientale," a rhythmic paraphrase arranged by Arthur Lang, and rendered by the Mark Strand Symphony Orchestra with Carl Edouarde conducting. The lighting effect used upon the orchestra was very effective, being lighted from foots of subdued green with the fringe lighting of purple which highlighted the head and shoulders of men and tips of their instruments. The proscenium top and sides indirectly light in rose. Three spots of amber, from booth spots shed a soft haze over all, lighting the brown velvet close-in curtains, while the conductor is spotted with amber. For the finale, the entire orchestra is flooded, from a bank of spots hung over-head, with a vivid purple, thus producing a very striking and vivid effect.

Divertissements

Edward Albano, baritone, rendered "The Road to Mandalay," by Speakes. The setting is the corner of a Dutch Drinking Grotto, table, bench, high hanging lantern and stained glass (effect) window as backing of one side of triangle setting, this is all treated after the Gothic Design and is framed in from top and sides with folded black velvet drapes and lighted with an amber spot on the singer with a soft light from lantern and a sectional bunch of amber foots on the dimmers.

"Frolics of '88"

Joseph Plunkett, the first man on Broadway to take a step in the right direction, in his delightful "Frolics of '88" fills us with sparkling burgundy and sends us home dreaming dreams of not so long ago and refreshed, as only such a delightful, homey, humorous skit can refresh. The setting is the simple old fashioned parlor in any American home in the late 80s with the old gas chandelier with frosted glass globes, the hat rack and umbrella stand in the hall through the center door (not so fancy), the old square piano and china piano lamp, horse hair furniture and all the usual wall pictures. The set was boxed in with velvet drapes of a mouse color, which lent the atmosphere of age to the general set, highlighted with dimmed amber from sides and old rose foots and top, on the dimmers. The set shows two windows on the right with the heavy red hangings and one big window on the left with like hangings, also, at the center door which was a little left center the same treatment in drapes was used.

Effective Lighting

The lighting was effectively arranged with floods of bright amber through the windows, and from over head, as if from the chandelier, there played on the artists a flood spot of soft amber. This was supplemented with an amber spot from the booth as each artist did his or her specialty with white spot from booth used on only one number.

As the curtains parted we looked upon the group of old fashioned, but colorfully costumed, men and women gathered for an evening of enjoyment, some on the sofa, others on chairs, with the gentlemen standing, the famous town quartet (Mark Strand Quartet in this instance) the funny thin fellow at the square piano, who can really play, and the Town Belle, in amber spot, ready to do her song. Then the party started. Miss Pauline Miller, Soprano, sang.

(a) "The Sweetest Story Ever Told,"—(Stults.)
(b) "Polka," Mlle. Klemova and M. Bourman.
(c) Charles Guglieri, Musical Saw Soloist.
(d) "Sally in Our Alley," Mark Strand Quartette.
(e) "Schottische," Mark Strand Ballet Corps.

Cecil B. De Mille Secures Max Parker As Art Director for His Productions

MAX PARKER, leading member of the board of architects which planned the San Diego International Exposition is the latest addition to the technical staff of Cecil B. De Mille.

Mr. Parker, more recently Art Director for Mary Pickford, and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has now signed a contract to assume the same position with the Cecil De Mille Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Parker's touch as an artist, architect and decorator has been seen to advantage in such Paramount pictures as "Joan the Woman" and "The Beggar on Horseback," and such Pickford productions as "The Hoodlum" and "Pollyanna." He has just returned from a six months' tour of Europe where he added to his store of source material.

Mr. Parker is now at work on Leatrice Joy's starring vehicle, "Hell's Highroad," directed by Rupert Julian, and Rod La Rocque's starring picture, "The Coming of Amos," directed by Paul Sloane. The next to receive his attention will be Cecil B. De Mille's first independent production, "The Road to Yesterday," adapted by Jeanie Macpherson and Beulah Marie Dix from the stage play by Miss Dix and E. G. Sutherland.

Berliner Arranging Music

Mr. DeMille also announced the appointment of Rudolph Berliner, former musical director for Klaw & Erlanger, to act as musical expert for all productions of the Cecil De Mille Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Berliner will provide music cues for all starring offerings of Leatrice Joy and Rod La Rocque as well as the personally directed Cecil B. De Mille Production. He will institute an innovation in this work. Heretofore, all music cues and music scores have been prepared in New York.

Mr. Berliner will remain at the De Mille Studio and his cues will be made up of the actual music played by the stuido orchestra during the actual making of the scenes. It is expected in this manner that the music may be made to fit more fully the mood and spirit of the various players.

Mr. Berliner has already started work preparing the music for "Hell's Highroad," and "The Coming of Amos." His next effort will be on the first Cecil De Mille independent production. "The Road to Yesterday," adapted by Jeanie Macpherson and Beulah Marie Dix from the play by Miss Dix and E. G. Sutherland.

Schildkraut Arrives

Arriving fifteen minutes late, after poking along behind a train wreck, Joseph Schildkraut still retained undiminished the dynamic sparkle which has been a feature of his interpretative success

As Mr. Schildkraut descended from the belated California Limited, he stated that at least for the present he was not permanently deserting the stage for the screen. He is to be in California for three months playing the feature male lead in Cecil De Mille's first independent production, "The Road to Yesterday." Upon the conclusion of this offering, he will return to New York to reassume his starring role in Broadway's biggest success of 1925, "The Firebrand."

Work on "The Road to Yesterday" will start shortly. It is an adaptation by Jeanie Macpherson and Beulah Marie Dix of the play by Miss Dix and E. G. Sutherland. Other featured players include Jetta Goudal, Vera Reynolds, Julia Faye and Theodore Kosloff.

Beahan Leaves for Coast

Charles Beahan, Production Manager of Producers Distributing Corporation, left Saturday for the West Coast to look over production conditions.

Before proceeding to Los Angeles, Mr. Beahan will visit the De Mille production forces on location in the Grand Canyon in Colorado, where the opening scenes of "The Road to Yesterday," Mr. De Mille's first personally directed production under his new independent arrangement with Producers will be taken.

Mr. Beahan will be on the coast for several weeks conferring with the production units now at work on the new product of Producers for the 1925-26 schedule.

Scenes in "Married?" the Herman F. Jans production directed by George Terwilliger and starring Owen Moore and Constance Bennett.

Rockett Reports on First National Picture in Work

AL ROCKETT, assistant to Richard A. Rowland, general manager of production for First National Pictures, who has been in Hollywood for a month substituting for John E. McCormick, Western representative now in Europe on a vacation, has found the pictures now being completed for the company ahead of expectations, high as these were. In a letter to E. A. Eschmann, he writes:

"I am very enthusiastic about the forthcoming First National productions, those that have been completed and will be shipped to the Home Office in the next couple of weeks and, also, the productions that we are just starting.

"Have seen all of Frank Lloyd's "Winds of Chance," and, take it from me, we are going to have a knock-out picture and one you will be able to go out and shout about. The picture is one of the finest productions of its kind I have ever seen. The White Horse Rapids and Chilcoot Pass stuff give you the thrill of your life.

"Have also seen Eddie Carewe's last production, "The Lady Who Lied," and believe it is a crackerjack box office picture. He has a good cast headed by Lewis Stone, Virginia Valli and Nita Naldi, and has some very beautiful settings. I am quite sure you are going to be very happy over it.

"We previewed Miss Griffith's last picture, "The Marriage Whirl," last night and it is another extremely good Griffith picture. It is a story of modern life with a new twist to it and I'm sure it's another one you can go out and shout about.

"Next week Carewe will get started on his next picture, a very powerful story titled "The Sea Woman," which was a New York stage play. Blanche Sweet will play the part of the Sea Woman, and I think it will make a great picture. We also get started on "Joseph Greer and His Daughter," which I hope to have a new title for before very long. Lewis Stone, Shirley Mason and Dorothy Sebastian will play the leading roles. I also think this story has unusual production value and will be a good box office picture.

"I am particularly enthusiastic about "Viennese Medley," which we hope to get started on or about June 15th. We have a cast on this picture which includes Conway Tearle, Anna Q. Nilsson and May Allison, and after reading the scenario I think it is going to easily be an equal to 'The Four Horsemen.'

"These productions, together with our Star productions, make me very enthusiastic about the line-up for First National for the coming year. From a production standpoint, we are trying to do everything humanly possible to turn over to the Sales Department the greatest line-up of box office pictures that have ever been turned out and I only wish I could transfer all of my enthusiasm to the entire force over the country."

Walsh in Football Story

George Walsh's third picture for Chadwick Pictures Corporation will have a college background, and it is the intention of the company to make many of the exterior scenes on the Cornell campus in Ithaca, N. Y. Mr. Walsh's last trip to Ithaca will be well remembered by Cornellians, as he distinguished himself, then a member of the Fordham University football team, by beating Cornell single handed (or single footed) with a seventy yard drop kick, the record at the Cornell field.

Governor Alfred E. Smith of New York, and Mayor William S. Hackett, of Albany, were wildly cheered by enormous crowds when they toured the principal streets of Albany on the observation platform of America's first Trackless Train, now on its way across the continent from New York to Los Angeles. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is sponsoring the special's trip in the interests of better roads and better motion pictures

New First Nationalite Goes To Open Exchange in Brussels

Jack Stewart, formerly with the Producers Distributing Corporation in charge of its Detroit office, left last Saturday aboard the S. S. Minnetonka for London, where he will spend several weeks before departing for Brussels to open a new First National exchange there.

In London, Mr. Stewart will familiarize himself with the First National product, and, as this is his first trip abroad, will attempt to become thoroughly acclimated before venturing into Belgium.

With the opening of this new office, the plans laid out by Bruce Johnson, manager of the First National Foreign department, for the opening of exchanges in each foreign territory, have taken another step toward completion.

Split Territory

Warner Bros. Divide New York and New Jersey, to Improve Service

In order to give the exhibitors of New Jersey better and more direct service, Warner have decided to split the New York and New Jersey territory which has been operating from one office at 1600 Broadway, New York City.

Sam E. Morris, general manager of distribution, announced this week the appointment of Nat Beieras manager of the New Jersey exchange. He will share the office of the New York branch.

Mr. Beier, formerly with Warner Bros., returns to the company after an absence of a little over a year, during which he has been engaged in the same line of business. He has been for a number of years attached to the sales forces of big organizations and is well fitted to handle his new position.

Mr. Morris also announced the appointment of a special Warnes Bros. field representative in Canada in the person of B. F. Lyon, who took up his new duties this week. Mr. Lyon was for two and one-half years with United Artists in the Canadian territory and has a large personal acquaintance among the exhibitors there.

Scenes in "My Wife and I," the Warner Brothers picture in which Irene Rich, Huntly Gordon, John Roach and Johnny Harron have the important roles.

First National Releasing Five of Its Pictures During Greater Movie Season

By E. A. ESCHMANN.

Manager of Distribution, First National Pictures, Inc.

CONVINCED that there is good business for good pictures at any period of the year, First National is releasing five of its finest productions for the year during the month of August, the period embraced by the Greater Movie Season movement inaugurated by the Hays organization. August is usually considered by exhibitors and distributors alike as the worst month in the year and most of the companies which release pictures at all during that month schedule their weakest product for that season.

It was with this fact in mind that some of the exhibitors who attended the Greater Movie Season open meeting of the Hays organization at the Palace Theatre last week, at which Charles O'Reilly presided and at which Jerome Beatty was the speaker, objected to having the Greater Movie Season movement take place in August, advocating September as the proper month when, they said, good pictures could be available.

A glance at the First National pictures scheduled for release during August shows that this objection cannot apply to First National product. Five of its finest pictures will be available for showings during that month, in addition to other big pictures whose release dates fall in July and even June. The August releases from First National follow:

August 2. "Her Sister From Paris," the new Constance Talmadge picture, a Sidney Franklin production, written by Hans Kraely, with Ronald Colman playing opposite the star. Kraely is the author of "Her Night of Romance," one of Miss Talmadge's most popular pictures, of "The Marriage Circle" and other box-office successes. He has recently been signed by Joseph M. Schenck to write original screen stories for both Norma and Constance Talmadge.

August 9. "Fine Clothes," a John M. Stahl production, from Franz Molnar's play, "Fashions for Men." In the cast are Lewis Stone, Percy Marmont, Alma Rubens, Ray Griffith, Aileen Percy and William V. Mong.

August 16. "The Half-Way Girl," from a story by Lloyd Sheldon, directed by John Francis Dillon. Doris Kenyon and Lloyd Hughes are the featured players. Others in the cast are Hobart Bosworth, Tully Marshall, Sam Hardy, Sally Crute, Martha Madison, Teddy Sampson, Harriet Sterling and Charles Wellesley.

August 23. "The Knockout," starring Milton Sills, from M. D. C. Crawford's novel, "The Comeback." Lambert Hillyer is directing this picture, which is the story of a prize fighter in the Maine lumber camps. Supporting the star are Tully Marshall, Lorna Duveen, John Kolb, Frank Evans and Harland Knight.

August 30. "Graustark," a special in which Norma Talmadge is starred, directed by Dimitri Buchowetski. In the supporting cast are Eugene O'Brien, Marc MacDermott, Roy Darcy, Albert Gran, Lillian Lawrence, Wanda Hawley, Winter Hall and Michael Vavitch.

Other big First National pictures are available for showing during the Greater Movie Season. There is "The Scarlet West," the special made by Frank J. Carroll, with Robert Frazer, Clara Bow, Robert Edeson, Helen Ferguson, Johnny Walker, Walter McGraill, Ruth Stonehouse and other players. This special will be released on July 26, just a few days before the Greater Movie Season begins.

Another special which has been attracting big box-office receipts in the bigger cities is "Quo Vadis," with Europe's most noted screen actor, Emil Jannings, as Nero.

Other July releases available for showing during August are the new Corinne Griffith production, "The Marriage Whirl," from J. Hartley Manners' popular play, "The National Anthem." Al Santell directed and supporting the star are Kenneth Harlan. Harrison Ford, E. J. Ratcliffe, Charles Lane and Edgar Norton. "The Lady Who Lied," the new Edwin Carewe production from Robert Hichens' story, "Snake-Bite," with Lewis Stone, Virginia Valli, Nita Naldi, Louis Payne, Leo White and Edward Earle.

June releases which will make excellent attractions for the Greater Movie Season are the Milton Sills picture, "The Making of O'Malley"; Colleen Moore in "The Desert Flower"; M. C. Levee's "Just a Woman," with Claire Windsor, Conway Tearle and Percy Marmont, and Barbara La Marr in John Galsworthy's "The White Monkey."

Other recent First National releases which have established themselves as box-office attractions and are still available for first runs in some of the cities which will participate in the Greater Movie Season movement are Colleen Moores "Sally"; Nazimova in "My Son"; Corinne Griffith in "Declasse"; Richard Barthelmess in "Soul-Fire"; "Chickie" and "His Supreme Moment."

With such a list of First National's finest productions to choose from the exhibitor who wants the best of screen fare for showing during the Greater Movie Season period, will find plenty of drawing material to choose from.

Pick Marmont for Big Role

Percy Marmont is selected for one of the big roles of the year, the title role in the screen adaptation of "Lord Jim," Joseph Conrad's masterpiece, it is announced by Paramount. Announcement of the supporting cast will be made soon and production is scheduled for about the middle of July.

John Barrymore in Whaling Story, for Warner Brothers

WARNER Bros. have decided on a last minute change in their plans for John Barrymore, now at their Hollywood studio awaiting to make his first picture. Instead of "Captain Alvarez," a South American revolution story selected as the star's first production, the Warners have decided to make a big sea story dealing with the whaling industry, called "The Sea Beast."

This picture is to be adapted from the whaling yarn "Moby Dick," a highly colorful tale of the New Bedford, Mass., whaling trade in the period of 1840. It was written by Herman Melville, and contains enough action for half a dozen pictures. The Warners intend to make a special production of this story and Bess Meredyth, who adapted "Ben Hur," will do the scenario.

Mr. Barrymore will have Millard Webb, one of the youngest directors on the coast, behind the megaphone. Mr. Webb has been one of the most successful directors in the industry, being responsible for "The Dark Swan" and "My Wife and I," recognized as almost perfect from the directorial standpoint.

The selection of "The Sea Beast" was decided upon in response to Mr. Barrymore's request for an adventure story. While "Captain Alvarez" was also selected for this reason, upon reading "Moby Dick," both the star and the Warners were of the opinion that it would lend itself to a much bigger production than the South American tale, and provide the star with an entirely different role from any he has played.

While part of the picture will be made at Catalina, the important scenes will quite likely be shot at New Bedford, the company coming east at a later date. Director Webb is now busy selecting his cast.

New Players Starting Work

Tyler Brooke and Suzanne O'Neil appeared at the Hal Roach Studios in their first camera scenes last week, following the signing of long-term contracts with Hal Roach, the famous comedy producer. Tyler Brooke, formerly featured comedian in "No, No, Nanette," and other stage successes made his debut in support of Glenn Tryon under the direction of Fred Guiol. Miss O'Neil, the fifteen-year-old discovery and a sister of Sally O'Neil, the new Metro-Goldwyn star, started her screen career opposite Jimmie Finlayson.

Begins "Golden Princess"

Production of "The Golden Princess" starring Betty Bronson, began this week with the departure of the complete producing unit under the direction of Clarence Badger for Bishop, California. A special train was employed to move the players and equipment from Hollywood to the location site in the Sierras.

In addition to the director and the star the troupe includes Neil Hamilton, Rockcliffe Fellowes, Phyllis Haver, Joseph Dawling, Norma Wills, Mary Schoene and about fifty other players.

Chadwick's Current Program To Be Completed in Fall

PRODUCTION of the Chadwick Pictures for the 1925-26 season is progressing at a rapid rate in Los Angeles, where I. E. Chadwick, President of the company, is personally supervising the actual production of all of his pictures. Four of next season's pictures have been completed and four others are now in production. The progress of date seems to indicate that the entire program will be completed late next fall, and it is likely that several special productions, not scheduled, will be added to the product.

Charles Ray, most recent addition to the list of Chadwick stars, has completed "Some Pun'kins," first of the four rural comedies which he will make for Chadwick this year. Director Jerome Storm has already started shooting on the second picture, which is, as yet, unnamed. Gertrude Olmstead will play opposite Ray in this production.

George Walsh, who will return to the athletic type of pictures which first won him fame, has finished two of the six pictures on this year's schedule. Wanda Hawley headed the supporting cast in "American Pluck," the first picture. Cecille Evans and Philo McCullough are in the cast of the second picture, "Blue Blood." It is expected that Walsh will come to New York shortly to start production of a new picture, the exteriors of which will be made in the East.

The first Larry Semon comedy for the new season, "The Wizard of Oz," was completed some time ago, and has been acclaimed by the critics in every key city where it has been shown. Semon is now at work on his second picture, which is promised as a spectacular comedy of even greater magnitude than "The Wizard of Oz." The new picture, "The Perfect Clown," will be directed by Fred Newmeyer, who has directed many of Harold Lloyd's best pictures. Dorothy Dwan and Oliver Hardy, who supported Semon in "The Wizard of Oz," are in the cast. Kate Price is the only other player who has been engaged to date.

James Young is now working on the final scenes of Douglas Doty's adaptation of Louis K. Anspacher's great American drama, "The Unchastened Woman," which is to be the vehicle for Theda Bara's return to the screen. This picture, which has been several months in the making, is an elaborately staged drama of domestic strife, which Chadwick Pictures Corporation expects to be one of the most sensational photodramas of the year.

Six companies are now at work at the Edendale, Cal., plant making two-reel comedies. This is an assurance that Pathe will have plenty of Sennett fun-films for the coming "Greater Movie Season."

To Start Work on "Last Frontier"

Hunt Stromberg is clearing the decks for action on "The Last Frontier," the gigantic Western epic which he is soon to produce for Producers Distributing Corporation. Present plans call for the actual shooting to start on July 1.

Stromberg, who recently purchased the screen rights and the invaluable buffalo stampede scenes of this Courtney Riley Cooper novel from the late Thos. H. Ince, intends to make "The Last Frontier" one of the greatest pictures of the decade and a memorial to the famous producer-director.

In five of these stampede scenes more than 8,000 buffalo appear. This is the largest herd of these animals in existence today. Several hundred Indians and cowboys were employed by the Canadian government to round up the great herds from all corners of the National Park and assemble them for these scenes.

Stromberg will personally direct "The Last Frontier," but just who will have the leading roles and who will play the several historical characters has not been disclosed as yet.

Two Pictures Completed

"The Miracle of Life" and "Headlines" Nearer Release by Associated Exhibitors

Studio work was completed this week on two of the features which are scheduled for release by Associated Exhibitors during the coming season. The films are now being edited and cut.

S. E. V. Taylor completed "The Miracle of Life" at the Cosmopolitan Studios in New York City. This feature, based upon a published story by Olga Printzlow, was adapted to the screen by Marion Leonard.

MAE BUSCH NITA NALDI

The cast is headed by Mae Busch, Nita Naldi and Percy Marmont.

E. H. Griffith completed "Headlines" at the Tec-Art Studios in New York City. This newspaper romance is an original story written by Dorian Neve. The producers are St. Regis Productions. Alice Joyce heads the cast which includes Malcomb McGregor, Virginia Lee Corbin, Harry T. Morey, Elliott Nugent, Ruby Blaine and Miss Nobody From Nowhere.

Alan Hale to Direct

That a "bad" man can make a good motion picture director is a question about to be tested by Cecil De Mille who has just given a long term contract to Alan Hale, famous screen "villain." Mr. Hale's first production for the Cecil De Mille Pictures Corporation will be a Leatrice Joy starring vehicle, "The Wedding Song," adapted by Charels Whittaker from the novel by Ethel Watts Mumford.

C. B. De Mille Signs Technical Expert

Paul G. Sprunck, former technical director for Famous Players-Lasky, and more recently with the Cosmopolitan Productions, has been added to the staff of the Cecil B. De Mille studio as a special technical expert. De Mille considers him a man of unusual ability, and has signed him to a long-term contract.

Sprunck's first work for De Mille was the designing of a location set for "The Coming of Amos," Rod La Rocque's starring picture which is being directed by Paul Sloane. He excels in plaster and papier-mache work, and will be kept busy on the elaborate sets planned for De Mille's first personally directed production, "The Road to Yesterday."

Assemble Indians for Big Picture

Since the Indian outbreak of almost fifty years ago when the tribes assembled on the Little Big Horn and massacred the pursuing party under General Custer, there has never been a meeting of the tribes to approach the proportions of the one at Kayenta, the Indian trading post on the Navajo reservation in Arizona. Ten thousand members of the Apache, Navajo, Hopi, Supuais, Havasupais and Wallapais tribes are encamped there to take part in the motion picture production of "The Vanishing American," an epic story of the passing of the red man written by Zane Grey.

William K. Howard is making the production for Paramount, with Richard Dix in the title role, and Lois Wilson as leading lady. They are the only players to be named so far.

The assembling of the six Indian nations on the Navajo reservation was made possible, Paramount states, through the co-operation of Harvey K. Meyer, Indian agent, at Tuba, Arizona, and the Indian Department of the United States Government.

Record in Danger

First National Has Second Biggest Booking Week In Its History

First National bookings for the first week in June were the biggest in the history of the company with the single exception of one week last January when the Eschmann Month Drive was under way.

Beginning with June 1, when the field force had finished the Summer Play Date Drive for June, July and August bookings on current releases, the sales force throughout the country was let loose on First National's Winner Group of fifty-two pictures for the new season. While a large number of contracts on the Winner Group have been made previously, the salesmen had been concentrating upon sales of the Leader releases for summer showing.

With their first week's concerted movement for the sales of Winner pictures they rolled up an enormous volume of business, second only in results to the banner week of the Eschmann Month Drive. The result achieved is a splendid tribute to the confidence First National product has earned among the exhibitors of the country, and to the enthusiasm of the sales force in the box-office value of Winner Group pictures.

Announces Plans for Ray's Next

It is announced from the Chadwick Pictures home office that Charles Ray's next production for this concern will be another rural comedy drama of the type that brought this star fame. Jerome Storm, director of the Ray series will again wield the megaphone, under the supervision of Joseph De Grasse.

While the cast has not yet been announced it is almost certain that Duane Thompson, who made a great success of her part in the previous Ray production, "Some Pun'kins," will again play opposite the star in his second picture for Chadwick.

Robert Frazer in scenes in "The Keeper of the Bees," a forthcoming F. B. O. special.

Katherine Grant is Awarded 5-Year Contract by Roach

HAL ROACH has just notified the Pathe Home Office that he has awarded Katherine Grant a five-year contract because of her exceptional performances in the Hal Roach comedies distributed by Pathe.

Roach is very enthusiastic over his discovery of this blonde beauty of the screen and stated:

"Miss Grant's exceptional work before the camera has won her this long-term contract. Not only has she proved herself a comedienne of the first rank with a keen appreciation of comedy values but she possesses that subtle charm known as personality, and it gets over most effectively on the screen. In addition to her proved histrionic ability, she is one of the most attractive beauties appearing in motion pictures. I am sure that the theatregoing public will be glad to learn that we are assured of Miss Grant's appearance in our comedies for at least five years."

Pathe officials second Hal Roach's appreciation of Miss Grant's ability and the potency of her screen personality and are delighted over the signing of the contract which assures the appearances of this charming player in comedies on the Pathe release schedule for a long period of time. Branch managers and exhibitors have also recognized Miss Grant as an exceptional commedienne, and many complimentary words have been written about her in communications received by the Pathe Home Office in the past.

The Roach player has been declared to be the most perfect type of blond beauty for the screen. She is tall and athletic and is the possessor of very expressive blue eyes. Her acting ability is no doubt to a degree inherited as both her parents, Anita Lonzelle and J. E. Grant were on the stage. One of her famous relatives of the profession is William Lonzelle, who shone in "The Mission Play."

Miss Grant was born and educated in Los Angeles, attending the high school in that city. She paid particular attention to dramatics and it is a strange coincidence that she was in the same dramatic class at high school as Glenn Tryon, with whom she is now associated in Hal Roach Comedies.

Her stage debut was made in 1914 with Gus Edwards, famous discoverer of juvenile talent, at the Orpheum Theatre in Brooklyn. She later appeared at the head of her own company in "Midnight Frolics."

It was in 1921 that Miss Grant began her screen career as an extra in one of the "Our Gang" comedies at the Hal Roach studio. She played in Fox and Universal pictures and soon returned to the Roach lot. For some time she has been appearing in the supporting casts of the various Roach producing units making Pathe comedies.

Only recently, however, was it discovered that her screen talents were more than merely those of portraying leading roles and sympathetic parts. The discovery was made in a "Spat Family" comedy entitled "Wild Papa." Miss Grant gave such a striking performance in creating a new type of "vamp" that she almost "stole" the picture from her fellow players.

Some of her recent appearances in Hal Roach comedies on the Pathe program include "Isn't Life Terrible?" with Glenn Tryon and "What Price Goofy?" with Charley Chase, both two reelers.

Miss Grant is one of the most enthusiastic dance devotees on the Pacific Coast and not only does she dance at every opportunity for her own enjoyment, but she conducts a dancing school which has won a reputation for its instruction in the art of terpsichore. She also devotes much time to swimming and diving which are her second-choice hobbies and is proficient in practically all forms of athletics.

Undoubtedly, Miss Grant is unusually well qualified to carry out the ambitious plans that Hal Roach has for her in comedies and her work in new Pathe comedies will be watched with keen interest.

Rothafel Books "The Boomerang"

J. C. Bachmann, general manager of distribution of B. P. Schulberg Productions, Inc., announced that S. L. Rothafel has booked the special Schulberg screen version of "The Boomerang," the famous stage success produced by David Belasco from the manuscript by Winchell Smith and Victor Mapes. The picture will be the chief attraction on the program of the Capitol Theatre during the week of June 28th.

"The Boomerang" is one of the highlights on the current Schulberg program. Adapted from one of the most successful comedy dramas ever presented on the Broadway stage, it has been transferred to the screen under Gasnier's direction. The principals in its cast are Anita Stewart, Bert Lytell and Donald Keith, who is the new screen juvenile claimed by Schulberg to be one of the year's best finds. Other well known players in the production are Arthur Edmund Carew, Mary McAllister, Winter Hall, Ned Sparks and Philo McCollough.

Accoutrement of Canadian Mounted Sent to Tom Mix

WHEN Tom Mix was in Canada recently he was struck, as was very natural, by the saddle and other accoutrements used by the celebrated mounted police of our Northern neighbor. To a member of his party he expressed, in an offhanded manner, the wish that he owned one of them.

Imagine his surprise when, upon reaching home and opening a very large case that had been expressed to him from one of the northern most points of the Dominion, he gazed upon the object of his desire. Saddle and bridle and everything else was there and a little note which said:

"Sudbury, Ont.

"Dear Tom:

"Will you accept the enclosed from one of your admirers who considers herself forever indebted to you by reason of the hours of clean and wholesome entertainment you have afforded her through the medium of your pictures?

"For years I have been one of your followers, and when I heard you were coming to Canada, I traveled all the way down to Toronto to get a real 'close up' of you and see if you really looked as you do on the screen. You did not disappoint me is all I need say.

"But about this gift. I was standing right next to you the day you were in Toronto and heard you remark to one of your friends that you would like to have an outfit similar to the ones used by our brave mounted guardians of law.

"Maybe you have one of them by now, but I don't think you will refuse this one when you hear its history. It was the property of my brother, a man very much like the ones you portray in your pictures, who died (in the line of duty) at the hands of a band of human coyotes whom he was responsible for breaking up, thereby stopping their nefarious practices, which ranged from murder and woman slavery to petit larceny.

"It is practically new, as he had only bought it a short time before his untimely end.

"Please accept it and let it wear out in the service of humanity as he had planned it to.

"With best regards,

(Signed) "T. L. C."

Needless to say Tom was very much touched by the letter and accepted the gift from the unknown woman who preferred to have her identity hidden by the anonymity of initials.

Lloyd Editing and Titling Special, "Winds of Chance"

AFTER four months of traveling, locations and studio shots, Frank Lloyd has completed the filming of Rex Beach's epic of the Alaskan gold rush, "Winds of Chance," for First National release, and is now occupied in the editing and titling of the big Northern drama.

"Winds of Chance," handled in the big way Mr. Lloyd filmed the memorable "The Sea Hawk," represents the most pretentious exterior photoplay ever filmed on the West Coast and is also the most accurate and dramatic drama of its type to be undertaken.

Mr. Lloyd has taken his company, comprising such well known players as Anna Q. Nilsson, Viola Dana, Ben Lyon, Victor McLaglen, Dorothy Sebastian, Hobart Bosworth, Claude Gillingwater, John T. Murray, Philo McCollough, Fred Kohler, Charles Crockett, George Nichols and Larry Fisher, to eight locations representing more than 13,000 miles of travel and his locations have been typically Alaskan during four different seasons. They have varied from the wildest rapids in Western Canada to scenes on top of a mountain range at an altitude of over 9,800 feet.

"Winds of Chance" is one of the most popular and dramatic narratives which have come from the pen of the virile Rex Beach, and deals with the adventures of seven unique characters, all participants in the struggle for gold—Poleon, the giant French packer; Pierce Phillips, an American boy who falls a victim to sharpers and is forced to earn his way to happiness and success; Countess Courteau, an energetic woman whom Phillips loves; Sam Kirby and his daughter Rouletta, bent on making one more stake and then enjoying life (but who meet unexpected reverses), and To mand Jerry, two inseparable but incessantly fighting prospectors.

Loew-Metro Club Outing

The Loew-Metro-Goldwyn Club held its annual outing to Schenck Brothers Palisades Amusement Park, Thursday evening, June 18. It was the most successful party of the kind ever held by the club. Led by President Charlie Sonin, members and their guests left the Loew State Theatre building in a fleet of eight seightseeing buses, with a special police motorcycle escort and made a record breaking trip to Fort Lee ferry. More than four hundred attended the outing and enjoyed the various rides and other amusements at the famous resort on the Hudson River. Major Edward Bowes and Nicholas M. Schenck represented the officials of the combined organizations from which the membership is made up.

Plans for Alyce Mills

Alyce Mills, the B. P. Schulberg star, this week completed the leading role in F. B. O. special, "The Keeper of the Bees," and is now once more back on the Schulberg lot where she will probably be given her next part in "With This Ring," a Saturday Evening Post serial, now in book form, by Fanny Heaslip Lea. Fred C. Windemere is to direct as soon as the complete cast is selected.

Explosions on Board a Ship Thrill in "The Half-Way Girl"

THE New York daily newspapers carried columns of matter on the explosion of the United States Shipping Board vessel Corvallis, rechristened for the movies the Mandalay, when it was exploded last week 150 miles off Sandy Hook to afford picture goers a thrill in First National's production of "The Half-Way Girl," featuring Doris Kenyon and Lloyd Hughes.

The press associations also sent long accounts of the explosion and the attendant circumstances over the wires to their clients, so that "The Half-Way Girl" has received much preliminary publicity in nearly every city in the country.

The Corvallis, which was built by the United States Shipping Board at a cost of $900,000, was bought for the explosion by First National at a smaller figure. Earl Hudson, under whose supervision the picture is being produced and the explosion was arranged, states that the vessel and the incidental costs and expenses mounted to $125,000.

Five tons of dynamite were placed in the bow and five tons in the hold of the ship, as well as 1,000 pounds of blasting powder in the superstructure. The vessel was towed out to sea 125 miles from Sandy Hook. Alfred Sorenson and his son, William, both noted dynamite experts, were engaged to superintend the explosion. Everything was in readiness for the blast when the United States Coast Guard cutter Seneca put in appearance and ordered that the Corvallis, or Mandalay, be towed 25 miles further out to sea.

The ship sank five minutes after the charges of dynamite were set off and many thrilling shots of the explosion and sinking of the ship were obtained. The tug boats engaged by First National to carry its actors, the crew and invited newspaper men put back to port after the explosion, but the Seneca again appeared and ordered that one of the tugs return and blow up the large pieces of wreckage that might cause damage to shipping. The tug left before the task was finished; it was pursued by the Seneca and a shot from a four-inch shell sent across her bows. This time the tug remained at the task set by the commander of the Seneca for twenty-four hours, or until the Atlantic was free of the wreckage of the Corvallis.

The New York newspapers and press associations sent reporters and photographers to cover the filming of this sequence for "The Half-Way Girl" and they found good "copy" in it.

"Hurricane Horseman"

A wire from Lester F. Scott, Jr. of Action Pictures, Inc., which produces the pictures released by Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation states that they have started production on "The Hurricane Horseman," which will be the second of the series of eight five reel Acrobatic Stunt-Thrillers featuring the new Western Star Wally Wales.

"How do you like my new mate?" shouted Captain J. Pendlebury of the Dollar Line steamer, President Adams, as he posed with Doris Kenyon on board the Mandalay off Sandy Hook. Captain Pendlebury commanded the Mandalay for Earl Hudson during the filming of exciting episodes of "The Half-Way Girl," in which Miss Kenyon is co-featured with Lloyd Hughes.

Campbell Signs Contract as Director for Arrow

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, President of Arrow Pictures Corporation, announces the signing of a contract with Major Maurice Campbell, under the terms of which Major Campbell will create four productions for Arrow release.

As a director of stage and screen successes, Major Campbell knows no superior. He has been functioning for more than twenty years and is responsible for the production of such stage successes as "Mistress Nell," with Henrietta Crossman, "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," which he produced in conjunction with David Belasco; "The Ghost Breaker," with H. B. Warner, and dozens of others.

Major Campbell for three years directed for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. In this way he renewed an association of many years previous, for at one time he and Jesse Lasky, Vice-President of Famous Players, wrote and directed many notable vaudeville acts which travelled over the Keith and Orpheum circuits. Among his outstanding triumphs with Lasky as a picture director, were "The Exciters," in which appeared Bebe Daniels and Antonio Moreno; "Burglar Proof," "Two Weeks With Pay," "Ducks and Drakes," "The Speed Girl," "First Love," "The March Hare" and "Oh! Lady, Lady." This list could be lengthened to include many of the greatest triumphs of the Famous Players organization.

Major Campbell is conceded to have been chiefly instrumental in developing Miss Daniels to the important position she occupies today. He gave up his affiliation with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation so that he might be free to make his own pictures. In his opinion, Independence is an absolute necessity if the best results are to be achieved. In a recent interview he said:

"The 'factory' method of production is absolutely wrong and does not permit a director to give of his best. For instance, a large company has several stars, all on salary. Each story produced must be selected to fit those stars. If it isn't in shape to do so as originally written, it must, of necessity, be altered—and often in aftering, the damage is done. I do not decry the star system. There will always be stars, because the public demand star personalities, but it is much better to select the stars to fit the stories than vice versa."

Sada Cowan and Howard Higgin, collaborating scenarists, have been signed by Robert Kane to prepare the script of "Invisible Wounds," a First National picture.

DE MILLE'S NEWEST BEAUTY

From translating Greek for President Coolidge to acting in the movies for Cecil B. De Mille is a long jump but one successfully achieved by Rita Carita, recently signed for De Mille's cinema stock company. Miss Carita, a brunette, was Greek interpreter for Coolidge while he was Governor of Massachusetts. Her entertainment talents, however, were not to be denied and after seeing her dance, De Mille secured her services for his productions. Her first appearance is with Leatrice Joy in "Hell's Highroad," directed by Rupert Julian.

Will Make Another Production for Associated Exhibitors—His "Under the Rouge" A Fall Release

Louis Moomaw, the director of "Chechacos," the first picture made in Alaska which was distributed by Associated Exhibitors, will make a third picture for the releasing organization. Moomaw left New York last week for the Coast to begin work on the production, which will be based upon the theme "how to train a wife."

Moomaw's second picture for Associated Exhibitors, "Under the Rouge," will be released in the Fall. It was filmed in Oregon and is replete with beautiful scenery, including the headwaters of the Columbia River near the Canadian border. Tom Moore and Eileen Percy head the cast which also includes James Mason, Mary Alden, Chester Conklin, Claire de Lorez, Eddie Phillips, Tom Gallery, Bruce Guerin, Carmelia Geraghty, William V. Mong, Peggy Provost, Stanley Blystone, Aileen Manning, and William Dills.

"Thank You" Progressing

Production is well under way at the Fox Film Corporation West Coast Studios on "Thank You," the John Golden stage success which is being picturized under the direction of John Ford. The first week or so was spent at Crater Camp in the Sierra Madre in Southern California, where many of the exteriors of Ford's preceding picture "Lightnin" were taken.

One of the best all-star casts ever assembled for a Fox picture has been selected for "Thank You." George O'Brien is playing the leading male role, with Jacqueline Logan cast as the heroine. In the supporting cast are Alec J. Francis, J. Farrell MacDonald, Cyril Chadwick, James Neill, Edith Bostwick and Frankie Bailey.

Henry Ginsberg Announces "Wreckage" on Banner Program

PRODUCTION on "Salvage," second Banner Production for the Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation, started recently, is well under way and elaborate sets are being constructed for the big scenes of the picture. In a telegram received from Ben Verschleiser, producer, he states that he is assured that this will be one of the most pretentious features that he has ever made.

Every attention to detail is being given to the filming of the widely read Izola Forrester serial, to be made in book form this fall simultaneous with the release of the picture.

"Wreckage" is a story of the sea and the title was selected in preference to the original title owing to the fact that "Salvage" had already been used in connection with a previous picture. To avoid confusion a contest was held with a cash prize offered for the best substitute title.

In this contest the students of the class in advanced photo play competition entered and the winning title "Wreckage" was chosen. Unfortunately, two contestants chose the same title so the officials of Banner and Henry Ginsberg decided to give each a cash prize.

The cast of "Wreckage" consists of May Allison, Rosemary Theby, John Miljan, Holmes Herbert and an excellent supporting cast. The production is featured with a large supporting cost and gorgeous scenes of society life. The thrill scene of "Wreckage" is the storm at sea, for which elaborate preparations are now being made.

Henry Ginsberg of the Ginsberg Corporation who left last week for the coast will be on "location" during the finishing of the picture and during his stay will confer with Sam Briskin of Banner Productions on details relative to the balance of the season's schedule.

Schulberg Pictures Plan to Discourage Censorship

THAT censorship could be obliterated completely in one year's time by a unanimous resolve on the part of the producers to film only the right type of story, is the opinion of B. P. Schulberg, who says that he will endeavor to make his eighteen Preferred Pictures for next season a concrete force in combating those laws.

"Our 1925-1926 program will be absolutely censorproof," promises Mr. Schulberg. "At the same time each production will retain the dramatic verve so indispensable to box-office success. It is my determination not to allow a single trace of the objectionable to enter one of these stories. This will not only keep them intact in the states where censorship exists but will protect exhibitors who can feel assured that the audience's good taste will never be offended.

"The suggestive story, the risque scene has never been popular with the vast majority to which the successful film must appeal. Plays like "Shenandoah," which have been seen by millions, novels like "With This Ring," which have appeared in Saturday Evening Post, or "Lew Tyler's Wives," originally published in Pictorial Review, prove by their previous popularity that they are sound, wholesome entertainment that combine dramatic interest with good taste. "Real story strength is what these pictures will consist of—instead of an attempt to bolster up a wabbling plot with sensational touches which all too often prove disgusting to the conservative patron. Careful direction and thoroughly delicate handling in these eighteen pictures will, I hope, evidence my claim that a film does not have to resort to indecency to sustain a high pitch of interest.

"I would like to see some concerted action on the part of all supervisors of production to make the coming year a year of clean pictures —not only for the effect it would have against organized censorship but for the general good will it would create with all entertainment lovers."

Gertrude Olmstead Signed

Will Have the Feminine Lead Opposite Charles Ray in Chadwick Picture

I. E. Chadwick, president of Chadwick Pictures Corporation, has engaged Gertrude Olmstead for the leading feminine role opposite Charles Ray in the latter's second rural comedy for this company.

Miss Olmstead, a star in her own right, has won a large following through her many successful pictures.

Jerome Storm, who directed "Some Pun'kins," Ray's first picture for Chadwick, as well as more than twenty of the star's most successful productions, will again direct under the supervision of Joseph De Grasse. Production will be started within another week.

"Winner Group" Bookings

Field Force Sells First Nationals in 166 of 253 Cities of More Than 25,000

Since the announcement of its product for the new season less than two months ago, First National's Winner Group of pictures, in which is included all of its product except the specials for the year beginning September 1st, 1925, and ending August 30th, 1926, has been booked in 166 out of a total of 253 cities in the United States and Canada having a population of 25,000 or more.

This unusually fine record is due to the enthusiasm of the field force for E. A. Eschmann's sales policy on the Winner Group and to the appeal of the pictures scheduled to the exhibitors who have made money the past year by playing First National product.

John Golden, producer of "Lightnin'," "Seventh Heaven," "The First Year" and other stage successes which William Fox soon will produce for the screen (left) and George O'Brien, William Fox star. O'Brien is scheduled to play the leading male role in one or more of the Golden plays when they go into production for the screen. Incidentally Mr. Golden informed O'Brien that if he ever tired of the movies there would be a welcome sign hung up for him on the legitimate stage.

New Artclass Pictures

Stories for Buddy Roosevelt, Buffalo Bill, Jr., and Wally Wales Selected

Louis Weiss, Managing Director of Artclass Pictures corporation announces that Lester F. Scott, Jr., of Action Pictures, Inc., is completing plans for the third picture in each of the series of eight five reel Western features starring Buddy Roosevelt, Buffalo Bill, Jr., and Wally Wales, respectively.

Stories have been selected and after continuities have been completed the casting will be started.

It is Mr. Weiss' policy to have as many of the pictures in each series ready as soon before the actual release date as possible so the pictures may be in the exchange's hands to show to the exhibitor as long before the play date as possible. It being his desire to let the exhibitor know exactly what he is getting when he signs on the dotted line.

Further announcements in regards to these pictures can be expected in the near future.

"The Blood Bond"

William Steiner Announces New Western Starring Leo Maloney

William Steiner, the independent producer, last week announced that the new Leo Maloney feature, "The Blood Bond," written by Ford Beebe, is one of the very best things of its kind, and one of Maloney's best.

The story gives "a new slant" on the latent possibilities of the Western picture, with its rare blending of humor with intense dramatic action.

"Parisian Love"

J. Gordon Russell will be seen as the heavy in Gasnier's forthcoming B. P. Schulberg production, "Parisian Love," a melodrama of the French underworld from the novel by F. Oakley Crawford. Others in the cast of this picture, the initial Schulberg release for the coming season, are Clara Bow, Lou Tellegen, Donald Keith and Otto Matthieson

Strong Cast in Beck-Arrow Picture, "The Primrose Path"

ARTHUR BECK, who is engaged in making "The Primrose Path," to be released on The Golden Arrow Franchise, has announced the complete cast of his production, an all-artist aggregation, is headed by Clara Bow and Wallace Mac Donald.

Miss Bow, who got her start on the screen as a result of winning one of the Brewster Beauty Contests, has forged rapidly to the front until today there is no more popular engenue before the camera.

Wallace MacDonald, too, occupies a prominent place in the affections of the motion picture goers. Playing opposite Norma Talmadge in "The Lady," he registered such a triumph that he was immediately engaged to play opposite Pola Negri. He will also be seen shortly in an important role in "Lightnin'," the screen version of one of the greatest stage success.

Stuart Holmes, screen "heavy" of a thousand successes, is in "The Primrose Path"; so, too, are Tom Santschi and Arlene Pretty. George Irving, an actor-director of great prominence, was seen last in the central role of Jane Crew's production, "The Goose Hangs High," prior to which he was himself a director of many important screen successes of which the outstanding one was "Ten Nights In a Barroom;" Lydia Knott, an extremely clever character woman, Master Pat Moore, an amazingly gifted youngster, Templer Saxe and Mike Donlin (Mike contributed much of the humor to Reginald Denny's "Oh Doctor")

Harry O. Hoyt, director of "The Lost World," wields the megaphone for "The Primrose Path," which, according to reports, received from Mr. Hoyt, will reach the peak of achievement in his directorial career.

Short Subjects Listed on New Pathe Programs

PATHE will release another of the "Stereoscopik" novelty reels entitled "Ouch!" in the program of short-subjects for the week of July 5, which also includes two Hal Roach comedies, a chapter of "Sunken Silver," the current Pathe serial, the Pathe Review, "Topics of the Day," "Aesop's Film Fables" and the Pathe News.

"Ouch!" is the third "Stereoscopik" to be released and is reported to be even more entertaining than its predecessors, "Zowie" and "Luna-Cy." "Isn't Life Terrible?" is the title of the Hal Roach two-reel comedy which presents Charley Chase in a series of vacation experiences that are right in season. Katherine Grant, the blonde beauty whom Hal Roach has recently signed to a five-year contract, appears as Chase's charming wife. "Chasing the Chaser" is a one-reel comedy with Jimmie Finlayson. "The Secret Panel" is the latest chapter of the Patheserial "Sunken Silver" adapted from Albert Payson Terhune's story, "Black Caesar's Clan."

Pathe Review No. 27 brings a trio of entertaining and instructive subjects: "The Mists of Morning," views of Nature's blanket over a mountain lake; "St Louis—the Mound City," another of the unique Pathe-color series on American cities; and "The Fossil Fields," another chapter of the "Origin of Man" series, being the picture-log of the Roy Chapman Andrews Expedition into Mongolia. "Wine, Women and Song," one of Paul Terry's "Aesop's Film Fables," "Topics of the Day" and two up-to-the-minute issues of Pathe News completed the Pathe program of the week of July 5.

Second Jane Novak Vehicle Bought by Whitman Bennett

WHITMAN BENNETT announces that he has purchased "Led Astray" as the second vehicle for Jane Novak, who, under Wilfred Noy's direction, is to make a series of four productions for release on The Golden Arrow Franchise.

"Led Astray" is a screen adaptation of Alfonse Daudet's world-known novel "The Little Parish Church."

Monsieur Daudet is best known to fame as the author of "Sappho," perhaps the most startling and original play of its generation. It is said, however, that "The Little Church Parish" is in every respect worthy to stand side by side with "Sappho" in human interest, pathos and dramatic appeal.

Camera work has just begun at the Whitman Bennett Studios on the first Jane Novak picture, This is "The Substitute Wife" from the novelette by Katharine Smith. Opposite Miss Novak is Niles Welch, who, with Madge Kennedy, has just completed work on "Scandal Street."

"The Substitute Wife" will be the last production to be made at Whitman Bennett's Yonkers Studios. After its completion, Mr. Bennett will remove his activities to the newly acquired Glendale Studios at Glendale, Long Island, where he expects to begin production about the middle of July.

NORMA TALMADGE

In her production of "My Woman," for United Artists Corporation, she will have Thomas Meighan for her chief support.

"Baree" Serialization

Curwood Story in 824 Newspapers "Tops" "Captain Blood" Record

The serialization of "Baree, Son of Kazan," the James Oliver Curwood novel, in newspapers throughout the United States and Canada, has reached the marvelous total of 824 publications. This tops the record made by "Captain Blood," by Rafael Sabatini, and is a prediction, Warner Bros. believe, of the showing likely to be made when other Warner stories are offered under a schedule enabling editors to plan their year's fiction ahead.

The circulations of the newspapers using "Baree, Son of Kazan" reaches the astounding total of 8,000,093 copies. As advertising experts figure five readers to each copy of a newspaper, it is estimated that readers of the publications that have printed, or are printing, this serialization number more than 40 millions.

Al Raboch a Director

The policy of giving young men every opportunity has become firmly established at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios and in the wake of the success of such young directors as Alf Goulding, Josef von Sternberg, and William Wellman comes the announcement that another young director has been signed.

Al Raboch is the latest directorial acquisition at the Culver City studios, and according to an announcement made by Louis B. Mayer, has been signed on a long term contract.

Warners New Corporation

Warner Bros. Hollywood Theatre Corp., incorporated in Delaware, has been authorized to do business in California, according to advices from Sacramento this week. The total capital stock is given as $500,000 and 15,000 shares of no par value. This is the unit that will operate the new Warner Theatre in Hollywood, the deal for which was closed two weeks ago. It is to be the first of the first-run houses that the Warner Bros. are contemplating at various points where their product is not now shown.

Two Stars in "My Woman"

Norma Talmadge and Thomas Meighan Will Illuminate United Artists' Special

Thomas Meighan last week stated that his contract with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation ran to the end of this year and admitted he has arranged to make a picture with Norma Talmadge after his contract had expired. This production will be called "My Woman."

"My arrangement with Joseph Schenck is for only one picture," said Mr. Meighan. "After that my plans are indefinite."

Mr. Meighan's contract calls for two more pictures for Famous Players.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation issued this comment:

"Mr. Meighan has been under contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for a number of years, and during that time his relations with the company's officials have been entirely happy and friendly. Mr. Meighan wishes to emphasize that these cordial relations prevail today and the publication of statements that he has quit Famous Players is an injustice to himself and to the company's executives."

It is expected, in some circles, that Mr. Meighan will renew his contract with Famous.

Released by Century

The current Century Comedy release, "Married Neighbors," is a hilarious marital mix-up made with Billy Engle and Hilliard Karr in the principal male roles. Constance Darling, one of Century's leading commediennes, has the principal female role. The comedy was directed by Charles Lamont.

Pathe Lists Lloyd's Latest

Pathe announces that September 20 has been definitely set as the date upon which Harold Lloyd's latest and greatest feature comedy, "The Freshman," will be given its national release.

Exhibitors will find that in "The Freshman" they have a super-attraction with unlimited box-office potentialities, released at just the opportune time for it to be exploited and played with greatest profit. In fact, it was only after most careful consideration and deliberation upon the box-office angles of "The Freshman" that the release date was definitely set.

Football plays an important part in the new Lloyd feature comedy; and September 20, just prior to the opening of the annual gridiron season, seemed the most logical time to give the film its national release. At that time football will be in the news—the papers will be full of the gridiron plans of the college, high school and other elevens.

Lloyd is supported by Jobyna Ralston as leading lady, Brooks Benedict as the heavy, Pat Harmon as the coach, Hazel Keener, James Anderson, Joseph Harrington and scores of young screen luminaries of both sexes who appear as college boys and coeds.

THOMAS MEIGHAN

Paramount star will play in a Norma Talmadge production, "My Woman," for United Artists program.

"The Desert Demon"

Print of Artclass Picture Featuring Buffalo Bill, Jr., Reaches New York

Louis Weiss, Managing Director of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, announces that the negative and first print of "The Desert Demon" the second of the eight five-reel Thunderbolt Thrillers featuring Buffalo Bill, Jr. has been received in New York.

This is a story of a stolen mine, located on the edge of a great desert. The story itself is most absorbing and the desert shots include some scenery and localities which have never before been shown on the screen. Buffalo Bill, Jr. is called on to do some very fast riding and is equal in every way to the reputation which he has built up for himself.

The cast includes Betty Morrisey, Frank Ellis, Harry Todd, Jack O'Brien, Frank Austin, Raye Hampton, Margaret Martin, Charles Colby.

The direction was in the hands of Richard Thorpe. The story was written by Alex McLaren and the continuity by Betty Burbridge.

Douglas Gilmore Signed by Mayer

It is practically impossible for a handsome leading man of the stage to remain in the legitimate drama these days when motion picture producers are keeping one eye constantly open for screen possibilities.

Now it is Douglas Gilmore who has signed a contract with Louis B. Mayer during that executive's recent trip to New York, and is already in Culver City where he will start work in one of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's forthcoming productions. Gilmore is one of New York's most popular leading men.

Mary Brian in Lead Role

Mary Brian will play the leading role opposite Raymond Griffith in his first starring picture, "On Dress Parade," states Paramount. The supporting cast includes Joseph Dowling, Kathleen Kirkham, Edgar Norton, Jacqueline Gadsden, Nigel de Bruliere, Gustav Von Seifertitz, Carl Stockdale, Gerald Austin, Lincoln Plummer and Michael Dark.

CAROL DEMPSTER
Featured in D. W. Griffith's "Sally of the Sawdust," for United Artists release.

Increased Bookings Follow Century Comedy Previews

BELIEVING that the exhibitors of the country are paying far more attention to their short comedy bookings than heretofore, the Century Film Corporation, of which Julius and Abe Stern are the heads, have inaugurated a new method in marketing the Century Comedies distributed by Universal. It consists of the establishment in each Universal exchange of a schedule of immediate pre-views for next season's Century Comedies, extending as far ahead as the December and January releases.

In discussing this innovation, which puts Century Comedies on the same sales footing as feature pictures, H. M. Herbel, sales manager for Century, calls attention to the fact that since this plan was inaugurated several weeks ago, sales on Century Comedies for next season have shown a decided increase, both in volume and in price.

"During the past few weeks most of the important key centers throughout the United States and Canada have been closed on Century Comedies," he said. "This goes to prove that the exhibitor realizes more and more the importance of selecting good, substantial Short Subjects to accompany his features.

"We are finding out that the exhibitor is just as willing to preview a comedy as a feature, and that in contracting for a season's output he wants to know what he is getting. He does not want to buy a cat in a bag on his comedies any more than he wants to buy a block of features sight unseen.

"By unprecendented production activity this spring, and by close co-operation with the Universal laboratories, we have been able to get far ahead on our comedy schedule. We now have Century Comedies in the Universal exchanges as far ahead as the first of the year. In fact, we have been that far ahead with sample prints for previewing for the last thirty days. And it is in this thirty days that we have noticed the increased booking most strikingly.

"We attribute a large part of increased sales to the improved quality of our product,, of course. Never before in the history of the Century Film Corporation have we had such a line-up for fall. Exhibitors throughout the country are undoubtedly pleased with this line-up, which includes twelve Buster Brown Comedies, twelve Wanda Wiley Comedies, Twelve Edna Marian Comedies, six Eddie Gordon, six Al Alts and four made by Charles King. The Buster Browns, adapted from R. F. Outcault's famous newspaper comic strips, are proving a revelation. They have turned out to be of exceptional first-run value."

Macfadden Starts Advertising First True Story Production

THE first "broadside" of national publicity and advertising to publicize the Bernarr Macfadden productions being made by his own company, the True Story Film Company was begun this month in the Macfadden publications.

Full page advertising is being carried in the True Story magazine, Dream World, True Romances, Fiction Lovers, True Detective, Modern Marriage, Dance Lovers, Movie Weekly, and Sportlife.

The entire editorial page of True Story magazine in the August issue is taken up with an announcement of the latest Macfadden enterprise, True Story Film Company, and what it means both to the magazine field and the motion picture industry.

The colored cover of True Story magazine for September will carry a picture of Anne Cornwall, who enacts the leading feminine role in the first Macfadden production, "The Wrongdoers." In addition to this cover there will be a full page advertisement of the production.

True Story for September also will have the first installment of the fictionized version of the true story from which the motion picture of "The Wrongdoers" was made. This story will be divided into three instalments, each instalment to be featured story for the month in which it is published. Preceding the story and at the end of each instalment will be an editor's note to the reader that the story has been made into a motion picture production and that it will be available at the reader's favorite theatre.

Bachmann Appoints Rollo

J. G. Bachmann, general manager of distribution for B. P. Schulberg Productions, this week announced the appointment of Stanley J. Rollo to the sales staff of his company. Mr. Rollo has long been identified with film distributions, since the days of Mutual Film Corporation of which he was general manager. He has recently been handling the sale of various state rights product. Mr. Rollo left New York this week to visit the exchanges of B. P. Schulberg Productions.

Used Goerz Raw Stock

Roald Amundsen took Goerz motion picture raw stock with him in his dash toward the North Pole, according to a letter from Ferdinand Schurman, president of the Fish-Schurman Corporation of New York, sole distributors for it in the United States. The MacMillan-Navy expedition also will use Goerz raw stock, having purchased it from Fish Schurman.

Six of the Pathe Juvenile stars in "Our Gang" in scenes in "Official Officers."

$1 for Your Time

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Picture World recognises the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts alter the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Competency

There are still those who imagine there is no need for expert competency in the theatre projection room. A rapidly decreasing number of theatre managers still honestly believe that a twelve year old boy can, with a few hours training, "run the machine" just as well as any one else—which is measurably true if the item of depreciation be ignored, merely serves to emphasize the foolishness of "operating" or "running" a machine is all there is to projection, and the utter lack of vision (I almost said utter lack of sense) of those men engaged in projection who still persist in the "I'm a machine operator" line of talk.

However, be all that as it may, a queer thing has recently been brought to my attention, which goes to prove that even competency in the handling of machinery is important, and the projection demands competency in that respect.

Observe this theatre. Looks like a pretty large, rather high grade house does it not? and it is all of that. Observe the little narrow, contracted "coop" stuck up in the balcony. We must not criticize its location, though, for while I think it has a too-heavy projection angle, still had this theatre been in New York City it probably would have been placed just under the highest portion of the ceiling, on the theory that the higher the better, and picture distortion be damned.

But here is the joke of it all. This fine large theatre, seating, I would imagine, at least two or three thousand, is in South America, and its Power Six B projectors are hand driven, because exhibitors feel motors to be unsafe in charge of the men available for projection. So after all, punk as may be the skill and knowledge of SOME of our United States and Canadian projectionists, I guess even our worst is better than the best available to these South American theatres, though mind you I am not either saying or insinuating that all the men of that great half of America are in that class. Better projection pays, and to get better projection, sometimes it is necessary to get a better projectionist.

Study This

Recently while in Schenectady I called upon Mr. W. D. A. Ryan, head of the General Electric Company Illuminating Laboratories, to discuss with him certain things in connection with the high intensity arc. I found Mr. Ryan to be not only a most able illuminating engineer, but an affable gentleman as well. I enjoyed the hour I spent with him immensely.

Mr. Ryan explained some things in connection with the high intensity to me and gave me an article which I shall print as a whole, save for that portion which is merely descriptive of the methods employed at the Illuminating Laboratory for measuring the light intensity of the arc.

I would strongly recommend to you that you take this home and STUDY IT. It contains some matter concerning the importance of working high intensity arc carbons to CAPACITY, but not over-capacity, which will, I imagine, surprise some of you. Here is the article:

Bluebook School

Question No. 316—Often in calculations we have to "square the diameter." How is it done? Give examples. What is a kilowatt hour?

Question No. 317—As applied to motors or generators, what is meant by the term "efficiency"? How is it expressed?

Question No. 318—Suppose you had a motor-generator set and wished to know the exact per cent of efficiency at which it was operating. How would you proceed to find out?

Note: We shall now consider electric generators or dynamos. Some of the questions asked have been asked before, but I believe it well to handle this subject as a whole.

Question No. 319—Upon what law is the action of an electric dynamo based?

Question No. 320—Explain the action of an elementary dynamo armature.

Some Features of the High Intensity Motion Picture Arc

FRANK A. BENFORD

Physicist, Illuminating Engineering Laboratory General Electric Company

There has appeared on the market within the last few years a new type of projection arc that holds great promise for the future. It is a distinct step in advance of the common carbon arc, and as it is still being studied there is every reason for looking for further advance. This is the "high intensity" or gaseous arc, first brought out for military purposes by Mr. Heinrich Beck some ten years ago. As not everyone is acquainted with this extremely interesting arc, a few words describing its characteristics may not be out of place.

The positive electrode of the high intensity arc is smaller than that of a plain carbon arc of the some current, but the core is larger and is heavily impregnated with salts that vaporize at a high temperature. The current passes through this core as it flows into the crater and heats it to a still higher temperature. Pure carbon can be raised to a temperature of about 3800° A. under ordinary conditions and no amount of increased current will raise the temperature above this point. The core gas of the high intensity arc is not hampered by any such fixed limit, and there is evidence that the gas reaches a temperature of at least 5500° A., or about that of the sun. Photometric measurements have shown the center of the gas crater to be over five times as bright as carbon at its best brilliancy. The total amount of light is not five times, however, because the crater is smaller and the projection efficiency is between two and three times that of the plain carbon arc.

There have been gaseous arcs on the market for a number of years but the Beck arc is the first one in which the gases are sufficiently stable to be used for projection purposes. By making the positive core half the diameter of the shell, baking the shell as hard as possible, and having a number of other features such as diameter of negative and angle between axes of electrodes all adjusted properly, a deep crater will be caused to form in the end of the positive electrode. This crater is almost a hemisphere in form, being slightly more than half the diameter in depth, and the walls are very thin. The carbon is rotated slowly so that all sides burn equally and the crater is kept symmetrical with the axis of the electrode. The gas from the core fills this crater and the current passing through the gas causes it to reach such a high brilliancy that the carbon wall seems dark by comparison. The gas, being confined by the crater walls, is much more stable than if it were out in the open and the use of luminous gas for motion picture projection thus becomes possible.

The temperature of the arc is variable and by raising or lowering the current the brilliancy of the gas can be changed. At the same time the crater diameter and depth will be altered and the stability of the gas will become less as the current is raised. The upper limit of current may be determined by the gas stability or by the rate of carbon consumption. As a rule the rated current of a given electrode should not be exceeded on account of the flicker set up by the gas that is then given off in greater volume than can properly be contained within the crater. It is true that at higher currents the volume of crater increases but not at the same rate as the evolution of gas and as a result the gas boils over the sides in place of escaping out of the top of the crater in a steady stream.

One of the most interesting features of this arc is the manner in which the various electromagnetic forces may be used to control the convection currents set up by the hot gases. The negative electrode is somewhat smaller than used with the ordinary arc, and the ionized carbon vapor leaves the tip of the electrode with considerable velocity. The gas evolved from the positive core has but little velocity so that it has small tendency to flow outward and if the stream of negative gas is directed properly it will oppose the escape of the core gas and keep the crater filled with the luminous gas that is the real source of the light. We are dealing here with gases that are, at any given instant, of extremely small mass, and the electromagnetic and convection forces are relatively large. It is thus apparent that the core gas particularly may be driven about almost at will by using the forces available in the arc.

The angle at which the negative electrode is placed with respect to the positive electrode is determined by the service for which the arc is intended. For military searchlights the negative axis is depressed 14° 30′ below the positive axis which coincided with that of the searchlight. This has been found by trial to be the angle that gives the best results in efficiency and steadiness. For studio lamps the negative is placed 30° below the axis in order to secure unobstructed radiation, while for projection lamps the angle must be increased to 60° to keep the condensers free from shadows.

It is rather a fortunate circumstance that the arcs of 50 and 75 amperes are not so sensitive to the angle of the negative as those of higher currents. As the current increases, the electromagnetic force due to the relation of the arc stream to the surrounding magnetic field grows at a rapid rate and while arcs up to 450 amperes have been operated and tested, still there are many unsolved problems at these currents.

With a given angle of negative the height of negative, or point where the negative axis pierces the plane of the crater, must be carefully selected. A change of 1 mm. (0.04″) is of importance in the arcs of 120 and 150 amperes, while the 50 and 75 ampere arcs should be within 2 mm. of the specified height. If the negative is improperly set so that the stream of carbon gas from the negative does not strike the crater opening in the right direction the luminous core gas will be agitated instead of stabilized, or perhaps driven rapidly out of the crater. It is possible by giving the negative electrode a side tilt of several millimeters to increase the diameter and depth of the crater to some extent though the unsymmetrical direction of the negative gas causes it to drive the luminous core gas out of one side of the crater and the efficiency of the arc is lowered.

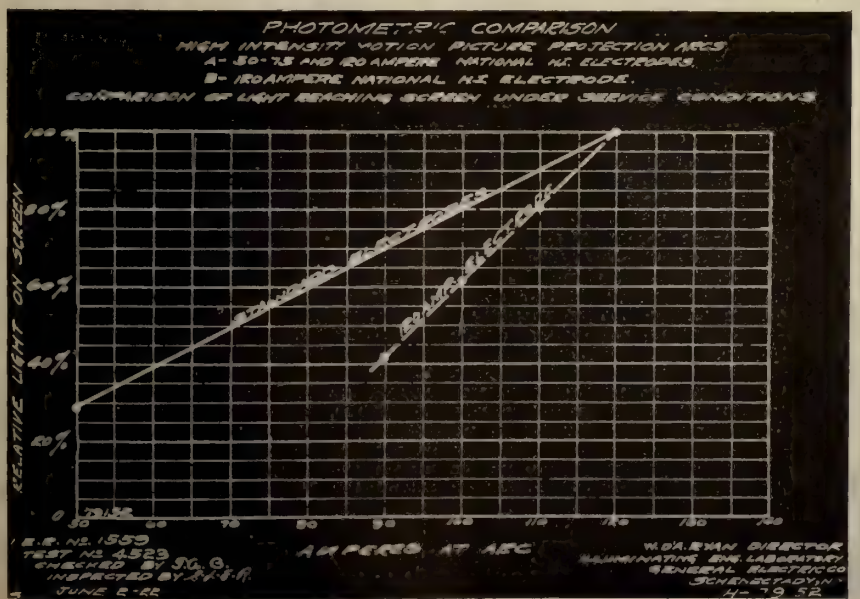
These various features of the gaseous arc have been gone into in some detail in order to bring out more clearly the fact that the high intensity arc is radically different from the plain carbon arc and in service and testing the arc must be treated differently. For example, it is common practice to have control handles on both carbons of the plain arc so that they can be moved around and thus keep the crater properly formed. The high intensity electrodes on the other hand are held in a fixed position that must not be varied. The crater of the plain carbon must be oversize so that the operator will not have to adjust too often for the movement of the crater. The high intensity crater being fixed in diameter needs but little extra size in order to cover the screen because it is held in position and once adjusted does not readily get out of alignment.

Subject of Study

The high intensity arc has been the subject of a vast amount of study and experimentation. One of the latest and most interesting experiments was an exploration of the current-light characteristic. It was particularly desired to find how a 120 ampere electrode operated at say 90 amperes compared with an electrode designed for 90 amperes. Many of the picture houses have supply and converter equipment that is limited in capacity and they are thus not free to operate under the best conditions. It is often the case that 90 or 100 amperes is the limit of current and the lamp in this case is run far below rating. The attached curve shows what happens under these conditions.

Details of Tests

In making these tests the lamp was equipped with standard condensers and the light was projected as previously described. The 120 ampere electrodes were operated at 120, 110, 100 and 90 amperes. Taking the light received on the screen at the highest current as 100% the other currents gave 81%, 62% and 41%. We may, therefore, say that when near normal rating the light falls off 2.3 times as fast as the current. Thus, if the current is lowered by 10 per cent. the light falls off 23 per cent. If the current is dropped to 90 amperes, a decrease of 25 per cent, the light will decrease 59 per cent. If, on the other hand, an electrode designed for 90 amperes were used, the loss of light would be only 30 per cent. We may make the comparison in another way. A 75 ampere standard electrode at 75 amperes will give as much light on the screen as a 120 ampere electrode at 97 amperes. There are many factors to be considered in an actual installation that have not been mentioned here, but the figures given above show that in choosing the lamp or the current the high intensity arc must be considered as a new and different light to which the older rules of arc practice do not apply.



Wrong Voltage

From E. D. Quezada, of Quezada Brothers, Cine Hildago, El Tigre, Sonora, Mexico, comes the following:

I want to ask a question which I don't know if you will be kind enough to answer, but here it goes just the same.

We have a Ft. Wayne A. C. to D. C. motor generator set, and are unable to make it work here. The motor is an induction type, number 799,491, Type K T—4—3—1,800; Form C, Cycles 60, Phase 3, H. P. 3, Speed 1,800 no load, Full load, not indocated.

The generator is Number 501,119, I. S., 7452, Frame 3, Type E. F., Form 2, K. W. 1.9, Amp. 25, Speed 1,800, Volts no load, 90-110; Full load 55.

You will note that the motor is a 3 phase 220 volt machine. We have only 110 volt supply here. It delivers 1,800 R. P. M. in the generator, which is the proper speed marked on it.

Have tried it with a rheostat, a compensarc and finally with electric bulbs put up on a bracket, but it only shows a very small spark at the carbons. Tell us: Is it the low voltage at the induction motor, or is it the resistance which is the trouble. It registers from 13 to 18 amperes at the ammeter when the carbons are together, but no light at all. Please give us an explanation of this matter, as we just cannot solve the problem.

Simple

The thing is simple, provided your 110 volt current is 3-phase, which important point you have neglected to state. If you had a steam engine rated to deliver maximum capacity at say 80 pounds steam pressure, you would not expect to get much at 40 pounds, would you? Well, that is precisely what you have—an induction motor designed to operate at maximum capacity, which you are trying to operate on exactly half that pressure—voltage.

BUT your current may be single or two-phase, which would still further lower the power of the motor, since it is a 3-phase motor. It will run up to full speed at no load. Certainly! Why not. It is not pulling anything then, except the internal friction of the machine itself, plus the slight amount of power necessary to magnetize it. The instant you bring the carbons into contact, however, you give it full load. The steam engine might pull itself and the shafting at full speed with only 40 pounds steam pressure, but the instant you put it down to real work it would slow down. It won't pull it because there is not sufficient pressure. Well, there is not sufficient electrical pressure (voltage) in your case. True it might pull the load of a few incandescent lamps, though I would not myself expect it to do even that.

I shall send your letter to the Ft. Wayne General Electric Works, Ft. Wayne, Indiana, suggesting that they correspond with you, provided there is any way in which your outfit can be exchanged or changed to be used on 220—which latter I very much doubt.

As an afterthought, always provided the supply be 3-phase, it would be possible to secure a special transformer increasing the voltage from 110 to 220, and thus supply your motor with the pressure requisite to its operation, but that would involve the cast of the transformer and a loss of efficiency in operation of about ten per cent. It would therefore be better to get a suitable motor generator and have done with it, disposing of the present machine in any way you can and for what you can get for it.

I do not know much about your conditions, but if that seems the best thing to do I would, were I in your place, investigate the reflector arc lamp and replace your present lamps with that type, I think you will find it possible to put in the entire equipment new, including the necessary current rectifying machine, for but little more than a new, big motor generator would cost you.

As to not answering your question. What put that idea into your head. This department is for the purpose of doing any reasonable thing it can do to help its readers. You are entirely at liberty to ask as many questions as you may wish, and they will be answered, if we are able to answer them.

From Vancouver

Marvin H. Thoreau, Projectionist Strand Theatre, Vancouver, B. C., says:

Dear Brother Richardson: Enclosed find an attempt at answering a set of your questions. We, (Brother Clark and myself), hope to continue our answers throughout the summer, but Clark has his new Essex coach and I have my Lincoln four, and believe me it's quite some temptation to go out where the balmy Pacific (Balmy your eye! The darned thing nearly stood me on my head and turned me wrong side out once.—Ed.) rolls, instead of remaining home and studying projection problems.

As to the change-over cue sheets, why not suggest that each projectionist, when screening a new print, make a cue sheet and put it on the reel band?

Oh yes, I realize that some will not do it; also that some bands will be torn off and replaced, but I nevertheless believe the plan would work at least fairly well.

We have the lens charts, also the Bluebook, etc., but would like the opinion of yourself and Griffith as to the proper optical system, or rather condenser combinations for our conditions. Due to the peculiarity of the high intensity crater I am sending you samples of them under separate cover.

Details

The projection lenses are seven inch E. F. three-combination Kenolite. Their working distance are 1.5 inches. Effective diameter 1 9/16 inches. Carbons National 11 mm. White Flame High Intensity. Amperage 80 to 85.

Inside diameter of mount of converging lens 4 11/16 inches. Free diameter of parabolic 3 7/8 inches. Minimum distance converging lens to aperture. Maximum distance converging lens to aperture 20 inches. Minimum possible crater distance (crater to face of collector lens) three inches. I might add that we have used this latter crater distance without serious condenser breakage.

We would like the correct combination and Y distances for both the five inch diameter (4 11/16 inch free diameter) and the Cinephor Parabolic converging lens.

As To Hockey

The remarks of Dobson razzing Gray about Boston's poor professional hockey team gave me a good laugh. Last time Dobson's "St. Pats" were out here, my favorite team, the Victoria Congars, trimmed them 7 to 2. This year the team which defeated Toronto for the eastern championship came out here and lost the world's championship to the Victoria outfit. New York is to have a team. Take my advice, Brother Richardson, and go see a game. You'll fall for it.

Hockey Is Out!

Out upon you! This particular editor has trouble enough, without adding hockey games to it. Providing Nancy Hanks with gas, making her stay right side up and behaving herself supplies the strenuousness, and whatever may be lacking believe you me this department is amply and abundantly able to supply it.

As to the reel band idea—well, I dunno. I'd rather pass that along to the men themselves for comment. Maybe it is practical, except that if some of the handwritten letters I receive may be taken as examples, I would suggest that the reel band cue sheet be printed. No, I'm NOT referring to your letter so keep your shirt on. However it seems to me the idea is at least well worthy of consideration.

As to the gas buggies and the Bluebook School—well, I've had a hankering to dig into radio—to build my own, but I've resisted the temptation consistently, because once I divide my attention, that's that and I'm slipping. One must enjoy oneself, and the gas buggy is pre-eminently the means by which good, clean healthful enjoyment may be had, BUT there is ample room in those same chariots for a Bluebook, paper and pencil, and there is no really good reason why they may not be taken along and an hour or two out of each day of joy be devoted to BUSINESS—for the Bluebook School is just that to the projectionist.

Duty First

I, too, would like to just go away and forget it ALL and enjoy some days without this department and my mail to trouble me. And I COULD do it too, I guess, but DUTY COMES FIRST, hence I stick with the job, from which I have not been entirely free for ten consecutive hours in FIFTEEN YEARS, except when I was unconscious two or three times in the hospital.

As to your lens combination, I have not yet received the carbon stubs and until I know the diameter of the crater I can't tell you what you need, but I can tell you a lot of other things.

The thorough understanding of the high intensity arc action is absolutely essential to best results. The crater of the well formed H. I. arc must be deep, and will have thin walls. If all is as it should be the depth will be approximately half the diameter of the crater.

One Thing Essential

One thing is absolutely essential to efficient operation, viz: the electrode (carbons) must be worked to maximum capacity, but not in any degree overloaded. If you are using (I am at the summer home, and by some chance have neglected to bring my high intensity carbon capacity chart) 120 ampere carbons and only 80 to 85 amperes, you are NOT GETTING EVEN SO MUCH AS FIFTY PER CENT. OF THE SCREEN ILLUMINATING YOU OUGHT TO GET. On the other hand if you are using carbons rated for 75 amperes, the chances are that the overload causes the gas in the crater, which is an intergal and essential part of the light source, to be unstable, and the crater to form wrongly.

As soon as I get those stubs I will advise you as to just what condenser combination you need, but on the face of it I am inclined to think you would have a better condition, using a high intensity light source, which is small, with a two-combination projection lens. I shall ask the opinion of Griffith on that point. Perhaps I am in error.

It ought not to be any harder to work out your answers to the B. B. School question with your back propped against a rock, the sand under your anatomy and the ocean billows romping around forninst your eyes than it would be cooped up in a room somewhere.

Reflector Type Lamp

Many have asked me to print the names and addresses of makers of the new reflector type lamps. This I cannot do. I want to help you all I can, but giving manufacturers' addresses is a legitimate function of the advertising department of this paper. If there were no advertising we would have to charge you probably fifteen or twenty dollars a year for Moving Picture World, and if I gave you the manufacturers' addresses, etc., they would probably then see no real reason for advertising.

So far as I can remember, there are now on the market the McAuley, the American, the Morelite, the Preddy and the Perfex reflector type arc lamps. Doubtless there are more, but I can't recall their names at the moment.

The lamp perfected by Griffin and Bowen is not yet ready for the market, I believe.

The new McAuley lamp uses a condenser seven or eight inches in diameter, with a reflector of the same diameter. The reflector sends forward to the condenser (a single biconvex lens which is very thin) a parallel beam of light, which is then, by the condenser, focused to the spot. The thin lens has very slight spherical aberration, particularly when receiving a parallel light beam so that there is but slight divergence of the beam beyond the aperture. This feature puzzled me a bit until I caused the beam from the condenser to be projected out into the open air and smoke blowed into it, which showed but little spread of light due to aberration. It gives a beautiful, clear, evenly illuminated field.

The lamps of this type which use no condenser project a very white, brilliant light. On the face of it they have an advantage of close to ten per cent. by reason of surface losses inherent in the use of a condenser, but on the other hand by the McAuley plan a seven or eight inch (I forget which) reflector may be and is used, so I don't really yet know just how matters balance up.

As I have said, there is no doubt but that these lamps, when handled rightly, can and will fully equal anything the ordinary 75 or 80 ampere arc can do, with a saving of the electrical energy represented by at least fifty amperes of current.

Also there is far less heat and carbon fumes to contend with, and considerably less liability of crater fault developing which will affect results on the screen. I can recommend the reflector type arc to you as a most efficient, economical way of securing high screen illumination, but as to supplying the addresses of their makers—well, let them do as others do and advertise their wares.

Cheap Diamonds

W. C. Budge, Garden City, Long Island, sends some samples of the results of the jack-knife artists' skill and says:

Some time ago an article appeared in the department, accompanied by a film clipping sent in by Hal Hodes, of the Educational Pictures exchange. It showed a diamond shaped hole cut in the film, extending through two full frames. A week later I sent you one apparently from the jack-knife of the same "artist," extending through three frames.

Immediately after these articles appeared these "artistic" marks ceased to appear. It was evident that the machine operator who produced them reads Moving Picture World.

Lately, however, I find the same marks appearing again, only very much smaller. I see that the Albany exchanges are now after the punch artists. Possibly by and by even the New York exchanges will wake up.

The diamonds sent in consist of a row of three diamond shaped holes cut with a knife, not in the center of the film, but to one side. Each hole is about .25 of an inch in length. In three samples four round holes are punched on the opposite side of the film, each about 1/8" in diameter.

Should be a Truck Driver

This of course is done by some machine attendant who should have remained driving a truck or carrying brick. Probably he might have been a good hod juggler or truck driver, though as to the latter he would be what we call a "road hog," because he very evidently is one of those left handed geniuses who care not one single tinker's dam for the rights of any one else. That some one must use the films after he has finished butchering them up means just exactly nothing at all to him. He is either too lacking in knowledge to make a cue sheet, or is just plain too infernally lazy to do it, preferring to outrage the films by chopping holes in them.

Whipping Post For Him

Personally I think the whipping post ought to be revived for such critters, or perhaps the old fashioned ducking stool would help some. And exchange managers who are so shiftless that they permit the punch artist and jacknife wielder to get away with it—well, I'll leave it to you to suggest what it is best to do with them.

Friend Budge also sends a sample of film, and makes remarks concerning sprocket hole shapes as follows:

The piece of film was cut from a Pathe subject which ran much more quietly than usual. You will note that it has different shape sprocket holes than those usually seen.

Most Pathe film is DuPont make, with sharp corner sprocket holes. The DuPont film I find very hard to splice well. One must work fast with it, using a very small amount of cement. I fear I cannot make any report which would have value as to sprocket holes, as no two reels having the same type sprocket holes seem to run the same. However I will keep my eyes and ears open.

That is helpful. Some time ago I asked projectionists to report their findings with regard to the amount of noise made by films of different type sprocket holes. This is an important matter, since through such reports we may gain real information concerning what seems to be the best type of hole from the standpoint of strain on the holes in projection.

Up to this time, of the thousands who read this department weekly, just ONE MAN, Brother Budge, has taken the trouble to even try to tell us anything about it.

Too much trouble? Well, when you arrive at the Pearly Gates and St. Peter asks why you were not good down on earth, probably the only answer you'll have is that "it was too much trouble." How about it, Old Kids?

From Latvia

John Dored, Cinematographer, Riga, Latvia, who represents the Pathe News in that section of the world and belongs to the American Society of Cinematographers, Los Angeles, writes of things which I think cannot but interest our readers. He says:

Dear Mr. Richardson: I am one of the happy owners of a copy of your most valuable Bluebook of Projection, and really I do not find words to express my high appreciation of this splendid work. I am just now entering upon the Exhibitors' field, and feel that without the Bluebook the technical end of things in my theatre would be at least seventy five per cent. less efficient.

I am building a summer theatre having 500 seats at the Riga seaside, using rear projection, and it is just here the Bluebook is rendering me most valuable service, in that I am enabled to know the right distance to locate the projection room from the screen in order to get good results. I will have the lens sixty feet from the screen. Also it has enabled me to choose the right sort of screen—coarse ground glass, size 10 x 13 feet, with a distance of eighteen feet from screen to front row of seats. This and other important data was all supplied me by the Bluebook.

The theatre has big windows on both sides, and the screen is set back thirteen feet in a gradually widening tunnel, in order to eliminate the direct rays of daylight. The evening performances will be run with a lighted auditorium, using an indirect lighting system.

First of Its Kind

This theatre will be the first of its kind in the Baltic States, therefore it will be quite a novelty.

I would very highly appreciate your answers to the following in the projection department of the Moving Picture World.

(A) Distance rear seats to screen being 92 feet, is not the screen size I have stated too small?

(B) I would like your opinion of the small sample inclosed for a translucent screen. Is the yellow of it too objectionable? I was offered such a screen, but chose ground glass.

(C) Would appreciate addresses of good U. S. of A. screen manufacturers, both translucent and ordinary.

I think a description of a little theatre way over in Europe will interest you all. Also it makes one feel a bit spiffy to know that he has really helped in the construction and equipment of theatres way over there, and thus helped folks almost on the other side of the world to have better shows.

Replies

Replying to the questions, no I don't think the screen is too small. I would try out an even longer focal length lens, reducing the picture to ten feet wide, covering the surplus screen with a black cloth border. My reasons for this are: You expect to have lots of light in the auditorium. You therefore want and need plenty of picture brilliancy.

Assuming your projection to be level,

This was sent in as a series parallel connection for batteries. Is it or is it ain't? Each one making a correct answer will be awarded a celluloid cooling plate for his projector.

there would be 126.75 square feet to illuminate with the available light if you have a thirteen foot picture. If you have a ten footer, then there would be only 75 square feet to illuminate, hence you will readily see that your screen brilliancy would be very much greater with the ten footer than with the thirteen footer, volume of light remaining the same and LENS SYSTEMS USED WHICH WOULD WASTE NONE WHEN USING THE LONG FOCAL LENGTH LENS. Try it out anyhow, after you get started, BUT when you make the experiment, DON'T forget the black cloth border. Of course if you are able to employ a light source which will give you unlimited brilliancy on the thirteen foot picture, then it would be better than the smaller one. But most folks of normal eyesight will find the ten foot picture plainly visible at a distance of 92 feet. Added brilliancy of illumination, up to the point where there is "glare" induced (a difficult thing to produce in a well lighted auditorium) adds largely to the visibility of the picture at a distance, you know. Those who may not be able to see clearly enough from the rear seats have only to sit closer to the screen. With brilliant screen illumination, however, I think you will find them few and far between at a 92 foot maximum distance.

No Sample

When I received the letter there was no sample, large or small, in it. Owing to the advisability of a brilliant screen under the conditions you describe, however, I certainly would not advise the use of any screen containing yellow. Without examining the sample, if it contained yellow, then I think you did exceedingly well to select ground glass screen; yellow reduces APPARENT light brilliancy very rapidly. By "apparent brilliancy" I mean the thing the eye sees and records upon the brain. A yellow light may show exactly the same density of illumination as a white one, by photometric measurement, but to the eye the white light is far the more brilliant of the two.

As to screen manufacturers' addresses, I must decline to give them until such time as new tests have been made of their various reflective and diffusing powers, arrangements for which are now in preparation. This is NOT a slap at any one, but merely good business procedure. It has been a long time since any tests were made—so long that screen salesmen may now run amuck, and make any sort of assertions they care to, without any possibility of intelligent check-up on their statements.

Ordinary draftsmen's linen, except for the necessary seam, which may by careful work, be made inconspicuous, makes an excellent translucent screen, and you can get it there just as well as here. However, you will find ground glass hard to beat if well and coarsely ground.

Screen makers who may wish to forward descriptions or samples, or both, may address them to "John Dored, Riga, Latvia, Strelnieku Iela 2,dz 16," whatever all that may mean, I dunno.

Let us hear how things turn out, Brother Dored.

Practical Help

Leslie Yates, Waco, Texas, says:

Dear Friend: (I feel that I can call you that as you and I have met, and it was a pleasure to me, let me tell you.) I was one of the men who met you at the train when you visited Houston some time ago; also I was with you when we took the picture of the little yellow car. Do you remember that? (Huh! I'll tell the world I do—and what was in that lil yellow car, too, and how we had to hold one or two of you to keep you from following it off.) Also I'm the one who sent you the film waxer you have a cut of in the handbook.

To Send Answers

I am going to send in answers to some of the Bluebook School questions. I have been answering them for myself, and studying them, though some of them make me get down and dig allrightly, right, and then often I don't get the correct answer. However I figure that one never can learn unless one tries, and I'm going to try by starting NOW. I wish you all the success in the world.

Greatest Good

And the good brother accompanied the letter with a set of answers. That is the PRACTICAL way to help both himself and this department. Those who don't do exactly that same thing will NOT get the greatest good from the "school." I am convinced that many do not send in answers because they fear they cannot send in uniformly correct ones. Well, what of it. If you can, then you will do better than any one else has succeeded in doing up to now. And what of it? But when you have dug deep and sent in an incorrect reply, when you see the right answer you can bet your gallus buttons, every one of them, that you will NOT forget what the correct answer to that particular thing is, not ever.

Yes, I do remember that darned car. It was a funny incident and the load of scenery it carried was SOME scenery, I'll announce to all and sundry.

Question No. 286—What is a "ground"? Describe some of its effects under various conditions.

A. L. Fell, Collingswood, New Jersey; T. R. Guimond, Mobile, Alabama; W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, Long Island; Leslie E. Yates, Waco, Texas; G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, So. Dakota; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; Thoreau and Clark, Vancouver, British Columbia; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois; H. E. Hurlbutt, Oskosh, Wisconsin; Charles C. Colby, Santa Fe, New Mexico; and Glenn G. Wallace, Muskegon, Michigan, all sent correct replies to this one, though two or three of them might have been better without hurting anything.

Fell says:

This term is used to describe any electrical connection of an electrical conductor to any conducting medium other than that to which it belongs or should be joined, which may carry current to opposite polarity in a manner not desired. A ground is a current carrying connection of such high resistance that it is not a short circuit, but which nevertheless enables or permits current to reach opposite polarity without traveling an intended path.

Um, Brother Fell. Not so good, but it "gets by" at a pinch. Your meaning is all right I think, but your wording needs some repairs, and you don't describe effects.

Bennewitz says:

In an electrical circuit a ground (except those which are intentionally made, such as, for instance, the permanent grounding of the neutral in an Edison 3-wire system) is an unintentional current carrying connection having so much resistance that it does not constitute a short circuit, but which will permit of a small amount of current reaching a conductor of opposite polarity without following its allotted path. It is a connection of one or both polarities with earth, or may be a connection of part of the wiring of an electrical energy delivering or consuming device with a part of its metal frame, even though the device itself be thoroughly insulated from earth.

In a projector arc lamp if one or both of the carbon arms be grounded to the frame of the lamp, there may and probably will be current leakage. If the ground be a heavy one, the current thus "stolen" from the arc itself will cause it to work inefficiently. The leakage may be sufficient to greatly impair the screen illumination.

In a rheostat which is, as a whole, insulated from earth, one or more of the coils or grids may become grounded to the rheostat frame. If the ground be at only one place, then it should not affect the working of the resistance if the ground from earth be complete, but if the coil or grid be grounded in two places, or if the bank of coils or grids be grounded in two places to the frame, then the frame may act as a shunt which will cut out a portion of the resistance, and thus increase the current flow at the arc, and increased current may load the carbons above capacity and cause penciling.

It does not necessarily follow that there will be current leakage through a ground, but a ground—other than an intentional one—is dangerous and should be eliminated.

Better, but also "not so good." Now you chaps listen to Hanover for a minute. He says:

The term ground is used to designate two or three separate, entirely distinct things, as follows: First, in an Edison 3-wire system the neutral wire is "grounded," not only at the power stations, but if it be an A. C. system, then also on the step-down side (I say step-down, for that is almost invariably what it is—the side the power consuming devices are on) of every transformer.

Effect: Without such grounding there would always be the danger of conduit, etc., becoming charged with the highest voltage the system carries, with possibility of unpleasant, or even dangerous shocks, and of fire. With the neutral wire and the conduit grounded, all this of course cannot take place. The same thing is true of the frames of generators and motors, which usually are grounded for what amounts to the same reason.

Second: The frame of a motion picture projector should be "grounded" to the metal of the projection room, because if it (the projector frame) be insulated therefrom and becomes charged with E. M. F. from the lamp, the lamp circuit or otherwise, there is danger of a spark which might fire the film, if a metal reel touch the magazine and frame of the room at the same time. With the two "grounded," which in this case means electrically joined, there can, of course, be no spark, even though the frame of the projection room be not grounded, which it always should be.

Third: And now we arrive at the thing for which the term "Ground" most commonly is used. When we speak of what has been described we say "Ground the neutral" or "Ground the projector," but when we say "there is a ground," we mean what I shall now set forth.

A ground in this sense means an unintentional and usually accidental current-carrying path between the opposite polarities of an electrical generator, somewhere on the distributing system, or perhaps at the generator itself. If such a path has low resistance, and carries sufficient current to immediately blow fuses, it usually is called a "short circuit." On the other hand, if it have such high resistance that the fuses stand the extra load and there is merely continuous current leakage, then it is called a "ground." Such a ground may be between adjacent wires or conductors, through metal, but with imperfect contact which offers high resistance. It may even be through wet wood or other substance which would insulate if dry, in which case it usually soon dries up the moisture and cures itself. It may be between the positive of one circuit and the negative of another joined to the same generator, but situated a considerable distance apart, the path being through water or gas pipes, or even through, earth.

The effect of grounds of this character is waste of electrical energy, unnecessary loading of both generator and wires, and possible overload which will lower the performance of the power using devices through overload of the wires supplying them. In fact, the possible effects are so many and diverse that it would require a great deal of space to describe them in detail. Grounds set up fire hazard, or may do so at any rate.

In projection, a ground in the projector lamp using A. C. will or may magnetize the entire lamphouse and base, and the magnetic action will or may injure the performance of the arc. Of course if the D. C. lamp become grounded in such a way that there is heavy current leakage, the arc will receive just that much less current, and the screen illumination will suffer. Grounded rheostats, etc., also cause trouble and may cause waste.

There, Gentlemen, that's a darned good answer, if you ask me; also I think Dobson and Fell and most of the rest of you knew all that quite as well as Hanover did, only you (and I'm not blaming you so much this hot weather) just did not gear up your think works. You ran on low, because it was easier on the ole think engine. Well, anyhow we got a good and very complete answer, though I will say that Doe, of Chicago, was a close second to Hanover, while Thoreau and Clark gave evidence of a good understanding of the matter, and Hurlbutt did very well.

Question No. 287—What is meant by "Magnetic Density?"

Bennewitz, Hanover, Doe, Thoreau and Clark, Walter Johnson, Champaign, Ill.; Wallace, Colby, and Guimond all made replies which I would not say are incorrect.

Gosh, though, I'm stuck. Bennewitz says:

Magnetic density is the number of lines of force per unit area passing through any substance through a plane at right angles to the direction of the flux lines. In practical work in the United States of America, magnetic flux is measured in number of lines per square inch, and is usually designated by the capital letter B.

That "at right angles to the direction of the flux lines" is one too many for me, nor can I find a definition in which that is included, after half an hour of diligent search. I have never heard of that twist to magnetic density, and have always considered it as just plain "the number of lines per unit area of cross section." If I am in error, please cite me to the authority who says so, Brother Bennewitz.

Thoreau and Clark say:

Magnetic density is a term used to indicate the density of saturation, or number of lines of magnetic force passing through a unit area of cross section. In other words, the amount of magentism of cross sectional area in a magnet.

Hurlbutt says:

Magnetic density is the number of lines of magnetic force passing through a magnetic field per unit area. This also is known as magnetic flux, and is measured by a unit called the "Maxwell," which is the amount of magnetism, or number of lines of magnetic force passing through every square centimeter of the field.

Oh hel-elujah! I gotcha! Bennewitz says: "through a plane at right angles etc." I'm a dumbell. It is the plane which it at right angles to the lines of force. Gosh! I 'spose I ought to rub all that out, and not let you know what a dumbdora I can be sometimes, but I won't. Bennewitz is right, and his wording is correct too. I'm it! Well, maybe it'll make some of you whom I have verbally spanked feel good to know that one is coming to me too, so there'll be no rubbin' done.

Question No. 288—What is the difference between single and 2-phase current?

Everybody named made good. Doe says:

A single phase current is a plain A. C. current which gives the lines maximum power producing force—maximum voltage and amperage—once for each alternation, or twice for each cycle, and leaves them theoretically, if not actually absolutely without either E. M. F. or amperage an equal number of times in the same period of time.

Two-phase current is, in effect, two similar single-phase currents joined in such way that when the E. M. F. of one is at maximum, the E. M. F. of the other is at zero, and vice versa. It is analogous to the steam locomotive engine. Disable one side (one engine) and twice in each revolution of the drivers the single engine on the other side will not be pulling an ounce; also twice in every revolution it will be pulling with all its power. Such action produces a lunging, jerking pull.

With the other engine working, however, since they are coupled to the drivers, and through the driving axels with each other in such manner that when one engine in "on center" the other is pulling at maximum power, the resultant applied power is to all intents and purposes steady.

It is the same in somewhat lesser actual effect because of the relative rapidity of movement, with single and two-phase currents. The single phase produces a jerky, intermittent power application, whereas two-phase produces an almost steady pull.

I really don't see how that could be improved upon very much, so we'll just let it go at that.

Question No. 289—What is meant by the "Ratio of Transformation?"

Wallace says:

Transformers are for the purpose of either "stepping up" the voltage and lowering the amperage or "stepping down" the voltage and increasing the amperage. This is done by the number of turns in the primary coils with relation to the number in the secondary coil. If it is a "step up" transformer the secondary coil will have a greater number of coils than the primary and if it is a "step down" the primary will have the greater number. For instance, if the primary coil has fifty turns and the secondary ten, it will be a "step down" transformer with a "ratio" of 5 to 1, and let us say the voltage impressed on the primary was 220, with an amperage of 5 (220 x 5 = 1100 watts) then as it is a 5 to 1 transformer the voltage from the secondary coil would be 44 and the amperage would be correspondingly increased five times or 25 amperes would flow from the secondary coil (25 x 44 = 1100 watts) which shows us that no matter what the ratio of transformation may be, the number of watts received from either coil of a transformer will equal the number impressed upon the opposite, minus the loss by the inefficiency of the apparatus itself.

Bennewitz says:

The Ratio of Transformation in a transformer is the ratio of the number of turns in the primary coil to the number of turns in the secondary which establishes the relation of the voltage and current in the secondary to the voltage and current received by the primary. The relation of the primary and secondary turns is expressed as follows: Primary voltage: secondary voltage equals primary turns: secondary turns. Primary current: secondary current equals secondary turns: primary turns. If there be more turns in the primary than the secondary the secondary voltage will be reduced and secondary amperage increased and vice versa. If there be ten times as many turns in the primary coil as in the secondary coil, then the ratio will be ten to one, and the secondary volts will be 1/10 that of the primary, while the amperage will be ten times greater. The power, current, voltage and power-factor relations in transformer primary and secondary windings may be readily derived from the fact that the power input to any device must be always equal to its power output, plus the power losses in the device. Properly designed transformers have very small losses and are very efficient. Hence, for practical purposes, it can be assumed that the power input to the primary of a transformer equals the power output of its secondary.

Werry good, boys—werry good! You may wipe your noses and go up to the head of the "class." I feel safe in thus directing you, because there are no girls there to distract your minds and eyes.

Question No. 290—What is meant by "Residual Magnetism," and of what importance is it in the magnets of a generator? What is meant by "Magnetic Saturation"?

Thoreau and Clark say:

Residual Magnetism is the magnetism retained by the core of the magnet of a generator after the machine has stopped, and the circuit is broken, or dead. When a mass of iron has once been magnetized it becomes a difficult matter to entirely remove all traces of it when the magnetizing agent has been removed, and generally a small amount of magnetism is permanently retained by the iron, which is called residual magnetism. It varies with the quality of the iron. (Haw haw! Page 124 Hawkins Guides.) Well boys, I don't care WHERE you get it, if you DO get it. I was a bit amused, though, because it showed you did DIG to find the best and right answer—which is exactly what this school tries to get you all to do.—Ed.)

Residual magnetism is of primary importance in a generator because unless it were there the magnets would have to be excited (magnetized) from an outside source before the generator could be put into electrical operation.

Magnetic saturation is the state in which a magnet is when it has reached the point at which it can be forced to no higher degree of magnetic power.

Johnson says:

The slight amount of magnetism retained in the field magnet of a self-exciting generator when it is not in operation is called "Residual Magnetism." In order to generate electromotive force to give strength to the field magnet—to "build it up"—the wires of the armature must cut magnetic lines of force. The residual magnetism retained by the field magnets supplies a weak magnetic field, but sufficient to cause the armature to become electrically active when it is rotated at high speed. Without residual magnetism the generator would be electrically "dead" and could only be "excited" from an outside force.

When a magnet has received magnetism up to the point where it will receive no more, it is said to have reached the point of "Magnetic Saturation."

Bennewitz puts it very well indeed. He says:

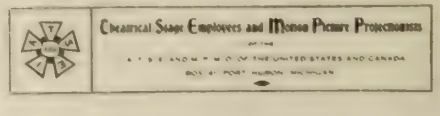
Residual Magnetism is the magnetism retained by the core of an electro-magnet after the circuit has been broken. When a mass of iron has once been magnetized, it becomes a difficult matter to entirely remove all traces when the magnetizing agent has been removed, and as a general rule, a small amount of magnetism is permanently retained by the iron. This is known as residual magnetism. It varies in amount with the quality of the iron.

It is not readily apparent why a generator should be self-exciting, because the current which magnetizes the fields must be impelled by the E. M. F. induced in the armature inductors when they cut the flux. And it seems reasonable that there should be no flux until a current is circulating in the field coils. But as stated above a small amount of magnetism is retained by the magnets. Hence, there is practically always, when a generator is not in operation, a weak though appreciable flux emanating from the poles. When the armature is caused to rotate, its inductors cut this flux and a low voltage is induced in the armature. This voltage impels a current through the field coils, which increases the flux. This, in turn, increases the current in the field coils, which still further increases the flux. The increases continue until the saturation point or the normal voltage of the generator are reached.

The Flux Density (magnetic density) beyond which it is impracticable to magnetize a magnetic material is called the Magnetic Saturation Point of the material. It is possible to magnetize materials beyond their saturation points, but the m.m.f. (magnetomotive force) required to effect such magnetization is then out of all proportion to the magnetization obtained.

Progressives

Here are two examples of progressiveness, one from Port Huron, Michigan, and one from the great city of Toronto, Ontario.



Slowly local unions are, as individual bodies, pulling away from that perfectly silly, not to say idiotic "Moving Picture Machine Operator." The official name of the organization is, of course, still "Moving Picture Machine Operator," which is unfortunate, but the organization itself is not subject to the slightest criticism because of it. When it was adopted motion picture projection was considered by every one as merely a matter of "running a machine." No one then dreamed the time would ever come when any amount of expert knowledge would be necessary to motion picture projection. In those days men honestly believed that a ten-year-old boy could "run the machine" just about as well as any one else.

So naturally when the organization was formed it adopted the only name then in use and once adopted it is very difficult to effect a change in the official name of a great organization which has many affiliations.

Constitution.

ARTICLE I.

Sec. 1. This Union shall be known as the Toronto Motion Picture Projectionists' Union, Local 173, of the International Alliance Theatrical Stage Employees.

An Addition

However, there is no reason why local unions cannot adopt, as an addition, a further designation, and many locals, large and small, have already done so, the latest being those shown. Duluth was, I believe, one of the first to make the change, though perhaps it was Hamilton, Ontario. I am not certain. Remember this, however, the organization is fully justified in, and doubtless will insist that the correct official name, or initials of the organization be used in connection with the title adopted. That is but right and fair, though it is to be hoped that the day will come when the official name can be changed to include Motion Picture Projectionists, and the "Moving Picture Machine Operator" be dropped, for the good of all concerned. "Operator" is rapidly coming to be recognized as applicable only to men of inferior ability in motion picture projection.

School a Great Benefit

S. F. Cooley, Manchester, N. H., says:

The fact that I missed answering questions 233-235 does not mean that I am losing interest. I was absent because I was unable to avoid it. The "School" becomes more fascinating week by week, and the fellow who is honest about it I am sure will admit that the school is of great benefit to one who follows it earnestly and consistently. We all have something to learn, and the school is supplying a great deal of whatever is lacking in the way of projection knowledge. I will try to be "present" each week in future.

I know sometimes one has so many things to do that, answering the questions, being one of those things one does not actually HAVE to do, it gets put off. I also know it is a real task to get down and dig out sufficient information to answer some of those questions; also it is a hard job for some of you to get the answer into words to suit you, but again I say: "There is not excellence without great labor," with accents on the "great."

Stick by it, men, and in future days you will always be well pleased with yourself that you did. Every man who has answered a number of the questions, and has said anything about his experience has admitted that it really did him good in an educational way.

Operator's Cage

The names the average newspaper reporter can tack on things is something pretty weirdly wonderful.

In describing a Farmington theatre fire, in which the unfortunate projectionist was so badly burned that he died, the heading of the article says the "Moving Picture Operator (What ever that may be) Was Trapped In His Cage." In the body of the article, however, the "cage" becomes both a projection room and a "booth."

Well, anyhow they say variety is the spice of life, so there ought to be plenty of spice in life around the Coop-cage-booth-cabinet-box, all of which the theatre projection room is dubbed at various times, though most of the machine operators themselves stick fairly well to "coop" or "booth," one of which is about as bad as the other.

The final safeguard for success—

EASTMAN POSITIVE FILM

To make the most of a picture from the box office view point you carefully plan the publicity notices, newspaper advertisements, lobby displays, tie-ups.

But one more safeguard for success remains—photographic quality. Look in the film margin for the black-lettered identification "Eastman" and "Kodak" and you know that the screen will show all the quality of the negative.

5 Questions — you should ask every film salesman —

1. If I contract for your service, what real help will you give me in putting over the pictures with the public?

2. Will all your pictures play first run, so that I can cash in on the publicity and advertising placed by the big theatres?

3. Is your product backed consistently by national advertising? What mediums do you use and how frequently? Let me see copies of forthcoming ads.

4. Does your company maintain a good live exploitation department working for my benefit?

5. What is your company doing, aside from pushing your own product, to increase the public's liking and respect for motion pictures in general?

—N. Y. Telegram

"Yesterday's audience screamed and clapped at 'Paths to Paradise.' Everybody seemed to be having a great time."
—N. Y. Evening Post

"One of the finest comedies ever. Lloyd, Chaplin—look ye to your laurels. Raymond Griffith has struck his stride. And what a stride!"

To Protect Your Business Buy the Best Short ADVERTISE

If you are one of the Doubting Thomases—if you are not yet convinced that good Short Subjects give you your best weapon for protecting your business—if you still do not feel sure that Short Subjects will make Added Profits for you when properly advertised and exploited—pick up any of the big trade publications and read what others are doing with them.

The editors of the big trade papers, men of broad vision, trained observers of the industry, study this question from all angles and give you an unbiased opinion. The trend of the whole industry, the best thought of the leading exhibitors, are presented in their columns.

Read what they say about the importance of the Short Subject today!

By DANNY in Film Daily

Do not overlook the proper protection to your programs which short subjects give. See to it that you protect yourself with the right kind of short subject material which will not only insure your program when your feature happens to be good, or unusually good, but make certain that your supply includes sufficient unusually good short subjects to bolster those programs where you know you are going to need a lot of help. Real help.

There are exhibitors who, even today, are continuing the double feature program. Many have abandoned this ill-advised idea. In New England particularly they like double features. But the wise showman who would not tire his audience might well appreciate what other exhibitors have long since learned: that a good short subject program run with a weak sister feature will send a patron out feeling much better than two of these weak ones thrown together just to make a big bill.

From Exhibitors Herald

That there is a genuine public demand for short subjects is evident in the weekly experience of any box-office. It is most strikingly evident, perhaps, in the great attendance that marks the rare occasion when a short subject really is exploited.

The astounding aspect of the whole proposition lies in the fact that, despite these everywhere visible evidences of the public demand for short subjects, exhibitors continue blandly to buy them, exhibit them, and KEEP IT A SECRET!

From Moving Picture World

We can't for the life of us understand the exhibitor attitude towards his short subjects.

We have been long enough in editorial harness to be able to see two sides to almost any question. But here is one that stumps us.

It seems so obvious

If an exhibitor places a subject on his screen—whether it be a thousand feet or ten thousand—he does so with the feeling that it is going to please the majority of those sitting out front.

Doesn't it stand to reason then that there are many who ARE NOT OUT FRONT who might have been there had they known of the subject on the screen?

I'm getting so that I can't argue about it any more. It's like trying to convince a drowning man that water is wet.

ROBERT E. WELSH

From Exhibitors Trade Review

But over and above everything else, when it comes to the exhibitor's advertising and exploitation of pictures, care should be taken to emphasize and advertise varied entertainment.

Stop long enough to consider this question: How would you go about laying out a dinner that would appeal to the tastes of the majority of your customers? How would you arrange a picnic for their entertainment? How would you make up a newspaper for them to read?

You would give them variety in every case. Otherwise they would walk out on you.

That's the inevitable answer. More variety. Less stress on a single item of the program that is apt to prove a flop with half your crowd. Feature pictures, of course. But plenty of short subjects, well selected, heavily stressed in advertising and publicity.

If You Haven't the Streng
At Least Sell Your Hous

(No. 440—Straight from the Shoulder Talk by Cal

I AM DOING EVERYTHING IN MY POWER TO KEEP YOU in business as an exhibitor.

I AM DOING THIS FOR MYSELF AS MUCH AS I AM FOR you, so I am not posing as a philanthropist.

YOU CAN RUN YOUR HOUSE BETTER THAN ANYONE else in the world can run it. Your personal interest in it makes your brain work better and faster than the brain of any man you might hire to run it.

NO PRODUCER CAN RUN YOUR HOUSE AS WELL AS you can. He does not know your clientele as well as you do. He doesn't know local conditions. He hasn't the personal following that you have in your community. For that reason you are a better man to run your house than any producer in the world, including myself.

I DON'T WANT TO BUY YOUR HOUSE. I'VE TOLD YOU that a dozen times and I mean it. But—

IF YOU HAVEN'T THE COURAGE TO HANG ON TO IT, if you haven't the backbone or the resources to fight to keep what you have built up, don't imagine for one minute that you have got to give it away to the first producer who may happen to try to scare you into selling.

DON'T BE FOOLED INTO THINKING THERE IS ONLY one possible buyer for your house. I'll pay you the best market price

th to Hang On and Fight,
e to a Friend, Not a Foe!

Laemmle, President of the Universal Pictures Corp.)

for your house if I have to buy it. I still say that I can't run it as well as you can and I still say no producer can do so—but rather than see you licked to a frazzle and rather than see you give your house to a producer who wants to hog the whole industry, I'll come through and buy at the right price.

THIS IS PRETTY STRAIGHT TALK. IT MAY COST ME money. It is not the kind of talk a prospective buyer usually uses, but I'm not in the habit of bluffing or stalling and I don't propose to do either with you.

I KNOW YOU CAN HANG ONTO YOUR HOUSE AND win a glorious victory for independence. I know the force of public feeling will back you up. I know you can get all the independent pictures you need to keep your house on a paying basis. I know that all you need on earth is the guts to fight for what you are entitled to keep. But if in spite of all that, if you still think the business is setting too hot a pace for you, don't imagine you are licked. You can still get what your house is worth, take my word for it.

DON'T BE BULLDOZED INTO SELLING TO A MONOPoly. Don't be fooled by threats to run you out of business. If you are absolutely bent on selling, for heaven's sake at least sell to someone who has not worked day and night to ruin you and control the whole industry.

NO producer will offer a more diversified program in 1925-26 than Warner Bros. It gives the exhibitor a variety of pictures that means more and better-pleased patrons for his theatres. There will be a sure and certain appeal to any class or type of audience.

For instance—John Barrymore productions; Lubitch's society comedies; Syd Chaplin's feature comedies; Irene Rich in emotional dramas; the Matt Moore-Dorothy Devore team in romantic comedies; Monte Blue in action stories; Marie Prevost, with her chic appeal; Lowell Sherman, in society dramas; Kenneth Harlan and Patsy Ruth Miller in romances; Rin-Tin-Tin in dog pictures that are different.

And each picture adapted from a popular story by a successful author, built by skilled directors who know showmanship and the box office's needs!

NORMA TALMADGE in "GRAUSTARK"

A Modern Romance

One of the permanent "best sellers." George Barr McCutcheon's novel makes an admirable vehicle for this great star. The story of a wealthy young American who falls in love with a girl and later discovers she is a Princess of Graustark. A Joseph M. Schenck presentation with Eugene O'Brien. A Dimitri Buchowetzki production. Screen version by Frances Marion.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE in "THE MAN SHE BOUGHT"

This Joseph M. Schenck presentation provided this popular actress with a story that should more than please everyone. It is by Pearl Doles Bell and tells of a girl who buys the services of a paid escort at the Boston "Auction Block" and falls in love with him.

COLLEEN MOORE in "WE MODERNS"

In this adaptation from Israel Zangwill's stage play, Miss Moore will have a role that gives her the big opportunity of her career. It is a story of a flapper who finally finds that the love of her mother and her sweetheart are all that she really wants in the world. June Mathis wove the fabric for the screen and John Francis Dillon will direct. A staff that would guarantee the box office success of any picture.

mind the PERFORMANCE standing National Pictures in the past.

"IRENE"

Here is another great musical comedy success for this great star. Remember "Sally"?—well, "Irene" has all the possibilities of that great money maker and in some respects even greater. June Mathis, whose splendid work on "Sally" was commented upon all over the country, will prepare the script for "Irene."

CORINNE GRIFFITH in

"FOREVER AFTER"

A Corinne Griffith Productions, Inc., presentation of the successful stage play by Owen Davis. The story revolves around the problems of a poor boy who is in love with the richest girl in town, and struggles to remove the money barrier which stands between them. Undoubtedly one of the most sympathetic roles Miss Griffith has ever had.

RICHARD BARTHELMESS in

"SHORE LEAVE"

Imagine Dick in a stirring sea drama as a boy who loves it with romance that is as stirring as it is unusual. This play by Hubert Osborne that was so successfully produced by David Belasco gives to Barthelmess one of the best opportunities he has ever had. It is a John S. Robertson production, presented by Inspiration Pictures, Inc.

JOHNNY HINES in

"RAINBOW RILEY"

The popular play by Thompson Buchanan that served Douglas Fairbanks as a great stage vehicle, "The Cub" will be this star's second picture for First National. It is a wonderful selection for Hines for it has every possibility in the world for all those things upon which Hines has gained his great popularity. Will be one of the greatest things he has ever done. Directed by Charles Hines.

COLLEEN MOORE in

"CLARISSA AND THE POST ROAD"

Here's another corker for Colleen. It tells of Clarissa Janeway, a wealthy young lady who went out and fell in love with an unknown truck driver. This story by Grace Sartwell Mason is just suited for Miss Moore. June Mathis will also have Editorial Supervision.

CORINNE GRIFFITH in

"ASHES"

One of the most powerful dramas this star has ever had. Taken from Florence Reed's great stage success by Reginald Goode. A young actress reaches heights of success but without knowing of an affair between her sister and her husband. Her realization and her final triumph as a screen star is most intense and gripping. Presented by Corinne Griffith Productions, Inc.

RICHARD BARTHELMESS in

"THE BEAUTIFUL CITY"

Here is another wonderful picture for this popular star. It is an original story from one of the best men in the business, Edmund Goulding. Will be produced under the direction of Elmer Clifton and presented by Inspiration Pictures, Inc.

LEON ERROL in

"CLOTHES MAKE THE PIRATE"

Here's A picture! One of the greatest comedy finds in years in a story of a Boston tailor who, dressed as a pirate is mistaken by a pirate gang as their chief and has to put to sea and go through with it. The story is by Holman Day and produced by Sam Rork. If ever there was a howl picture made you can count on this one being it.

"CLASSIFIED"

It is very safe to predict that this Edna Ferber story with the adaptation by June Mathis will be the greatest picture Miss Griffith has ever made. Al Santell directed. It is the story of the young girl who scoffs at the life her mother had had with her father in their little flat and winds up by marrying a poor man and is happy in a smaller flat. Presented by Corinne Griffith Productions, Inc.

MILTON SILLS in

"THE KNOCKOUT"

"THE CRYSTAL CUP"

Another great story by the author of "Black Oxen." A society drama which tells of the hatred of a girl for men due to the manner in which her mother was treated. Visitors

THIS is the week to let the visitors to the office do the talking on the editorial page. The weather is hot, there is a tempting convention within range of Asbury Park's cool breezes, and, besides, the visitors are certain to prove more interesting than the editor.

No doubt of it. Take the first visitor, a film salesman, covering a mid-western territory.

"Say," he declares, "It's about time you editors started to tell the small exhibitor that he is no longer the backbone of this industry. He has been fed up on that phrase and he believes it. While the truth is that the real small timer, the two and three hundred seat fellow, is a member of a dying race.

"Twelve hundred seat houses—and larger—in the thriving middle-sized cities are killing him. Automobiles and good roads are killing him. The eternal desire of the women folk to 'get out of the rut' is killing him.

"Families will travel twenty and thirty miles and more now over good roads to see the latest pictures under up-to-date conditions. And like it so well it soon becomes a habit—the family's once-a-week treat.

"All the time there is a little exhibitor up on Main Street, showing the best pictures he can afford—which isn't saying much for their age, though the quality may be there—and finding his clientele gradually narrowing down to the kids and the folks in town who can't afford autos or don't care for them.

"Backbone? The backbone of this industry right now is the hub city—with good roads radiating in all directions and drawing from as many as a dozen towns.

"In hundreds of cases there's a 'For Sale' sign where the backbone used to be."

THE executive head of one of the country's largest circuits was another visitor to New York last week. His home offices have been making consistent weekly use of Colby Harriman's Presentations Department in Moving Picture World ever since that department was instituted. We discussed the department with him and then ventured a bit of mild surprise.

"Frankly," we said, "When the Presentations Department was started we did not really expect the response we have received from theaters of your size and importance. The department had been conceived principally for the new 'backbone of the industry'—the twelve hundred seater in middle sized cities.

"We had thought that institutions of your size were able to spend the money to maintain presentation staffs equal to any."

"So we are," responded the circuit head. "We are able to spend the money—and willing to. But where can you get the men?

"Did you ever stop to think how many really able creative presentation men there are in the country—men equipped with an all-around training in stage, art, music, lighting, and so on?

"It is only natural. Think back to the days before the motion picture. How many were needed to meet the demands of the spoken drama? And the present day picture theater of any class at all makes once-a-week demands for creative ingenuity where the stage required once-a-season ideas.

"We are training our men—all of us, all over the country. Up and coming youngsters who are studying the new art in the school of experience—and receiving valuable aid from such workers as Colby Harriman. In turn they are cooperating with him for the benefit of all.

"Give us time and you'll see hundreds in this new picture vocation where there is one now—and every one of them doing as much to bring the dollars into box offices as any picture producer."

THE last visitor to the office who had his remarks jotted down on the note-pad said a disquieting thing. He is an independent exchange man. In the course of a general discussion he let these words drop. "Last year was an exhibitor's year; this year we are going to make it an exchangeman's year."

He was referring to the exchange's relations to producers.

We don't like that thought. If it is characteristic—we don't think so—then it means a dog eat dog attitude towards the independent producer who is this year putting more time, money, and energy than ever into his pictures.

If short-sightedness deprives him of a fair return for that effort—two choices remain open to him next season. He can call "quits"—or seek a national release.

Neither choice is very encouraging for independent exchanges.

Short Subjects Are the "Edge" of The Picture Program

By Frank C. True

"ONE might ask what benefit food is to the stomach, air is to the lungs or collar buttons to a shirt and he would get a laugh, but he could ask equally as ridiculous a question concerning the business of exhibiting motion pictures and get a serious response from, I dare say, 20 per cent. of the average suburban or small town exhibitors."

R. R. Biechele, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas-Missouri and owner of the Osage Theatre, one of the most successful suburban houses in Kanasas City, Kas., slowly weighed his words and continued:

"It's a fact—not theory. 'What comedy are you playing tomorrow night?' I asked a fellow exhibitor only last week. 'H-u-m-m, let's see,' he said, reaching for his inner coat pocket. 'I threw in something, but I've forgotten what.' He was an ideal representative of that 20 per cent. portion I have in mind. He has a large suburban theatre but told me the warm weather was slowing up business considerably despite the fact that a theatre a few blocks away was not meeting with the same experience. My friend in question exercises great care in selecting his features, taking pains to see that they are adapted to his type of patrons—and then he 'throws in' a comedy or short subject. This may bring a smile from many theatre owners, but I'll gamble that 50 per cent. of those who smile are, more or less, guilty of the same practice.

"For the time being let us attach a new name to the short subject and call it the 'edge.' The other night I was sitting on the front porch of a neighbor. They had seen the picture at my theatre and were looking over newspaper advertisements for a theatre to attend. As it so happened, two theatres—both about the same riding distances away—were playing good and widely exploited features of almost the same type. The family—four in number—was equally divided in opinion as to which theatre to attend. 'Let's see what else they have at the "X" Theatre,' was the unanimous expression. In three letters of agate type, in an obscure corner of the advertisement, was the comedy. But scarcely had that been read than the father noticed a comic sketch and a goodly portion of the advertisement of the 'B' Theatre devoted to its comedy.

"The decision was not long in being reached. Would you believe me when I tell you that the comedy in agate type was 30 per cent. better than the one given more space? Yet which one got the business? The one that was 'thrown in' or the one which was selected more carefully and exploited profitably. Of course, it just happened, that the 'throw in' in my opinion was the best comedy, but that doesn't happen often when one exhibitor is particular in selection and the other uses care-free abandon. In other words, selection and exploitation must go hand in hand.

"But what about the 'edge'? This: Most of us play more or less the same run of features—and pay good prices for them. What good does the price of our feature do our business if the decision of attendance hinges on the comedy? It's like putting an expensive paint job on a motor car which has no engine. Like others I laughed at the idea that a comedy could be such a great factor in attendance, but I have learned from the 'University of Hard Knocks' that it is the truth.

"Devote 20 per cent. of your newspaper advertising space to your comedy and it will be the best investment possible to make. I have found that to be true. Don't be contented to just insert the name of the comedy or short subject along with a line which might appeal to you as being humorous. A little comic sketch, a half hour or so spent in working out some clever line to go with the comedy ad, or of nothing else, the name of the comedy in bold faced type—and you'll reap profit at a good rate of interest on your investment. When I refer to the short subject as the 'edge' I, of course' mean when there is little to choose between the features. I have found that unless a patron is a rabid fan for western pictures or prejudiced towards some one star, that there is 'little to choose' among patrons much more often than we ever dream of.

"I don't want to be misunderstood. The utmost care should be exercised in the selection of the feature, but when one considers the fact that we can't always obtain the type of feature at just the time we want it, that is proof enough that we should have an additional drawing power. I have had patrons tell me that they 'slept' through my feature to see the comedy. What does that mean to you and me? It tells a vitally important story, I'll tell you.

"Most of us run news reels, stage the usual amount of exploitation stunts each season and redecorate our theatre when needed, but, in concluding, let me say that the sooner we cease 'throwing in' comedies and short subjects, the sooner amusement parks and other summer entertainments will cease to make us wish we were in the bootlegging business."

Tillson Gives Kids Show at Cost

By HAROLD HEFFERMAN

"INTEREST the kids first and you solve the problem of putting over your short subjects."

That is the way Roy Tillson, manager of the Fuller Theatre at Kalamazoo, Mich., appraises the motion picture exploitation problem as it concerns the short subjects. Furthermore Mr. Tillson has introduced some novel methods in attracting the eyes and years of the kids about his city. He works under the theory that children talk more than the grownups and that their bubbling enthusiasm over any matters pertaining to the movies is quite likely to "catch on" around the dining room. The result is, he points out, that the kids bring a fullsome share of the grownups to the show along with them.

If Tillson books a series of short subjects such as the "Our Gang" or other kid comedies in which he knows there will be a string of similar pictures to follow, he gives a special performance for children on Saturday morning, admitting them at a very low charge to the first picture of the series. Tillson manipulates his performance so that he gives the "test" showing to the kids at cost, figuring that their interest and enthusiasm over the initial picture is going to carry along to the finish—besides spreading the news of something unusually good to other members of their families.

Tillson makes these "test" showings something for the kids to remember. He prepares special throwaways that are easy for the young minds to digest, and often gives out novelties that are cheap but useful around the house.

Jersey Showmen Turn Thumbs Down and Now Will Stage Their Own;

Dynamic President, Re-elected, Nails Independent Producers to Pledge of an Early Conference on Fair Contract

Asbury Park, N. J., July 2.

By TOM WALLER

THE convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey, held in Asbury Park on June 28, 29 and 30, should go down in exhibitor history as one of the most forceful, from the standpoint of actual accomplishment and good fellowship, ever held in state and country. The credit for its success, unprecedented in the annals of this organization, is traced directly to its chieftan, Joseph M. Seider, who very authentically was described by National President R. F. Woodhull to the conventioners as "a human dynamo."

Seider wielded the gavel with an iron but kind hand which only evoked a greater admiration and respect from his colleagues and visiting officials. Accomplishment was his goal and this he reached to the tune of a bugle which sharply differentiated the period for work and the one for play. Seider saw that the bugle was observed and that neither period overlapped.

Definite things, shorn of all frayed edges, close the record. No conventionee can justly say he was not given every opportunity to express his mind on the convention floor, freely and frankly. After he had availed himself, and not until then, was the matter put to a vote.

The voting was unimpeachably affirmative or negative. The points in this respect outstandingly prominent on the record are:

(1) The rejection in its entirety of the Greater Movie Season as sponsored by the Hays organization and the substitution thereof of a Greater Movie Season, by exhibitors for the benefit of exhibitors, to be superintended by the state unit with the time allotted to the satisfaction and convenience of the zones.

(2) The emphatic declaration by President Seider that the new Burkan contract plan, as published exclusively in MOVING PICTURE WORLD last week, does not solve the problem of exhibitors.

(3) Seider nailing Frederick Elliott, managing director for the Independent Motion Picture Association of America, to a pledge that the organization by which he is employed will within the next two weeks appoint a committee to confer upon an equitable contract.

(4) The New Jersey organization literally slashing its rate of dues in half, making the schedule 5 cents for all seats, irrespective of the classification of the theatre, this payment being for national and state as well as county dues.

(5) The assurance of conquering in the fight against the power assessment in New Jersey, which would mean the refunding of hundreds of thousands of dollars to local theatre owners and a huge reduction in that rate.

(6) Seider's report of the past fiscal year, showing in that time the remarkable development to strength and recognition of the New Jersey M. P. T. O.

(7) The re-election of Joseph M. Seider to the presidency of the New Jersey unit with an acknowledgement by National President Woodhull that New Jersey now has an exhibitor stronghold typifiying the highest state of organization.

(8) Colby Harriman, presentation expert, proving to the exhibitor that Broadway can be brought to Main street with the same effect as on Broadway but at a scintilla of the expense.

(9) Sydney S. Cohen's warning on overseating.

(10) The appeal of Asbury Park's mayor to the theatre men of New Jersey to fight for the repeal of "the obsolete, obnoxious and unenforced blue laws."

Monday's Session

The annual report of President Joseph M. Seider was the feature of the opening of the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey in the Hotel Monterey, Asbury Park. One of the highlights of this report was the fact that under the Seider regime the organization includes within its fold 94 per cent of all the Jersey theatre owners. This statement appears in full later in the story.

The first day introduced many unique things for a convention. A bugle sounded assembly sharply at 3 o'clock on the afternoon of June 29, and the most successful convention ever held in New Jersey got under way to a military start.

An impressive invocation by a local clergyman, who lauded the leader of the New Jerseyites for his worthy motive in commencing the convention with a prayer, was followed by Seider introducing honorary guests. These included R. F. Woodhull, national president; Sydney S. Cohen, chairman of the board of directors of the M. P. T. O. A.; William Brandt, ex-president of the M. P. T. O., of New York State; Fred Elliott, business manager of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America; Rudolph Sanders, president of the Brooklyn exhibitors: Mayor H. B. Hettrick of Asbury Park.

Sidney E. Samuelson, chairman of the New Jersey board of directors, in his annual report paid one of the greatest of the many tributes to State President Seider, when he said: "The board's work was purely supplemental and advisory to the executive work of the president." The directors, he made known, had convened twelve times during the past fiscal year.

JOSEPH M. SEIDER
The man who put over one of the greatest state conventions ever held.

A representative of the New York Central Railroad outlined a special tour that that company is arranging in connection with the M. P. T. O. A. convention at Los Angeles next spring. Starting from New York on May 23 and remaining in Los Angeles for one week, the excursionists will return East, after visiting historical points, on June 23. The minimum fare for this entire trip, excluding expenses in Los Angeles, is $585, he said.

Henry P. Nelson's secretarial report showed the remarkable co-operation which members have afforded Chairman Seider by their regular attendance at meetings under all climatic conditions during the past year. Like everyone else who spoke, Nelson said that Seider's innate modesty prevented him from acknowledging himself as the real builder of the New Jersey organization's high financial and executive status of today.

National President Woodhull, former head of the New Jersey organization, was given an ovation by the members of his home state. Woodhull, in a general way, reviewed the accomplishments of the Milwaukee convention, especially as they pertained to the Play Date Bureau and its sister unit, the Fair Play Bureau. One point made by Woodhull was that if "we are to regard the independent fellows as pals of the independent theatre owners, they too must be extremely careful that they do not take advantage of our comradeship and by so doing compel us to render a bad accounting of their stewardship at Los Angeles next year."

Woodhull called Seider a "human dynamo." He urged the theatre owners to be unanimous and continuous in the support of Seider, whom, he said, they were exceptionally fortunate to possess. Woodhull also advised his audience to "stop helping exhibitors in arbitration and other difficulties who do not and will not contribute of their time and money to the organization."

The speaker stressed a point that it has never been his intention or that of the national directors "to advise any theatre owner to stop buying pictures from any particular concern." In this connection he declared: "We have simply emphasized the thought that you do not buy yourself into a position where your play dates are entirely consumed by two or three producers and distributors." In closing Woodhull said that New Jersey represents one of the highest states of organization perfection in America.

Seider Nails Elliott

Frederick H. Elliott, general manager of the I. M. P. A. A., told of the desire of his association, among other things, to help establish an equitable contract built on "a desire to live and let live."

President Seider, immediately on the conclusion of Elliott's speech, inquired of the independent business manager when that organization would actually make a move for the realization of such a contract.

"If you can give us a finger, we will be very happy to give you a hand," Seider said.

To this Elliott replied that the association by whom he is employed will probably take the matter under consideration for consummation within the next two weeks.

"Things are mighty bad but they might be a great deal worse," was the opening comment of Sydney S. Cohen. "Instead of 10 per cent, certain interests today might have 50 per cent of the control of theatres in this country were it not for organization."

One of the most serious things now confronting the industry, Cohen observed, is overseating in some communities. In this respect he spoke of the present age as one of inflated promotion, when money is easily procurable for theatre-building purposes. Careful consideration should be given this subject in order to prevent serious trouble in the future, he said.

Referring to the work accomplished by the Play Date Bureau, Cohen said that very often an exhibitor is enclined to question the actual value of a picture for which he does not have to pay much money. He termed this a "negative thought," admitting that he himself had one time been victimized by it. The public will determine such a phase when prompted by the right amount and class of advertising, he added. As the result of the bureau thousands of contracts that have gone in other years to sources whose aims he described as not being for the betterment of the independents are now going in the direction that will aid the industry at large.

Mayor Urges Fight

A sensation was created when Mayor Hetrick condemned the New Jersey Blue Laws and urged theatre owners to wage a determined fight for their repeal by the legislature. The mayor, after presenting the keys of the city to the conventees, declared that the church and recreational institutions, including the motion picture theatre, are the best means that the world has today for its moral uplift.

"In our state," he said, "we have a peculiar law. It is the Blue Law of New Jersey formulated in the days when, they say, they used to burn people at the stake for religious differences, some of which were termed witchcraft. These Sunday laws prohibit any clean recreation on Sunday. My own opinion is that if a certain recreation is good enough for Monday, it is suitable for every day in the week including Sunday. Golf appeals to a few, the theatre appeals to the masses. The old story that the devil makes work for idle hands to do, is true. I think that laws should be made first with respect to the moral issue and second with respect to the welfare of the public."

The mayor denounced this law as an "obnoxious, obsolete, unenforced Blue Law of New Jersey."

The sentiment of Cohen regarding overseating was echoed by William Brandt. Brandt said that in Brooklyn alone seventy-five theatres are being projected. This, he stated, was causing a lot of consternation in the smaller exhibitor ranks of his own territory. Brandt also was effusive in his words of praise for the New Jersey organization, paying special deference to President Seider.

Before the conclusion of the first day's business Elliott presented Woodhull with a handsomely bound leather booklet on behalf of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America. This contained a fitting resolution and the signatures of the officers and members of the association.

Tuesday's Session

The second day of the convention put New Jersey on record as being the first state in the Union to reject the Hays movement for Greater Movie Season in its entirety. With the exception of one member, National President R. F. Woodhull, the vote of the conventionees in this respect was unanimous. The New Jersey committee on Greater Movie Season, designated on the first day of the convention, reported through their president, Benjamin Schindler, on the convention floor that they would not assume the responsibility of even coming to a conclusion on the local status of this subject. From sentiment expressed on the floor the consensus of opinion was that any movement to increase film business from the exhibitor end would be conducted with best results by the respective exhibitor himself.

President Joseph M. Seider stated that the State of New Jersey was perfectly capable of reaching a decision on anything affecting it as an individual without any outside dictation. For some years past, he said, it would seem to have been the policy of Philadelphia to endeavor to annex the southern part of this State and for New York to attempt to dominate its northern province.

Reviews Hays' Meeting

An account of the mass meeting recently sponsored by the Hays organization in the Palace Theatre, New York, was reviewed by Leon Rosenblatt. Rosenblatt intimated that the campaign in the Greater New York territory alone would cost from fifty to sixty thousand dollars. He said the Hays organization "had everything cooked and ready for us to eat." He declared that one of the most important things for an exhibitor to do is to keep faith with his public. He reiterated his contention presented at this session and published in a recent issue of Moving Picture World, that most product released in August is "junk."

Louis Rosenthal, the next speaker, vehemently urged exhibitors in New Jersey to oppose the entire proposition, stating: "I honestly believe this convention should go on record as being opposed to this Hays movement. Hays should suggest to producers, if he wanted to do something that would aid the exhibitor, that they quit releasing pictures at this time of the year to give theatre owners a chance to clean up their houses. We don't want the public to become disgruntled. It seems to me that we would be far better off by having our theatres closed until Spetember, then opening them when worth while product would be obtainable."

Rudy Sanders' Address

Rudolph Sanders told of another meeting in New York on the Greater Movie Season held at the Hays office shortly after the Palace pow-wow. He said that this meeting was attended by Marcus Loew and credited Loew with stating that he wanted to correct a report that the movement was a producer's proposition. "He did not change my opinion," emphasized Sanders.

The speaker said that it would be up to the exhibitors to defray expenses in connection with the procuring of posters and other accessories incidental to the campaign. He stated that some of the "better acquainted minds" suggested that the revenue to be paid by each exhibitor to the Hays organization should be 1 per cent. of his gross receipts during August.

Samuelson's Position

Sidney Samuelson seconded Rosenthal's motion to reject the plan in its entirety. Samuelson said that his experience has been that whenever a national campaign is being launched in New York or Newark for a picture, he cannot get that film for at least twelve weeks later. He mentioned his own case of what he said was a condition being realized by about 50 per cent. of New Jersey's small town theatres. On the subject of a postponement of the movement until September, which had previously been broached by T. E. Kaiserstein, he remarked: "Time is not the thing. The point is such a movement can never be of value to the small town theatre owner. I urge the rejection of the plan in toto."

A new angle was given the discussion by I. M. Hirshblond, who said that his objection to the plan was not because it was scheduled for August but because he did not believe the exhibitors should carry the burden for the Hays organization. George Jacobs declared himself as opposed to any movement promulgated by the Hays unit.

Peter Adams, vice-president of the state organization and one of the most prominent of Jersey's theatre owners, said that everything from the weather to product, which he termed "garbage" was against such a plan for August.

Twenty-five conventionees were in the room when the roll call on Rosenthal's motion was taken. The only member of the organization who refrained from definitely expressing his attitude was R. F. Woodhull. Woodhull's silence was generally understood to mean that his neutral position on the matter was taken with a view to his capacity as chief of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

The next order of business was the approval by the convention of Chairman Seider's resolution to send telegrams to the widow of Harry Berman, acknowledging her bereavement in the recent loss of her husband; to President Coolidge an expression of sympathy for the operation just undergone by his father; to Charles Chaplin a wire of congratulation on the arrival of his son.

A representative of the Theatre Owners' Service Bureau submitted a plan for a reduction on basic rate insurance. This was endorsed by the convention with the promise of the organization to co-operate in the successful promotion of this project. In this respect President Seider said that the New Jersey rate is today exorbitantly high and approximately 400 per cent. above that in New York.

A proposition whereby the state would act as a booking agency for its members, thereby receiving the same power as a big circuit, was the subject of an address by Hal Hodes. The speaker, who was formerly manager of Educational's New York exchange, said that he had become an independent distributor and would be willing to offer short subjects of quality under such a system. He said that he is now handling the Mutt & Jeff series and that he will let exhibitors have them in this manner for $5 a picture regardless of the number of days the film is run in the theatre. He said that under any other condition each picture would sell on the average of $12.50 a day.

To Test Proposition

The convention, upon a motion by Rosenthal, will work out a plan through a committee, designated by Seider, to test the feasibility of Hodes' proposition. This committee will report to the board of directors and thereafter immediate action will be taken by the organization.

Leon Rosenblatt opened Tuesday afternoon's session with a report, which was approved, of the organization's arbitration committee. This report, which is published in full later in the story, told of instances experienced by exhibitors in a court of arbitration, some of which, the report stated, smacked of Spanish Inquisition days. Rosenblatt sought the endorsement by the convention of Seider's report rendered at Milwaukee, both as to its reforms and its equitable contract.

This was followed up by a disclosure by Seider that the committee called by Hays to formulate a new contract had conferred over thirty times, each occasion lasting several hours, without any concrete result.

"We must get arbitration and not litigation," said Seider. "It is the Film Boards of Trade that fastened the noose around the neck—the Film Boards of Trade that are appointed under the Hays organization. We are trying to construct. No convention can solve, but it can establish the machinery for a change for the better. Don't be discouraged about this arbitration. During the last three months we in New Jersey haven't lost a case. This is good but the principal point is that we must get real arbitration."

The New Burkan Contract

The new Burkan contract, as was announced exclusively in last week's Moving Picture World, came in for a discussion at this point. In answer to a question by Kaisterstein, Seider said that he could not do into detail on the lawyer's proposition because Burkan has not yet officially made known all of the details of this contract. Seider called Burkan a "genius," but observed: "Mr. Burkan's contract is not your solution. He has still left untouched some vicious clauses. For instance, the arbitration clause is virtually untouched. The method of arbitration even to the appointment of arbitrators is practically the same in the Burkan plan."

Seider said that the Burkan formula was not yet a matter for the organization to discuss.

In introducing Colby Harriman, Seider said that although the small towns cannot afford Broadway's $1,000 a week for presentations, Harriman would tell them how to bring "Broadway to Main street" on a margin just as high in quality but startling from the standpoint of low cost. Harriman gave a mighty interesting and constructive talk. He told about working six weeks to stage the presentations at this convention. Because of their unusual quality and merit, Moving Picture World will not be able to do justice to a brief description of the entertainment enjoyed in Asbury Park this week. It is conceded by many prominent folk in the industry to be of the highest standard ever witnessed at any exhibitor convention.

Elliot to Seider

Frederick Elliott, general manager of the I. M. P. A. A., stated that he was desirous of correcting what he said he believed was an erroneous impression made upon President Seider at Monday's session. Elliott said that he had desired the day before to give the understanding that the association by which he is employed will appoint a committee to confer upon an equitable contract, but not to consummate it at this time.

The resolutions committee offered an amendment to Article 2, Section 1, the amendment calling for four vice-presidents instead of two, one for each first class county, namely, Essex, Hudson, Northern New Jersey and Southern New Jersey. This was carried unanimously.

Those Sidelights

Editor Robert E. Welsh in his versatile style will tell what happened on the side lines in next week's issue. Many novel incidents occurred while the exhibitors were busily engaged in their series of important meetings.

A verbal picture will be painted in such a style by Mr. Welsh that those who were unable to attend will get all the sea breezes and festivities enjoyed by the several hundred who spent the first three days of this week at the Monterey, Asbury Park.

Seider Demands Equitable Contract

Wednesday's Session

New Jersey will have its own Greater Movie Season. This decision was one of the most important reached early on Wednesday, the third day of the convention.

Under a resolution unanimously adopted, the organization's board of directors was authorized to formulate a Greater Movie Season to be sponsored by the state unit and to be conducted in the zones. The resolution was based upon the opinion of the convention that such a movement should be controlled "by exhibitors, for the benefit of exhibitors."

President Seider explained that this Movie Season will not necessarily have to be observed on any particular month, but that the time deemed best by exhibitors will be the period for observance of this function in their respective zones.

President Seider, in a brief resume of the accomplishments by the state regarding the music tax situation, stated the organization had satisfactorily adjusted forty cases on this matter during the past year. He declared that the only relief in sight for the exhibitor on this matter is by the amending of the copyright law itself. Efforts are now being made by New Jersey, he said, to aid in bringing about this point.

Dues Are Slashed

Dues for the New Jersey M. P. T. O. were literally slashed in half by a resolution offered by Louis Rosenthal, which was unanimously adopted. The rate during the past year has been $12.50 and $25, governed by the number of seats. Under the new schedule, local theatre owners will pay 5 cents per seat for all houses irrespective of their classification, which will include national, state and county dues.

The concensus of opinion, as was voiced by several speakers on the floor, was that this cut rate will prove more remunerative to the state in that it should stimulate a 100 per cent. payment of dues and bring into the fold some theatre owners who were said to have been unable to meet the larger obligation.

An amendment to the resolution on dues was made by Woodhull and approved. The speaker's sentiment in this respect was that if the dues were to be placed at 5 cents per seat, then the money derived by reels issued also for the maintenance of the organization should be made a separate unit in the treasurer's report. In other words, the revenue derived from the reels should not be allowed to fill in any deficit in the payment of actual dues.

When the question was asked as to what machinery should be put into effect for the enforcement of these dues, President Seider said that the members will be placed strictly upon their honor. As an illustration of the wisdom of Seider's decision, Sidney Samuelson immediately pledged himself responsible for every seat in Sussex and Warren counties.

Stops Burkan Discussion

Another attempt was made at this session to discuss in detail the new Burkam contract. Norman Samuelson, after rendering his report on insurance rates, stated that he had come into possession of a copy of the Burkam formula. He said that it was masterly and that it was a remarkable combination of "honey and molasses." He stated that some of its most important clauses were glossed over in such a manner as he has never experienced in his career as an attorney. At this point Seider again ruled that the Burkam contract was not a subject for consideration by the convention, in all fairness and courtesy to the author. Sol Raives, chairman of the T. O. C. C. Arbitration Board, stated that nothing was wrong with arbitration but that the trouble is due to the contract. He said that in the latter, arbitrators are confronted with something over which they have no control.

Refund on Power Rate?

One of the most sensational events of the entire convention was President Seider's report on the power rate. Hundreds of thousands of dollars may be refunded to New Jersey exhibitors if the fight on this matter is successful, he declared. This money represents the total of that which has accrued since 1914, when what was described by Seider as a "muff" was committed in Newark. This alleged error was perpetrated through what Seider said was the confusion of the power rate with the lighting rate. He asserted that this alleged bungle has resulted in exhibitors paying the lighting rate instead of the power rate. It is upon this ground, he said, that New Jersey will fight for the change, and also the refund since the time of its origin. Seider stated that if theatre owners will take the trouble to fill out the questionnaire on this subject recently submitted to them by the state organization, they should realize not only the refund but a great reduction in the rate which they have been paying. He said that a decision in a New Jersey court literally substantiates the organization's point of contention, and that success in the fight with the co-operation of all theatre owners is practically assured.

On the Daylight Saving proposition Seider said that New Jersey will do something constructive through its legislature with New York. Much depends upon the neighboring state for a change in the present law.

An interesting sidelight in the business of this session was reached when R. F. Woodhull offered his resignation from the New Jersey board of directors on the ground that his duties as national president prohibited him from attending all sessions of the local executive body. Woodhull's offer was immediately tabled.

Officers Elected

The report of the nominating committee was unanimously endorsed and the officers for the following year are:

Joseph M. Seider, president; Charles Hildinger of Trenton, Peter Adams of Paterson, Louis Rosenthal of East Orange and Joe Bernstein of Jersey City, vice-presidents; Leo Rosenblatt, Bayonne, secretary; William Keegan, Trenton, treasurer.

The only change in this group of officers was that of Henry P. Nelson as secretary and the two additional vice-presidents. W. C. Hunt, Leo Juskowitz and I. A. Roth were made directors for three years, while Jacob Fox and Henry P. Nelson were elected for one year.

Joseph Seider was eulogized by Woodhull as a man who merited re-election by his unusual avidity for constructive work, as has been exemplified by his record ever since he became an organization man.

The Bureau of Trade and Commerce was endorsed, the press was praised for its support, and all acts of the national convention were endorsed by the approval of resolutions submitted on these subjects.

Much praise is due Colby Harriman, who supervised, staged and arranged entertainment during the three days and nights in Asbury Park which has never been excelled by any convention, national or state. Dancing, boating, beautiful lavish scenes, how to save money and everything within the comprehension of a theatre owner was supplied the conventionees in the Harriman program.

The business program of the convention terminated in a dramatic climax. Joseph Stern, who has been outside the fold for the past three years, at the last minute arose before the organization of which he was the president in 1906. He literally eulogized Seider as one of the country's greatest state presidents. He declared that no national president could have conducted a convention more capably than had Seider.

In return, President Seider besought the veteran ex-chief to rejoin his old organization. He assured him that he would not feel the M. P. T. O. of New Jersey complete until this had been accomplished. Stern weakened slightly and the committee that Seider appointed believes it will do the rest.

Governor At Banquet

Governor Silzer and United States Senator Edwards were the principal speakers at the banquet. The Governor took exception to a statement by Attorney Nathan Burkan that politics and business could not be mixed. Toastmaster Robert E. Welsh skilfully clarified this situation by explaining that the film industry's interpretation of "politics" was different from that of the layman's dictionary.

State President Joseph M. Seider was presented with a beautiful diamond ring as a token of the organization's esteem. Senator Edwards informed the exhibitors that whenever there was a bill affecting the film industry the "Big Three" was sure to be represented "greasing the path." The senator told his audience to fight for their independence by winning the support of picture fans.

Seider's Report

THE annual report of the president Joseph M. Seider, as presented to the convention, follows:

To Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey, Ladies and Gentlemen:

Greetings—It feels that it was only yesterday that I stood in this room and pledged you all that was in me, but a whole year has passed and I now stand before you to give account of my stewardship.

I will new render only a short report and will give my recommendations and details later in executive session.

We have provided diversion for you, ladies, while you men folk are engaged in an effort, through the pooling of thought, to find a solution to our many problems. Many of you have paid with your husbands the price of carrying on for a common cause, and before you are taken in charge by the Ladies Entertainment Committee, we want you to hear a resume of our activities for the past year.

We had difficulty in getting our members to attend meetings, so since the Mountain would not come to Mohammed, Mohammed went to the Mountain. Our officers and directors rotated each month, holding their monthly meetings in different counties with the theatre owner, within commuting distance, participating. Thus, the organization was brought to the individual. We informed, advised and helped him and gained his approval and cooperation.

We have held in this manner twelve county meetings and in addition two regional meetings.

February 1st saw the birth of our Organization Bulletin, semi-monthly, self supporting, artistic, honest, fearless, helpful, informative.

Reviews Woodhull Dinner

Socially, we may boast of the testimonial dinner to our former president who has brought so much distinction to our organization and our state, the now national president, R. F., no—still our own Pete Woodhull.

That spectacular ball in honor of Mayor Breidenbach of Newark.

We supplied and staged a big vaudeville show for Assemblyman Carty, the sponsor of our Sunday Bill, and also the show for the legislature in the assembly chamber on the last day of the legislative session.

The luncheon tendered to me by the officers and members of the Board of Directors was unofficial and has no place in this report, but I feel you will pardon my taking this opportunity to publicly thank these dear friends of mine. Many a time I day dreamed of this wonderful manifestation of love and fraternalism. Just imagine, these gentlemen shared the work and the expense with me, were equally responsible for every accomplishment, for every service to our members and yet, taxed themselves with expense and a day, badly needed by their business to do this for me. I thank you, boys, all of you equally from the bottom of my heart. You, Pete Adams, Charles Hildinger, Isidor Hirshblond, William Hunt, Leo Juskowitz, William Keegan, Henry Nelson, Leon Rosenblatt, Louis Rosenthal, Sidney Samuelson, Benjamin Schindler, Arthur B. Smith and Pete Woodhull, have all individually and collectively, in the fullest sense of the term, made progress during the past year possible and I thank you for myself and this organization. You deserve the appreciation and gratitude of every blessed soul interested in our industry.

I want to thank the trade press for their kindness and help. You, my kind friends, little realize to what extent they have helped us to succeed.

We are all grateful to Larry Urbach, our press representative, and indebted to him. He has not even received the usual dollar per year.

We could claim a membership of 98 per cent. Yet, modestly, let us call it 94 per cent.

We interceded with the operators' union in behalf of the Essex County theatre owners with a nominal measure of success.

But, as a result we organized these theatre owners into a branch of this organization, known as the Essex County Unit. We installed their officers, presented a gavel to their efficient and energetic president, Louis Rosenthal, and although we did not interfere with their local efforts, at the slightest sign of need we extended the helping hand and cumulative strength of the entire state organization.

In every case where our members had difficulty arising out of their business relations with distributors, we made every effort to make adjustments. Failing, we prepared our member's case in arbitration or court and assigned counsel without charge to them. I may add that thousands of dollars were involved. In some instances we had to make supreme efforts and make large financial committments, but we never failed.

We retained on a yearly basis for the protection of our members in a legal way Attorneys Joseph Varbalow of Camden, N. J., and Norman Samuelson of New York, N. Y.

We have kept our members advised as to changes in the uniform contract interpretation of clauses and new arbitration rulings and decisions.

We received a mandate from our members to obtain for them direct arbitration for and by New Jersey theatre owners and film exchanges. You will hear more on this subject at tomorrow's session.

The elimination of the duplication of dues and organization membership has been worked out.

We stepped in and took hold of the music tax tangle and adjusted some forty odd cases.

We helped our members pay their organization dues by securing for them two exceptionally meritorious industrial reels for the showing of which they were compensated.

We functioned politically. We disapproved of Bill 48. It was on the board for final passage. It did not pass.

Bill 65, our Sunday Bill, was not reported by the committee, Senate Bill 241, supported by us, was passed and signed by His Excellency, George S. Silzer, Governor of New Jersey.

There is a good possibility of enacting into a law a Daylight Savings Bill, reducing the period two weeks from both ends.

Your full board at their individual expense has traveled to Washington on your busness. The result was highly satisfactory. Our entire legislative activities have resulted in our gaining the respect of the legislators.

Each year we make progress. Last year the State Women's Clubs endorsed our Sunday Bill.

Although we at no time set out to hurt anyone, we always helped our friends—politically.

We expended large sums of money to have film trailers made. These films were unusual and obtained results. That they were artistic, exceptional in composition and made possible in a financial way, is due entirely to the courtesy and cooperation of Herman Robbins of the National Screen Service.

Elected Own Candidates

In Newark we elected four of five candidates for Commissioner.

In Jersey City five.

In the primaries our candidates were all successful.

The character of our support for our friends and the manner in which it was tendered is the subject of much favorable comment in political circles.

We are cementing friendships—mobilizing effort—building up sentiment and respect for ourselves and our industry.

We are opposed to non-theatrical competition.

In public service activities we have not been backward. We have never failed to participate whole heartedly in every municipal, county, state or public undertaking. We addressed Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions and Business Men's Associations; selling the theatre owner to his community, showing his value to the business progress of the town, and opening the eyes of all to his value from every angle.

We have instituted campaigns for the reduction of Basis Rates in Insurance and Electric Current and refunds of overcharge on electric current charge since 1914.

We have functioned and have accomplished. With your continued and uninterrupted, loyal and sincere cooperation even still more can be accomplished.

Although the state of New Jersey was entitled to twelve official delegates, there was that keen interest in the activities of our National Organization, that at its recent sixth annual convention we were represented by 18 members of this organization.

The Milwaukee convention has been so widely discussed that a repetition of its history now is unwarranted. The results are obvious and many, and are well known to you. Yet, we cannot say too much about that wonderful display by Sydney Cohen, that God given leader, actually loved and all but worshipped by practically every theatre owner in the country, of that unselfishness and that good real common sense that resulted in harmony.

We humans have a strong tendency to disagree. Two of us may be standing to-

Arrow Pointed Way

Arrow Pictures Corporation was much in evidence during the entire Asbury Park convention. Their good looking representative, Dick Weil, was a mighty busy man. Between dances he was kept on the job distributing fans, noise makers, balloons and all such things to keep the crowd happy.

The little gifts carried their message, since each one told something about the well known independent company. Incidentally, Arrow was the only unit to go in so extensively for exploitation.

Condemn Blackjack Arbitration

gether looking at the same object and yet see it differently.

Harmony is possible when men become willing to put aside their personal prejudice and opinions and align themselves with one harmonious cause, thereby supporting each other even as colors which blend in nature. Ungoverned human nature, knowing no right law, seeks only for itself and cannot unite with another of its kind. There being no permanent point of unity at which to unite or meet, it must rend itself. Jealously, selfseeking, desire for place, having no foundational principle must and did yield at Milwaukee to unselfishness, brotherly regard and a common cause.

Arbitration Report

THE report of the Committee on Arbitration, as presented by Leon Rosenblatt chairman, follows:

Your Arbitration Committee had a definite mandate from this organization to effect for New Jersey direct Arbitration for and by New Jersey theatre owners and exchange men.

We took this matter up with the Hays organization and after two conferences were informed that the exchanges in both Philadelphia and New York had consented to it as well as the theatre owners in Philadelphia; but that New York theatre owners had objected and therefore, since the contract specificially states that arbitrators shall be appointed by the local organization in the zone from which the film is shipped, that the matter must be adjusted between the New York organization and ourselves. Our committee conferred with the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce Board of Directors as well as with their president, Charles L. O'Reilly; but nothing definite was the result of these conferences.

Although our National Organization has taken no action, we took the position that it is best, since our members are compelled to sign this contract which provided for Arbitration, they have no other choice, that it was our duty to protect our members.

Do not take this as a reflection upon the Arbitrators or the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce. The work of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce in this relation has been splendid and of benefit to every theatre owner in every part of the country.

Many of the reforms that have been obtained, were secured by that organization. One cannot talk about the good side of Arbitration without linking same with one man. It has been my good fortune to work along side of him in Arbitration work for almost four years, and I can honestly tell you that he worked hard, conscientiously, faithfully for a cause—I am referring to Sol Raives, chairman of the Arbitration Committee of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce.

The contention of your committee is that —if we must arbitrate under this contract, we at least shall choose our arbitrators and not have them appointed for us.

New Jersey is a functioning organization; is served in most cases by separate New Jersey exchanges, even though they are located in the City of New York, and we want recognition for our organization. Although we were prevented from getting anywhere in this relation, however, we did not stop and did not fail to protect and render service to our members.

Our Board of Directors engaged counsel —Mr. Norman H. Samuelson, for theatre owners in Northern New Jersey; Assistant Corporation Counsel Joseph Varbalow, for theatre owners below the city of Trenton. Every one of our members' cases that were referred to us, were prepared by us and presented by our counsel and every effort was made to obtain for our members a square deal.

We do not think that we can have fair arbitration based on the present contract or on the present system of Arbitration. Although it is an improvement on what we had before, it still must be thrown out in its entirety and a fair, equitable and satisfactory plan adopted.

We are definitely opposed to this present system. You frighten your child into submission with a boogy-man; so, exhibitors are scared into almost anything by this bug-a-boo of F. I. L. M. Clubs, Boards of Trade, and Arbitration Boards. The only difference is that the boogy-man is abstract, while the F. I. L. M. Club, Boards of Trade, and the Aribtration Boards are very real.

In the early stages a friend of mine was hailed before the local F. I. L. M. Club. Around the table sat six judges all exchange men. Its chairman was another exchange man. This "Court of Justice" in my opinion was fashioned after the Spanish Inquisition and was worthy of its pattern. The case was very simple. The charge was that the exhibitor bought ten pictures and refused to play them.

Question (by the Chairman): "Why didn't you play the picture?"

Exhibitor: "Because they were sold to me as a first run and the exchange does not give me dates until after the theatre across the street has played these pictures."

Question: "How much did you pay for these pictures?"

Question: "Did you expect first run for $25.00?"

Answer: "I bought them that way."

Question (in a loud tone): Don't dodge the issue; answer my question."

Answer: "My opposition pays only $15.00."

Question: "Nobody asked you that. It is none of your business. They can do whatever they please with their stuff."

Answer: "But —"

Question: "No 'buts'—we have heard enough from you."

The exhibitor was sent out of the room and three minutes later he was ordered to play the pictures or have his film discontinued.

Due to the efforts of William Brandt, Bernard Edelhertz, the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce and the entry of Mr. Hays into this business, you now have exhibitors also on the Arbitration Board.

But the substituted plan still fails to solve the problem. We, arbitrators, (and I am speaking as a man who has served four years as an arbitrator) cannot arbitrate absolutely fairly when we are bound by the present contract and the rules referred to in the contract.

There has been a tendency to correct this evil. It is our sincere hope that all producers and distributors will realize in the very near future the great injustice that this form of arbitration works on both sides and will see fit to bring into this industry confidence and square dealing in the buying and selling of pictures.

Solon, the Athenian law-giver, would turn in his grave if he new some of the decisions rendered through our method of arbitration and the method of the carrying out of the award of the Arbitration Boards.

A theatre owner, in signing a contract and agreeing to Arbitration, waives his rights to trial by jury and his rights to have the merits of his case reviewed by a Court of law, and the judgment that is rendered is not carried out in a sensible, legal way, as presided by law, that is, through a court in which the judgment can be filed, but the exhibitor is forced to put up a deposit with each of about twenty-one exchanges or he does not receive any film. The amount of deposit ranges from $100 to $500 and in this territory it is usually $250.00. This, for the small theatre owner, is practically confiscation and means that he must pay this judgment, right or wrong, and cannot even bring the matter to law on a charge of fraud because he cannot afford the shutting down of his theatre, through not obtaining films and cannot afford to ask for injunctive relief because it entails much legal effort and great expense.

Our difficulties are identical with those of theatre owners throughout America. We have faith in the final solving of them by the M. P. T. O. A., our National Organization. Your committee recommends that the report rendered by our president, Joseph M. Seider, at the Milwauee convention be approved and endorsed by this organization, and that we urge that it be carried out by our National Organization, and that we ratify and support the efforts of our president for an equitable contract and for reforms in Arbitration.

A Bit of Comedy

A real novelty was introduced in the course of Monday's business session at Asbury. While the room was warming up with factful speeches and real accomplishment, a suspenseful diversion was afforded by a gruff looking individual demanding admittance at the window to the rear of President Joseph M. Seider.

The surprise came when two others, similarly clad, pushed their way in after him. They introduced themselves as Loew, Zukor and Rowland. After staging an amusing skit entitled "In Search of a Play-Date," they departed. The incident furnished not only amusement, but also served to renew interest in the business of the day.

Suit for $113,000 Aftermath of Selznick Co. Bankruptcy

IN MAY, 1923, a petition in bankruptcy was filed against the Selznick Pictures Corporation and it was charged that while insolvent the corporation transferred to the Pacific Southwest Trust and Savings Bank, one of the creditors, all rights and title to "The Common Law" and "Rupert of Hentzau," two of its best pictures, with the intention of making the bank a preferred creditor. Now the bank has filed in the Supreme Court of New York an action against seven defendants for $113,000, alleging that they had diverted the money from proper sources.

The defendants in this action are Walter Jerome Green, former president of the Utica Investment Company and formerly connected with the Savage Arms Company; William C. J. Doolittle, former vice-president of the Utica Investment Company and formerly president of the Selznick Distributing Corporation; Mark Hyman, Ralph B. Ittelson, James L. Tilton, L. F. Guimond, and Lawrence J. Darmour.

Three of these defendants, Doolittle, Ittelson and Hyman, were members of a committee organized for the purpose of re-establishing the Select Pictures Corporation, a subsidiary of the Selznick concern, which had also been put into bankruptcy.

It is alleged that the $130,000 was part of a trust fund which had been misapplied by the defendants. Louis Boehm, counsel for the plaintiff, said that besides "Rupert of Hentzau" and "The Common Law" the plaintiff claims to be the sole owner of the play "Modern Matrimony" and other motion pictures, and that the suit was in the special interest of all the producers whose money had been similarly diverted. Mr. Boehm also said:

"It is charged in the complaint that the bank was entitled to 70 per cent. of the gross proceeds derived from the distribution of its motion pictures, that the Selznick Distributing Corporation was to receive 30 per cent. for distributing the pictures, that it was agreed that the share of the bank should be kept in a separate trust fund and should be paid over to it weekly, that the officers and directors of the Selznick Corporation failed to keep the moneys of the bank and other producers separate from its own funds, but that they dipped into the trust funds of the bank and other producers to pay to themselves excessive salaries and meet the general expenses of the company."

Famous Players Aids Santa Barbara Sufferers

In answer to an appeal from Mayor Andreas of Santa Barbara for power wagons and powerful lights to aid rescue workers digging through earthquake debris, Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, promptly ordered portable studio electric equipment to be rushed to the stricken city. Within ten hours two electric generating plants and fifty one thousand watt lamps were installed in the ruined area of the city by studio electricians under the direction of James Gardy, an electrical engineer in the employ of the film company, which gave illumination for eight blocks where rescue crews were working.

Charles Eyton, Paramount's West Coast General Manager arrived in Santa Barbara before the electrical crew reached there, as representative of the company to see what further assistance could be given. Together with Tom White, studio casting director, he worked throughout the night.

At the studio in Hollywood Peter Harrod, chief electrician was holding additional equipment and large crew of men in readiness to send to Santa Barbara on a moment's notice.

EDDIE BONNS

"Eddie" Bonns in Charge of Warner Bros. Exploitation

As a further aid to exhibitors Warner Brothers are about to organize an exploitation department which will extend out into the field, with men stationed in all important districts, to put big showmanship back of the pictures in the 1925-26 program.

As the first step in this direction, the Warners have engaged "Eddie" Bonns, late of Metro-Goldwyn, who has put the big punch in several outstanding successes of the last few years and whose personal triumphs as a master of exploitation methods that count at the box office are well known.

Bonns opened up his new desk at the Warner office this week, and until the exploitation force is organized will devote his time in preparing special national exploitation for the biggest pictures in the Warner 1925-26 program.

BROTHER OF ADOLPHE OSSO DIES

Cables were received by E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announcing the death of Joseph Osso, brother of General Manager Adolphe Osso of Paramount's French organization. Mr. Osso's death occurred in Buenos Aires, Argentina, where he had been acting as representative of the Society of Authors and Composers of France, of which his father, Oscar Osso, is president.

Brown an F. B. O. Vice-President; Marcus Appointed Sales Head

ANNOUNCEMENT was made this week by Major H. C. S. Thomson, president and managing director of R-C Pictures, F. B. O. of America, Inc., and subsidiary corporations of a readjustment of executive personnel and duties, as a result of the death of Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges.

Left: Colvin W. Brown, who has been made a vice-president of F. B. O., and on the right is Lee Marcus, who has been appointed sales manager of the corporation.

Colvin W. Brown, who has been a member of the executive committee without specific office, has been created a vice-president and will supervise the distribution departments.

Lee Marcus, who was long assistant to Mr. Berman, has been appointed sales manager of the company.

The readjustment of duties will affect in no way J. I. Schnitzer, first vice-president. It will release Mr. Schnitzer and Major Thomson from some of their arduous routine and permit Mr. Schnitzer to concentrate more of his attention on the production activities, the studio management and the company's relations with independent producers.

D. A. Poucher, treasurer of the company will, as heretofore, be in charge of finance and accounts and the personnel of the various offices.

Tell Hizzoner This

A Marcus, Iowa, exhibitor was arrested for opening his theatre on Sunday. Things looked black for him. When the case came up in court, the showman argued that he hadn't violated the law because he hadn't sold tickets on Sunday. They were all sold during the week. The judge scratched his head for a while and then upheld the exhibitor.

Chicago Hums With Preparations For Greater Movie Season Drive

Milwaukee Objects

Plans for the observance of the Greater Movie Season have hit a serious snag in Milwaukee. In the language of Max Krofta, one of the exhibitors who originally supported the move, "the bubble has burst" and the outskirt houses have decided not to support the campaign.

The main trouble seems to be a feeling among theatre owners that it is wrong to expect them to foot so many of the bills of the drive without proportionate financial aid from the producers sponsoring the movement. Many of the outskirt exhibitors believe that August is the wrong time of the year for such a drive.

Although L. Braeger, Will Hays' representative, is still hopeful that a solution to the problem can be found, the outlook appears dark for any general observance. The Saxe houses may go through with the campaign alone, however, since Thomas Saxe, head of the chain, has been highly enthusiastic about the idea.

From several sources it was learned that collapse of the campaign was due in part to a feeling that the local committee which had been appointed was being ignored by Braeger. The local committee had been named several weeks ago and consisted of several outskirt exhibitors and several exchange men. Braeger, it is said, named his own committee instead, the members being confined to Saxe representatives and members of the Paramount office, it is charged.

FORM COMPANY TO PROMOTE BETTER PICTURES IN U. S.

With Canon William Sheafe Chase, of Brooklyn, as one of the incorporators, a company to be known as the Federal Motion Picture Council of America, incorporated during the past week with the secretary of state at Albany. The papers filed state that the company intends to promote and execute plans and methods designed to improve motion pictures produced and shown both in the United States and elsewhere. The company will maintain an office in New York City, but its operations are planned to extend throughout the entire United States. Among other things, it plans to conduct investigations and to compile data particularly with regard to the moral effects of motion pictures upon the public and likewise to seek cooperation in developing public sentiment favorable to wholesome screen productions.

The incorporators are: Maude M. Aldrich, of Winona Lake, Indiana; Mrs. Howard Bennett, Baltimore, Md.; Mary R. Caldwell, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Mrs. D. Leigh Colvin, New York City; Mrs. Robbins Gilman, Minneapolis; Minnie E. Kennedy, Nashville, Tenn.; Mrs. Robert Talbot-Perkins, Brooklyn; Dr. Robert Watson, Boston, Mass.; Mrs. Charles Merriam, Chicago, Ill.; Rev. J. Foster Wilcox, Philadelphia, Pa.; Rev. Charles Scanlon, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Charles F. Chase, Jackson Heights, N. Y., and Canon Chase.

Windy City's Advertising Appropriation Is $50,000—Commercial Concerns Aid—Other Places Swing in Line

WITH an advertising appropriation of $50,000 for its Greater Movie Season campaign, Chicago commands the attention of the entire industry and many commercial associations. That sum, to be expended within a few weeks, establishes a record not only for motion picture drives but for general business campaigns as well. Following a stirring address by Barney Balaban, treasurer and chairman of the finance committee, $7,000 was pledged in seven minutes by exhibitors at the general meeting, and according to reports from Chicago $33,000 cash is already in hand.

"I believe the benefits that will come for the next eleven months will greatly overshadow the benefits derived from August alone," Mr. Balaban declared. "This is the first time the small houses will have an opportunity of doing for themselves in institutional advertising what we have done for all our houses."

To be sure that small exhibitors will derive the greatest possible benefit it was agreed to place in all newspaper ads and on all outdoor advertising a caption reading "Attend the Motion Picture Theatre nearest Your Home." Assessments were made on the basis of 10 cents a seat for theatres with less than 400 capacity, and 20 cents a seat for theatres of more than 400. Important commercial co-operation has been extended by Chicago concerns.

The General Outdoor Advertising Company has donated 150 billboards, and with what the exchanges will use, the season will have a representation of more than 300 twenty-four sheet stands. The Chicago Gas and Light Company has agreed to insert Greater Movie Season material in all mailing matter, thus reaching more than 3,000,000 homes in Chicago and its vicinity. Five railroads have pledged their support to Ralph Kettering, general manager of the campaign, by displaying posters at their own expense at all stations within a 200-mile radius. Dining-car menus and other selling organs distributed by railroads will also carry the message.

Every Chicago newspaper has been quick to co-operate already. The motion picture page of the Evening American carries a box, "Where to Go and What to See. Greater Movie Calendar." The American will also distribute free box-office stickers reading, "A Greater Movie Season Theatre."

Minneapolis, New Orleans, Oklahoma City, Pittsburgh, Portland, Ore., Seattle and Tulsa all swung into line this week, making a total of forty-five important centers conducting territorial drives that will include several hundred smaller towns.

In Pittsburgh representatives of leading exhibitor and exchange factors have endorsed the campaign and elected the following executive committee: Dennis Harris of Harris-Davis Theatres; Milton Crandall, of Rowland & Clark; Louis K. Sidney, of Loew's Aldine; J. Galligher, of the Cameo, and William Kester, representing the second-run and independent exhibitors.

New Orleans appointed Maurice F. Barr of the Saenger Amusement Co. general manager of the campaign, and an executive committee of B. F. Brennan, Suburban Theatres; Rodney Toups, Loew's Crescent; Marion Ferrara, Trianon Theatre, and A. E. Chadwick, Strand Theatre.

As originator of the successful Northwest Go-to-Movie Week and a staunch advocate of a country-wide drive, William A. Steffes has been the unanimous choice of Minneapolis for the general managership there.

According to telegraphic reports from Oklahoma City, George A. McDermit of the Capitol Theatre has been appointed local general manager. Seven other towns will be linked to the campaigns that Oklahoma City and Tulsa will conduct. Ralph Talbert of the Majestic Theatre has taken charge of Tulsa activities, supported by William M. Smith, Orpheum Theatre; J. W. Clark, Majestic Theatre; W. C. Campbell, Empress; J. Brown, Lyric; Miss Hazel McCoy, Strand Theatre; Harry F. Castle, Palace Theatre; F. Johnson, Wonderland Theatre, and Roy Jackson, Cozy Theatre.

Extensive celebrations, embracing both a parade and a movie-ball to which ten stars have been invited, are under way in Seattle. General Manager J. Von Herberg of the Liberty has Robert Bender of the Columbia Theatre as chief lieutenant and Frank Edwards of the Wintergarden as chairman of the Portland Finance Committee. Negotiations are on to link Spokane into the Season.

Exhibitors in Little Rock, Ark., have taken concerted action to put the season across. R. T. Newton, Capitol Theatre, is chairman of the executive board, whose members are W. A. May, Royal Theatre; T. W. Sharp, New Theatre; N. J. Prunisky, Princess Theatre; W. M. Reeves, Highland Theatre, and Henry Pipin, Palace Theatre.

In New York City only the announcement of the general manager remains to complete plans that have been discussed at several meetings of nationally known exhibitors. This is expected during the week.

The manner in which independent theatre circuits are adopting the national plan is demonstrated by contacts established directly with the New York service bureau. N. E. Commerford has called on Mr. Hays and promised the complete co-operation of his circuit throughout Northern Pennsylvania. Forty-five houses of the Schine Circuit, operating from Gloversville, N. Y., with Ben Davis as comptroller, will conduct a concerted campaign, as will the fifteen houses of the United Theatre Enterprises, A. B. Hyman, president, whose headquarters are Huntington, W. Va.

Regional Directors to Protect The Interests of Independents

TAKING a leaf out of the nation's war-time defense book, Frederick H. Elliott, general manager of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America, will have regional directors as field captains of his national organization, dividing the country into twenty-six zones.

This was decided upon at a special meeting of the Independents in the Astor Hotel last week, the members ratifying a proposal made by Mr. Elliott. The regional directors will be direct representatives of the Independents' chief, working in conjunction with the agents of the M. P. T. O. A. Play Date Bureau, and will be charged with the duty of guarding independent interests, passing upon eligibility of applicants for membership and conducting membership campaigns.

The Elliott plan of organization provides for an immediate and active campaign in behalf of the members of his organization, and he has already appointed more than half of his field lieutenants. Those selected are: Lester S. Tobias, Yale Film Exchange, New Haven; Max Milder, Trio Productions, Washington, D. C.; A. C. Bromberg, Progress Pictures, Atlanta and New Orleans; Joseph L. Friedman, Celebrated Players Films, Chicago; W. T. Waintrup, State Film Service, Indianapolis; H. L. Muir, Advance Films, Minneapolis; F. J. Warren, Standard Films, Kansas City; Joseph L. Stern, Independent Film Co., Omaha; J. Berkowitz, First Graphic Films, Buffalo; J. S. Jossey, Progress, Cleveland; Gene Marcus, Twentieth Century, Philadelphia; J. H. Alexander, Columbia, Pittsburgh; R. J. Ingram, Progress, Dalas; Jack S. Grauman, Celebrated, Milwaukee.

Another forward move by the Independent Association was the creation of an Associate Membership Division to include manufacturers and others who do business with the members. This Division will be divided into three classes —A, B and C.

Class A will embrace film raw stock manufacturers, laboratories and lithographers. Class B will be made up of lobby display and mat makers. Class C will comprise printing, publishing and engraving concerns.

It was announced that since the selection of Mr. Elliott as general manager there have been numerous requests from accessory dealers for the creation of this division and that several were ready to take out memberships at once. In this connection it was announced that two new exchanges had been admitted to membership—the Specialty Film Co. of Dallas, and the Dependable Pictures Corporation of Boston. This makes five accessions to the independent ranks in the last week.

FREDERICK H. ELLIOTT
Newly elected general manager of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America.

There were several committee changes, the Assessment Committee being absorbed by the Ways and Means Committee and the Executive Committee increased from fourteen to sixteen members, so as to give the producers and exchangemen eight members each. H. Gluckman was elected to one of the new places, both of which were in the exchange list, and another exchange member will be chosen from the Pacific Coast.

The Conference Committee appointed at Milwaukee was discharged with a vote of thanks, its work having been taken by Mr. Elliott and Abe Carlos, the Independent's representative in the Play Date Bureau.

A resolution of tribute to R. F. ("Pete") Woodhull, the new national president of the M. P. T. O. and a pledge of co-operation to the theatre men was adopted, and a committee headed by Mr. Elliott and Dr. W. E. Shallenberger appointed to present it to him at the convention of his home organization, the M. P. T. O. of New Jersey, at Asbury Park. It was announced that a large delegation of Independents would attend the Asbury Park convention and that an informal meeting would be held there.

This was the last weekly meeting of the I. M. P. A. of A. for the summer, it having been decided that hereafter meetings will be held semi-monthly, on the first and third Thursdays.

Coming and Going

H. M. Warner is on his way to the coast to remain for sometime at the studo after several weeks at the company's New York office. Motley H. Flint, president of the Pacific Trust & Savings Co., who has been in New York on a short visit, accompanied Mr. Warner back to Los Angeles.

Messrs. Erb and Goebel, of the Associated Arts Corporation, have left for Los Angeles.

Art Schmidt, west coast district manager for Film Booking offices, has left on a tour of his territory.

M. H. Hoffman of the Tiffany-Truart productions leaves for Los Angeles on Friday, July 3, for an extended visit to the California studios of the organization.

HILDRETH APPOINTED COMPTROLLER

J. G. Bachmann, general manager of distribution for B. P. Schulberg Productions, appointed Richard Hildreth comptroller for the organization. Mr. Hildreth served for two years in a similar capacity for Preferred Pictures Corporation. He has already undertaken his new duties at the Schulberg Production offices.

Incorporations

The usual summer slump made its appearance in the number of companies incorporating and entering the motion picture business in New York State during the past week, when only four companies were granted charters by the Secretary of State, and these included one company formed for the purpose of manufacturing motion picture machines. The newly formed companies included the following: Campbell Motion Picture Corporation, capitalized at $5,000, with Maurice Campbell, Maurice Campbell, Jr., Mount Vernon; A. M. Vickberg, New York City; Wyko Film Library, Inc., manufacturing machines and not stating the amount of capitalization, with H. Wykes, A. P. Ginouves, J. Neilson, New York City; Skalla-Grim Play Corporation, $50,000, P. M. Abrahams, M. Kooperstein, J. Abrahams, New York City; Bertha Kalich, Incorporated, $50,000, Bertha Kalich, Lillian and Leon Spachner, New York City.

Strand Theatre Company of Quincy, Boston, capital $50,000; incroporators, Morris Sharaf, Boston; Joseph M. Levenson, Boston, and Fred B. Murphy, Quincy.

Merit Film Company, Boston; capital, $25,000; incorporators, Nathan R. Goodman, Boston, Robert W. Cobe, Boston, and Irene Davis Clarke, Winchester.

Boost the Air Mails, Woodhull Urges Exhibitors

Do you know that for a year the Post Office Department has been operating a transcontinental mail service by air? Not one in a hundred do. Do you know that on July 1 an overnight air mail system will be inaugurated between New York and Chicago? The percentage of those in possession of this fact is still smaller.

For that reason, R. F. Woodhull, president of the M. P. T. O. A., and Paul Henderson, second assistant postmaster general, have both written theatre owners in the vicinity of New York and Chicago requests that they use their screens to advise the public of the old and the new air services.

It is hoped that theatre owners will heed these requests, if for no other reason than that the Post Office Department and the M. P. T. O. A. have in the past co-operated to mutual advantage. The goodwill accruing from this co-operation was recently shown by the appearance of the postmaster general at Hartford, Conn., before the State Legislature, when he asked that relief from further taxation be granted Connecticut exhibitors.

LEE MARCUS GETS GIFT

As a token of the high esteem in which he is held by the field managers of F. B. O., Lee Marcus, assistant general manager of exchanges, was presentde with a gold wrist watch at a banquet held in his honor at the Hotel Astor, at which many notables of the film and show world were present. Among those who attended were Ben Bernie and his orchestra, Phil Baker, of "Artists and Models," Harry Rose, "The Broadway Jester," and many other "big timers."

LAZARUS MARRIES

Jeff Lazarus, publicity director for the Los Angeles Paramount theatres, was married this week to Miss Belva French of Hollywood, a screen actress. The wedding came as a surprise. After a short honeymoon at the beach the couple will return to Los Angeles and the bridegroom will again take up his job of writing inspired ads for the Paramount downtown theatres.

Connecticut Tax and Censorship Bill to Be Taken to U. S. Supreme Court

A Theatre S. O. S.

As evidence of the part that the motion picture theatre can play in any community, witness the request granted by the exhibitors of Worcester, Mass. Blood transfusion was considered the only means of saving a hospital patient. A relative, seeking the quickest way of obtaining a subject for this purpose, turned to the film exhibitors for aid. As a result slides were flashed upon the screens of Worcester film theatres, asking that anyone willing to consent to a blood transfusion to save a human life commnuicate with the authorities at the hospital where the patient was.

North Carolina Makes Woodhull Member for Life

R. F. Woodhull, president of the M. P. T. O. A., has returned from the convention of the M. P. T. O. of North Carolina at Wrightsville Beach, N. C., and the outing of the M. P. T. O. of Maryland at Havre de Grace, which he attended with National Director A. Julian Brylawski of Washington, D. C.

The outing of the Maryland organization at the Bayou Hotel, Havre de Grace, was a joyous day for all, concluding with a banquet in the evening. In his address there President Woodhull spoke feelingly of the fine co-operation the M. P. T. O. A. had always received from Maryland.

President Woodhull was particularly gratified with the cordial reception extended him at Wrightsville Beach and the evident interest in national organization displayed. He told of the practical business service the organization was rendering theatre owners by way of film adjustments, etc. He was honored with a life membership in the North Carolina organization.

President Woodhull is attending the three-day convention of the M. P. T. O. A., of New Jersey at Asbury Park, June 29, 30 and July 1, at which will also be present other national officers, including Sydney S. Cohen, chairman of the Board of Directors.

MONTREAL CENSORS PROSECUTE

Representatives of the Famous Players Canadian Corp. appeared before Chief Judge Decarie in the Montreal Police Court in June 22 charged with changing a film called "The Little French Girl," contrary to the statutes. The summons for the prosecution was issued at the request of Count R. de R. Sales, president of the Quebec Board of Moving Picture Censors, Montreal, who alleges that deleted portions of the feature were re-inserted before it was publicly screened at the Capitol Theatre, Montreal. President de Sales seized the print of the picture after it had been presented at the Capitol Theatre for several performances and the latest development is the court hearing. Summary trial of the Famous Players Canadian Corp. was fixed for a later date.

Question Is State's Authority to Levy on Film Already Taxed in Another State, Says Nutmeg Exhibitors' Counsel

SIGNING of the new motion picture tax and censorship bill in Connecticut by Governor Trumbull, thereby making it a law, immediately was met with concerted action by exhibitors of the state and distributing companies, who have announced that they will take the matter before the United States Supreme Court, seeking an injunction against the new statute on the ground that it is unconstitutional.

Attempts to obtain the injunction will be based upon a point involving interstate commerce—as to whether the state of Connecticut for exhibition purposes which already has been taxed in another state.

The bill was signed by the governor on Wednesday, June 24, over the protests of Acting Postmaster General John H. Bartlett, Will Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., and the Connecticut Exhibitors' Association. At the same time the governor announced that he had appointed John J. Splaine of New Haven to be state agent to administer the law, subject to his direction. The law became effective Wednesday, July 1. Mr. Splaine formerly was connected with the S. Z. Poli Theatrical Enterprises. The law provides for him a salary not exceeding $4,500, to be fixed by the board of control.

State Tax Commissioner William H. Blodgett, who under the law must see that its provisions are enforced, announced that enforcement of the new statute will not be delayed voluntarily by the state because of threatened court action by the theatre owners and distributors. Arrangements have been made to open the commission's office in New Haven on July 1, the date the law becomes effective.

Benedict M. Holden, counsel for the Connecticut exhibitors, said:

"I am very sorry that Governor Trumbull did not see the matter in the same light that President Coolidge did a similar bill which he vetoed when he was governor of Massachusetts. We shall take the matter to the United States court at once on the question of unconstitutionality."

George W. Wickersham of New York, former attorney general of the United States, has been retained to be associated with Attorney Holden in the fight for the injunction against the law.

At a meeting of exhibitors Thursday night, June 25, they issued a statement, which, in part, is as follows:

"We have read Governor Trumbull's statement and notice that he fails to mention that the postmaster general of the United States and the American Express Company protested against his signing the bill, as neither the postal authorities or the express company can find a way to ascertain whether or not the tax has been paid and the bill provides a penalty for the delivery of a film unless the tax has been paid.

"Motion picture exhibitors in Connecticut have never heard any demand for censorship. If there was any sentiment in the General Assembly it was not evident, and the governor himself has frequently expressed his disapproval of the statutory regulation of morals or the attempt to improve the morals and habits of the people by censorship or regulation.

"The governor says that the censorship feature amounts to a minimum in this direction. It could not be more severe. It places the final decision in the hands of the tax commissioner and from his decision there is no appeal. What is immoral, or offensive to racial or religious groups is left entirely to one official.

"It is impossible to understand the mechanics of the bill. It provides a penalty for the delivery of a film unless the same is registered and the tax paid thereon. If the tax has been paid and the film registered, and later, through accident, injured or destroyed so that it cannot be exhibited again, is the $10 tax to be collected on the new film which is brought in to replace the broken one?

"It is true that the representatives of the motion picture industry expressed a willingness to bear a fair share of the expenses of the government. We are doing that now, but if the governor is correct in a former statement that the state is being run within its income there is no necessity for taxing motion pictures.

"We are sorry that Governor Trumbull has been influenced to sign this measure. In fact we are surprised. We all attended in the House of Representatives, no one spoke in favor of the bill but Representative Durant of Guilford and we believed that Governor Trumbull was giving us a fair, open and above-board hearing on the merits of the bill."

In New Haven on Thursday, June 25, thirteen representatives of the distributing companies that have exchanges in that city discussed the law and the possible situations that may arise as a result of it. The bill and the governor's statement in regard to approving it were read by Lester Tobias of the Yale Exchange.

Most Motion Picture Sets Stiff, Says Diamont-Berger

By SUMNER SMITH

THE Greenwich Village poet was weak with hunger. He had not eaten in months. Now he was sprawling at full-length on the downy divan in the drawing-room of his home, sprinkling the rich Persian rug with cigarette ashes, passing black finger-tips through his touseled hair while he composed an ode to Psyche that he hoped would bring home the bacon. A butler stood at a respectful distance, ready to retrieve sheets of paper scattered by the breeze through the half-open stained glass window, while the poet's German police dog, appraised by the last dog show at $50,000, noisily gulped pork chops on the marble mantelpiece.

If you saw this scene in the movies wouldn't it strike you as a bit of all wet? What business has a penniless poet with a mansion worthy of remodeling into a Long Island roadhouse? How come he can't eat? Are hock shops unknown to his aesthetic soul?

This is burlesquing a point made by Henri Diamont-Berger, the French director; burlesquing it to make vivid a criticism of American studio sets. This criticism is that Americans use stock sets of homes that don't in any way reflect the personality of the occupant. There always is the door on the right, and the fireplace in the center, and the over-stuffed divan before it, with the narrow table and its row of books just behind the divan. Do the furnishings afford any clue to the personality of the man? Does he belong in that sort of an environment? Not many cases, believes the French director. He may be a gay and galloping blade, but you'd never know it from the formal home the studio donates him.

Motion pictures keep on trying for the utmost in realism, utilizing all the little tricks of the trade, calling upon the orchestra or the organ to stir the emotions as the plot unflods. Henri Diamond-Berger is striving toward the Nth degree of realism, and he wants his backgrounds to contribute a fair share toward the illusion. He wants to film intelligent, human stories with a minimum of hokum, and he has assumed the sole responsibility for his product by taking over the Paragon studio in Fort Lee, N. J., and employing his own artists. He is not that sort of person unjustly labeled a modernist, though he did introduce modernistic effects in pictures in France two years before "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari," and he doesn't intend to start any revolution. He's just going to be as careful of the smaller artistic touches as of the story and the acting and the continuity.

HENRI DIAMONT-BERGER

The French director's present position in motion picture can be traced to two incidents, small in themselves. Several years ago, in France, when he was giving pictures rather rough treatment as a newspaper reviewer, Charles Pathe called Diamont-Berger to him and asked for an explanation. The then newspaper man argued his points until Pathe told him to take a job directing and prove them. He made good.

Then, a couple of years ago, Diamont-Berger came to this country and paid Elmer Pearson of Pathe a social visit. Not knowing English well, he said he was here for a "lease" when he meant rest. Pearson took up the matter with John S. Woody of Associated Exhibitors and Woody said, "Sure, give him a contract."

Now Diamont-Berger has taken over the Paragon Studio at Fort Lee and will produce seven pictures before the end of the present year. Part of them will be distributed by Associated and plans for the others near the end of discussion. Eugene Walter provided the scenario for the first, "Fifty-Fifty," with Hope Hampton, Louise Glaum and Lionel Barrymore, which has been made. Miss Hampton is under contract for several pictures. Diamont-Berger leans toward stage stars, as witness the cast in another picture, "Lovers' Island," which he will make. This will be composed of James Kirkwood and Louis Wolheim, among others. Holbrook Blinn has been signed for one film. Hope Hampton, Otto Kruger and Louise Glaum have already appeared in "The Marionettes," a two-reel experiment in natural colors.

Diamont-Berger may make a feature film in natural colors. He hears that Douglas Fairbanks plans to do so. But that project won't be undertaken until the seven features now planned are out of the way.

The French director's pictures have had a great success in England and France because of the human feeling he gets into them. He is a careful workman, as witness his study of the interpretive value of sets.

Of major importance in Diamont-Berger's production will be Jose Zamora and Gaston De Leury, artists. The former was for years a designer for Poiret and also has designed many sets for big stage plays. The latter has been in this country several years studying American methods and will head the department.

To Take Censor Bill to U. S. Supreme Court

During the meeting, Charles C. Pettijohn, general counsel for the Will Hay's office, was called on the phone in New York and it was announced that he had said that a meeting had been called of the heads of the distributing companies in New York together with the legal counsel for these concerns to take immediate action on the law. The New Haven exchangemen were advised to "sit tight and await developments."

The officials have signified their belief that the exchanges possibly will be removed from Connecticut and established in Springfield, Mass.

Motion picture exchanges in Connecticut already are taxed $25 a year for the privilege of carrying film in their vaults. The new law, in addition to placing a censorship on all pictures, excepting news reels, gives the tax commissioner authority to revoke the registration of any film found "to be immoral or of a character to offend the racial or religious sensibilities of any element of society." The clause in regard to the tax calls for the collection of $10 of the first 1,000 feet and 50 cents for each additional 100 feet of film of the same subject. The members of the exhibitors' association emphasize the point that the owners of theatres in the small towns, which present a new show daily, will bear the burden of the tax, although the law states that the tax shall be levied upon the distributors. It was said that the most the state could derive for the first year from the law would be from $40,000 to $50,000.

Alleged Lack of Screen Credit Agitates Canadian Parliament

WHETHER the Canadian Government intended to permit moving picture producers of the United States to make photoplays in the Dominion and then designate the actual scenery employed as certain sections of the United States or other countries was a matter that was brought up in Ottawa, the Canadian Capital, in connection with the making of "The Knockout," a Milton Sills feature, by the Earl Hudson Unit of First National Productions, Inc., New York.

The question arose when several Members of Parliament, local theatre men and others of Ottawa ascertained that advance advertising for "The Knockout" referred to it as a story of the Maine woods. The matter found its way to the Ottawa Morning Journal and an interview was published from Fred Stanley, business manager and location manager of the Milton Sills Company, in which he explained that the Maine locaion for exteriors had first been thought of but that when he visited that state he was unable to find locales which were suitable for the story.

Mr. Stanley pointed out that through the co-operation of the Canadian Government Motion Picture Bureau and lumbering interests in and around Ottawa, he was able to secure the desired scenic settings in the vicinity of Beauchene, Quebec. He publicly thanked Director Ray Peck, Frank Badgley and other officials of the Canadian Government Motion Picture Bureau for their personal help and asserted that screen credit would be given to the Government Bureau for assistance rendered.

As for the excitement over the possibility of the picture being shown as one of the Maine woods, Mr. Stanley intimated that all advertising and publicity had been changed and that the oudoor scenes of the feature would be designated as Canada, the story being changed somewhat to suit the conditions.

"Personally, I can't see how we can do otherwise," declared Mr. Stanley in the interview. "At any rate you may be sure that full screen credit for all exterior scenes will be given to Canada."

Mr. Stanley also declared that he thought the day was fast approaching when more and more American producers would avail themselves of Canadian film locations, especially those companies who have been concentrating their production activities in the Eastern United States.

T. L. Church, Federal member of Parliament for Toronto, was one who intimated that he would bring up on the floor of the Canadian House of Commons a resolution prohibiting the showing of pictures in Canada which had been taken in the Dominion and which represented other countries, but Mr. Stanley's explanation has probably offset this.

Schiller Trip Means No Foreign Invasion, Says Loew in Statement

THAT no misconception may possibly arise regarding the theatre policy of the Loew interests abroad, Marcus Loew, President of Loew's, Inc., and Metro-Goldwyn has made public the following statement:

"The recent departure for Europe of Mr. E. A. Schiller of our organization has caused comment in the trade press to the effect that it was our intention to start a wholesale theatre building policy in England and the Continent. This of course is not the case, and while people on the inside know the facts, it seems advisable at this time to make the issue clear and our position equally plain.

"We do not intend to build any theatres in England because our films are being properly presented there. Three years ago we arranged with the owners of the Tivoli, London, to play our films. This arrangement has proved beneficial to us and also to the British exhibitors and the industry generally in England. We are therefore perfectly content with our present London situation.

"We recently became associated with the Gaumont company in the operation of their exchanges and to assist in the management of their theatres in France. It was for this purpose that Mr. Schiller was sent abroad.

"We have no intention of erecting theatres anywhere in the world merely for the purpose of creating a competitive situation.

"Our purpose in this business is to improve it, and not to undermine other interests.

"We have no desire to build or own a theatre in any city which is adequately seated and properly equipped theatrically to present pictures as they reasonably should be exhibited. Indeed, we are not out looking for spots to build theatrse at all, but rather to help the European public get the best entertainment if there are no facilities for their getting it today.

"It is only by companies of experience in theatre management and picture presentation taking an interest in exhibition throughout the world, that this industry can properly develop. That has been the experience in America, and we feel that the expansion of motion pictures abroad will come through progressive methods of presentation in adequate theatres.

"Where a foreign country is devoid of adequate houses, we shalll attempt to convince local exhibitors that they ought to build proper theatres and we are ready to lend our resources to help build such theatres.

"Theatre owners abroad are capable of providing this amusement service for the public. We have no intention whatsoever of trespassing.

"I hope there will be no misconstruction of what I am saying. Our spirit is not competitive. Our desire is to keep hands off where things are recognizedly right. And to help with our resources and advice where they are admittedly wrong."

Showman Fights Town to Bar Municipal Theatre

A controversy between Frank H. Wotton, proprietor of the Park Theatre in Lebanon, N. H., and the town officials and improvement society, caused by the decision of the latter to present picture shows, resulted in the arrest of Mr. Wotton on May 1, but he continued to film show on June 20 without a license. At a town meeting in March, it was voted that the town of Lebanon and the Lebanon Improvement Society, Inc., would present picture shows in the Town Hall beginning on July 1. Frank J. Cantlin was appointed manager.

Town officials refused to renew the license of Mr. Wotton on May 1, but the continued to present shows. His attorneys filed a bill in equity in the Superior Court, including a petition for an injunction against the town officials to restrain them from opening their film shows on July 1. The arrest of Mr. Wotton followed closely on the serving of these papers on the town and improvement society. He was arraigned in Municipal Court and the presiding justice, after hearing the facts in the matter, took the case under advisement.

Eight Theatregoers Perish in Mysterious Kansas City Fire

THE GILLIS THEATRE, a pioneer landmark of Kansas City, was destroyed late Thursday night, June 25, by an explosion and fire which burned an unknown number of persons in the ruins. Early estimates were that thirty-five persons perished in the theatre, but the estimate was lowered to seven or eight late the next afternoon. The house was a combination picture and tabloid show, located at Fourth and Walnut streets. Scores of persons were injured. The estimated loss was $150,000.

The explosion was followed almost instantly by flames, the roof of the five-story building tumbling in, leaving the old walls stark and ragged in the firelit sky. It was near 11 o'clock and those who escaped did so miraculously, according to witnesses. The house was equipped with a front exit, a rear exit and the main entrance. The front exit was a circuitous route. It led from the theatre through a long hall down a flight of steps, a route that in confusion became a puzzle in a maze of steps. Added to the irregular way of the exits were the everbreaking boards, sending men sprawling pellmell. The rear exit was cut off.

The tragedy came with terific swiftness The midnight show was just beginning. A picture was on the screen. Only a comparative few were in the audience, as the stage numbers were not to start until midnight. When the entire section of the theatre collapsed, it sent brick and debris into surrounding streets, breaking windows in buildings as far as a block away. Police and firemen began taking the injured to hospitals, one fireman losing his life. The streets were littered with bleeding and crying men and women. Scores were dragged from the ruins and given emergency treatment. Many persons in restaurants and buildings near the theatre also were injured.

The cause of the explosion remains a mystery, although there is an investigation under way by the police.

Paramount and Butterfield Waging Battle in Michigan

DETROIT and Michigan film circles are intensely interested in the battle now waging in various Michigan cities by the Paramount and Butterfield theatre operating forces. First gun fire was noted a few weeks ago when Paramount took over active control of a string of theatres in Bay City. Since that time the Butterfield interests have been spreading their wings to all sections of the city.

The biggest piece of news of the week came with the announcement that a deal had all but been completed between Butterfield and the Consolidated Theatres, Inc., in Grand Rapids, whereby the former will take over all the holdings of the Furniture City company. This includes the Majestic Gardens, leading first run, and several prominent houses in the downtown section of the city. Butterfield already has Powers, the legitimate theatre and thus the city seems closed to his business opponents.

Pontiac was also invaded last week by the Butterfield hosts. The Oakland, one of the string operated by the A. J. Kleist forces, was purchased by Butterfield. It has been closed for remodelling and will reopen September 1 under its new management.

Owing to the press of expansion duties, Edward V. Beatty, who has acted as Butterfield's general manager for ten years, has taken on an assistant. He is J. Oliver Brooks, former local exchange manager. Brooks will book all Butterfield theatres.

The appointment of Mr. Cobbs is to fill this vacancy left by the passing of Mr. Lynch. Mr. Cobbs' appointment, like that of Mr. Whyte, is in line with Pathe's fixed policy of promotion within the organization.

Paul Mooney to Head the New Alliance Producing Co.

Speculation as to the future plans of Paul C. Mooney, who recently resigned as vice-president of the Producers Distributing Corp., are set at rest by the announcement that he is to head the Alliance Producing Corp., a half a million dollar company organized under the laws of the State of New York.

The purposes of the new company are to establish a chain of dramatic stock theatres throughout the United States and Canada, to produce plays for Broadway and to engage in the production and distribution of motion pictures.

Tentative plans have already been made for the establishment of a number of dramatic stock theatres in this country during the coming season, and for the production of several legitimate attractions for Broadway. Plans for the motion picture and distribution end of the organization are still in abeyance.

Mr. Mooney, organizer of the new company, is a well known figure in the theatrical and motion picture world. For the past year he has been vice-president of the Producers Distributing Corp., and previous to that was the general manager of the Louis B. Mayer Productions, Inc.

Wisconsin Finances Healthy; Big Blue Law Fight Impends

"IT'S all right to leave your pocketbook at home; there will be no collection taken at this year's convention."

With the finances of the Wisconsin branch of the M. P. T. O. in exceptionally healthy condition, the board of directors is sending out this unique message in notifying members that the annual convention has been set for August 25 and 26.

Heretofore, it has invariably been necessary to appeal for funds from members attending the state convention. However, the condition of the treasury is such at present that this practice will be dispensed with, according to President Fred Seegert.

With a decision reached on the date of the convention, talk already has arisen concerning the election of officers, with indications pointing to three probable candidates for the presidency.

There is certain to be an attempt to retain Seegert as president, Seegert has announced that he is not a candidate and feels there should be a change, but in the same breath he adds that he has never shirked his duty and for that reason it is believed he will consent to a third consecutive term, if there is enough sentiment for him.

Besides Seegert, those most prominently mentioned are E. W. Van Norman of the Parkway, Milwaukee, and Tom Foster of Stanley, Wis. Both of the latter are two of the oldest and most ardent workers in the organization. Each has a host of followers, and for that reason if Seegert decided to step out there should be a lively battle for the job.

Aside from the election, the blue laws and the matter of arbitration are expected to be the main topics of discussion.

The question of the blue laws has become especially aggravated during the last few weeks. Two attempts to obtain repeal of the state blue laws met with failure in the legislature. At the same time, Mrs. Mae Zimmerman, Cumberland exhibitor, was arrested seven times when she defied reformers. Mrs. Zimmerman's fight, it is felt, should become the fight of the entire organization. Members of the M. P. T. O. feel that the reformers, spurred on by victory at Cumberland, will endeavor to make new conquests.

The situation at Cumberland has become so acute that Henry Staab, executive secretary of the M. P. T. O., has announced he will leave shortly for the scene of battle in Barron county to hold a conference with the district attorney and exhibitors in that territory.

With Mrs. Zimmerman protesting discriminatory treatment and the governor having taken a hand in the controversy by ordering that the laws be enforced impartially throughout the county, it is feared that other towns in the vicinity may be turned blue, unless steps are taken to prevent such an occurrence.

Those who attended the board of directors meeting at which plans for the annual meeting were laid included: Fred Seegert, Regent; Steve Bauer, Venus; E. W. Van Norman, Parkway; Ernest Langemack, Colonial; George Fisher, Milwaukee; J. H. Silliman, of the Silliman chain; George Bauch, Mirth; Max Krofta, Idlehour, and Tom Foster of Stanley.

Will Block Selling of Pictures Prevail Next Season?

Will many of the distributing companies attempt a compulsory block selling policy of their product for the coming film season? In a letter to all producers and distributors President R. F. Woodhull, of the M. P. T. O. A., asks the question for relay to the organization members. He says:

"One of the major producing companies has advised us that while in the past the company has asked theatre owners to buy on this basis, this year no theatre would be compelled to purchase all of the pictures in this way, and has asked us to so advise the theatre owners of the country.

"We believe that the volume of quality pictures of real box office merit available on the market today, makes the compulsory purchasing of pictures in large blocks at the commencement of the season a hardship as well as unfair to theatre owners."

FREE SHOWS IN TEXAS

New Warner Appointments Are Announced on Return of Morris

SAM E. MORRIS, general manager of distribution for Warner Bros., is back in New York after a visit to several middle western cities in the interest of the organization. He conferred with branch managers and with exhibitors, opened two new exchanges, and made arrangements for the taking over of the Warner product from former franchise-holders in two territories.

The new Warner branch sales offices are in Milwaukee and Indianapolis. In Milwaukee Mr. Morris installed as manager E. F. Nine, who had long handled Vitagraph pictures there as a representative of the Chicago office. Calvin Bard, also an executive and salesman of experience, was placed in charge of Indianapolis.

Mr. Morris announced also the appointment of Harry Lustig, formerly with Metro-Goldwyn, as Warner west coast division manager, with headquarters in Los Angeles. His territory includes Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle and Salt Lake City.

Mr. Morris visited, too, in Chicago, Minneapolis and St. Louis, and in each city conferred with leading exhibitors.

While in the west Mr. Morris made arrangements for the taking over of Warner product from the franchise-holders in the Minneapolis, Butte and Seattle territories. This product, which includes all releases to date, will be handled in future by the exchanges. Other announcements from the Warner Bros. executive offices in New York tell of the acquiring by branch exchanges of product in Boston, New Haven, Chicago and Indianapolis territories.

Thalberg, Recovering from Flu, is Given Surprise Party

Irving Thalberg, associate executive at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, who has been convalescing from an attack of influenza, was given a surprise party recently by studio associates at his Los Angeles home. Mr. Thalberg was put into touch with the latest developments at the Culver City studios and was intermittently serenaded by the orchestra. The party was celebrated on the eve of Mr. Thalberg's departure to Coronado, Cal., where, in accordance with the instructions of his doctors, he is to play golf for a week before resuming his executive duties at Culver City.

SECTIONAL MEETINGS SUCCESS

A sectional meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Washington was held in the Davenport Hotel, Spokane, last week. Twenty-three theatre owners were present, two from Idaho and one from Montana, in addition to the Eastern Washington boys. So much enthusiasm and progressive spirit was shown, that it was decided to hold these sectional meetings quarterly J. M. Hone, secretary of the organization, went over from Seattle to preside at the meeting, which closed with a banquet in the evening.

THE FIRST RUN

PRESENTATIONS — PROLOGUES — MUSIC

Edited by Colby Harriman

COMPETING WITH NATURE

IT IS interesting to note the various motives prompting producers in the selection of their stage settings. All of the sets used on the stage of the motion picture theater are, perhaps, given a more critical scrutiny by the audiences, because their cubic limitations of space are brought into sharp contrast with the settings used in the motion pictures where the various scenes can move in perfect freedom, and secure the actual atmosphere to assist the players in expressing themselves.

The producer of the presentation stage is supposed to create an art form which rests essentially upon the principal artistic elements within his range; music, the dance, the song, pantomime. His entire setting from curtain decorations to background and costumes is supposed to imitate and indicate in a symbolic way the atmosphere which the picture can actually portray.

Here on the stage it is necessary for the producer to suggest a mountain with a jagged line in the background; a billowy meadow with a splash of green; a mighty forest with two or three tree trunks in the foreground, etc.

While some producers may chafe at what seems to them a seeming limitation, yet they are enjoying a great freedom. This very freedom permitting them to indulge in myriad forms of expression which may be a straight suggestion of the theme, of the picture and more effectively expressed because of the stereoscopic effect given by the setting, plus the addition of flesh and blood characters.

It would be fallacy for a producer to compete with Nature, as there are two fundamental elements which point the difference—one is Style and the other is Reality.

Unfortunately for motion picture producers the general public has not been educated sufficiently to the point of accepting impressionistic and highly suggestive scenic treatments as backgrounds for their film stories, but a Style has been recognized in stage settings and linked to the theater. The public has realized the inadequacy of the stage to compete with Nature and has become reconciled to the new art which is rapidly gaining a foothold in the leading theaters.

Realism on the stage in settings proved itself to be cumbersome and inadequate. It became necessary for patrons to sit and wait a full half hour to change single settings of elaborate decoration, and after all it was only defective and even sometimes a miserable transcript of Nature conjured on the stage despite the ingenuity of the technician. For instance, a setting is recalled by the writer a few years ago—a forest act. The stage was arranged in hills and covered with boxes in which were a profusion of real fir trees, genuine moss, heather, etc., and diagonally across the stage ran a real brook. Behind an invisible wire caged squirrels hopped about and frightened birds flew from corner to corner. This was interesting to the technicians and was commended by the critics, but it really detracted from the action of the Act because of its many absurdities.

The presentation stage offers the opportunity for the establishment of Style. It is perfectly proper to secure the basic elements of a set such as a tree, flowers, set pieces, etc., but let them be so arranged and treated with lights as to suggest, permitting them to be a symbolic background of the theme, and assisting the action in creating and establishing an atmosphere complimentary to the picture.

MAKING COSTUMES

THE KIND of materials used in making costumes is a vital factor in the appearance of the finished costume. The weave, the weight and the surface of the cloth should be taken into consideration when the design is ready to be executed, in order that the costumes may express the period of the action, social class and dramatic situation of the character impersonated. Climatic conditions influence to a great extent the kinds of materials used. For instance, races living in warm latitudes use cotton and linen, and other thin tissue while those inhabiting cold climates use wool and heavy weaves of cotton and linen. The next condition which influences the kind of materials used is that of social distinction with wealth. Rich and powerful of all ages and nations have more elaborate raiment than the poor and lowly.

In costuming for the theater, however, it is not necessary to use the actual material worn in that period, but it is necessary to give the effect of the correct material.

Poor people and peasants usually wear the coarsely woven cloth. Royalty and powerful persons make their robes of rich, heavy material. Certain materials such as silk and velvet were not known to the early or primitive races. Certain materials are absolutely expressive of certain races, and all these points must be taken into consideration when the costume is designed for a presentation.

Under the heading of Weave, we divide the materials according as they are coarse or fine. Coarser material includes such textiles as tarlatan, mosquito netting, fish net, towelling, matting, burlap, coarse muslin, and other coarse weaves. Fine material includes such textiles as chiffon, georgette, mull, gauzes of all kinds, cheese cloth, crepe de chine, voile, lawn, etc.

Under the heading of Weight, the materials are divided according as to whether they are light or heavy. The heavy textiles are such as velvet, plush, denim, some kinds of silk crepe, some satins, corduroy, flannel, some grades of unbleached muslin, Turkish towelling, felt, jersey, cotton, etc. Under the heading of Light Materials some of the textiles are silk, crepe, China silk, georgette, chiffon, nets of all kinds, laces, gauzes, etc.

Under the heading of Surface, textiles are divided according as they are dull or shiny, that is, having lustre. Textiles having lustre are metallic cloth, such as gold cloth, metallic oil cloth which comes in many colors, silver cloth, pineapple cloth in any color, heavy satins, taffeta, sateen, poplin, silk damask, glazed silk, etc.

Textiles having a dull surface, are velvet, silk crepe, corduroy, unbleached muslin, Turkish towelling, etc.

Materials should also be considered aside from the three main divisions already described whether the surface is plain, figured or striped. This point is important because in certain periods and with certain races the woven decorations of fabrics are very typical and expressive in their characteristic taste in color and decoration.

Big First Run Presentations

RIVOLI THEATRE
New York City

Feature Picture: "Paths to Paradise" (Paramount)

Music

Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz Festival is all that Dr. Riesenfeld promises and he personally conducts the orchestra, which is the best guarantee of the interpretations of the numbers so cleverly presented in this festival.

(a) "Covered Wagon Days."
(b) "The Old Tin Type."
(c) "U. S. S. Rivoli."
(d) "Jazzland Limited."

The first number is interpreted with moving perspective, projected (cloud machine) upon the close in hangings, of mountains, plains and clouds. The lighting on the orchestra is canary flood from top changing to blue, from balcony breast, cross spots banked, with proscenium lighting of similar tone cut through with magenta spots, this again changes (dimmer change) to magenta high lighting as canary fades with blues on dimmers and flashes of red to cut blue, with canary flood for finish.

The (b) number is the interior of the old fashioned tin type studio with the local band and orchestra having their pictures taken, each with their instrument and in comedy dress and make up, grouped in two rows, against a painted transparent sky-light backing draped from each side with soft hangings. The lighting was foots, sides and top of canary with blended blue and white through sky-light this fades then for finish, the photographer takes flash light of group, leaving the close in curtains fall on dark stage.

The (c) number starts in the orchestra with the pennant flags waving at the mast head topped with red lamp and a character in naval uniform shouting "All Ashore, etc." as the musicians are flooded with blue on dimmers, with the starting of the music the orchestra now wearing sailor, round hats, start swaying back and forth, as the passing of the clouds are projected on the close in curtains, and wave machine projects water on stripper stretched across front of orchestra stage, this is very effective, also, on side hangings over heads of orchestra the water is moving.

For the finale, the curtains part and we see the deck house, left center, and part of deck with blue backing and lights moving past in the distance, then slowly and dimly visible at first, growing lighter as it crosses the bow of the ship, we see the Statue of Liberty. The scene fades to a black put.

The (d) number followed very closely the idea of the ocean number in the first part except that the effect was that of railroad train, the crying of the news and candy butcher going through the train, the calling for cards in the club car, etc., as the curtains parted we were taking a trip with a jazz band on a club car and through the windows the passing landscape, which is the best we have ever seen, brightly lighted in canary to give sun effect was ever changing. This panorama through the windows was done in model relief beautifully colored with trees, farms and houses, roads and streams mounted on a revolving disc attached to motor which kept the speed normal and the horizon (seemingly) ever changing. Special numbers were introduced in the car lighted with canary foots, sides and top while the numbers were all done in amber spot. With the effect still carried on the stage dims, and the scene changes to a total black stage, across which, to center, the outlines of a man is seen. He is carrying red and white railroad lanterns. From out the blackness a small light appears, as from a locomotive in the distance. Then two small lights appear below the headlight, and we see the man flash his lanterns signalling the engineer. The trackwalker crosses off stage, exit. The headlight is IRISED up, and grows larger and larger, and the swelling volume of music accompanies the approach of the train. In a great burst of sound the scene ends, and as the music ebbs, the lights are dimmed out, and the festival is over.

"Story of the Drum"

With the Rivoli Ensemble and augmented orchestra is a combined picture, and descriptive musical setting with stage interpretations, the first setting or living picture, seen through an arch set piece, is the "Spirit of '76" against a blue backing lighted blue from back and soft canary indirect lighting back of figures.

The second picture, through same arch, dimly silhouetted, against a drab backing of blue crossed with soft green and blue light stands a guard with culprit about to be hanged to the scaffold.

The third picture, through same arch, the field of crosses in Flanders a still sentinel with a rifle over shoulder, on each side, silhouetted against a background of blue on dimmers.

The fourth picture, through the same arch, gives us the modern boy in the front of his house, in small town, each of the two boys have their drum, the lighting is canary flood against painted drop of village home.

The fifth number or picture, through the same arch, is the modern jazz orchestra in a cabaret, the backing is a soft varicolored hanging with tinsel hanging in front of it. The lighting is top and sides blue with amber foots, the special numbers in this were spotted with white and changed from magenta to blue flood from balcony bank of spots crossed with canary flood from top high lighted with white.

STRAND THEATRE

Feature Picture: "Kivalina of the Ice Lands"

A story of the Eskimo life as it exists today. Produced by the young explorer Mr. Earl Rossman.

Overture

The Mark Strand Symphony Orchestra presents a most beautiful combination of overture and "Indian Sketches," with Carl Edouarde, conducting and under the artistic guidance of Joseph Plunkett. The overture started with the proscenium indirectly lighted with canary and flooded, from booth, with the same, this changes to blue flood, from balcony breast banks, crossing each other, as the proscenium lights changed to purple. White top borders for high lighting players in orchestra blending with canary, flood from booth, on dimmers, while the leader was spotted amber. This was carried to the opening of the first sketch, then dimmed after curtains are fully opened revealing:

(b) A short pause and the three figures arose and executed a very beautiful dance which was highlighted from right with hard white flood. The effect was Cameoed Half Tone. At conclusion of dance the dancers again squat and the singer appears between the trunks of the trees, again singing the same song with same lighting. At the finish of song the dimmers go on everything to a black out for curtains.

Divertissements

"Russian Frolic" is all that the name implies, for as the curtains part there is revealed, seated upon a slightly raised platform, against a softly hung black velvet backing, in 3rd, five men in Russian dress, seated, singing "Flower of the Snow," by Gruenberg. The only lighting was from a hard flood bank, centered on the singers, of magenta light, visible down each side of stage and across center, were the figures of women and men, the side figures in peasant costumes, some with shawl head dress, while those across stage about 2nd wore the finer costumes, and the head dress of a Princess was dimly visible. This flood was so directed from back of 2nd R, that it added to the vividness of the contrast, of figures in full light and those in a soft magenta tone. At conclusion of song there was a quick light change and a sudden rising of the squat figures, causing a riot of whirling color, as Mlle. Klemova, M. Daks, and Bourman assisted by the entire ballet went into a fast and fantastic but fascinating Russian dance, which was lighted from top by hard X-ray (5) spots which definitely and separately cut through the magenta light, beautifully top lighting and high lighting the dancers, these were supplimented with magenta foots and side borders and blended with slotted flood lights of amber from right and left stage in 2nd. The high coloring of the costumes, as they swirled in this mixed lighting effect added an extreme Russian weirdness.

Joseph Plunkett's prologue to "Kivalina of the Ice Lands," is effective and exceptionally novel plus much in keeping with the picture itself. The setting consists of two profile set leg pieces painted to represent roe on the left a wall of ice and on the right an irregular profile, as though the spray had woven a lattice work of ice as an overhanging ledge, these were joined across stage with solid ice roe, as though piled there by the storms, this is lighted a cold green from top and border sides with foots on dimmers. The back was the cyclorama of night sky blue from floods, while cross spots of amber and white, spotted a musher, atop the ice roe, ready to mush on with his sled through the heavy fall of snow, which was blown about with fans at half speed. The Mark Strand Quartette (male) lounged about stage in front of ice roe dressed as eskimos.

CAPITOL THEATRE
New York City

Feature Picture: "The Boomerang"
(B. P. Schulberg)

Music

The overture "Morning, Noon and Night" (Von Suppe) was played by the Capitol Grand Orchestra, David Mendoza conducting. The lighting scheme was canary flood over orchestra with blues and greens, used to tone the metallic drapes, whereon is projected from each side long window sash, in outline, with round same effect over each, these were hard white which lent a realistic window lighting as it cut through the tones.

Julia Glass was next, rendering the "Concerto in A Minor" (Grieg) on the (Knabe) piano. The background is hung metalic cloth toned and high lighted with varied color spots, magenta, blue, amber, canary and green, the stage was flooded, blue on dimmers with amber front spot on artist, the orchestra, flooded with cross blue, from overhead proscenium floods, and soft toned in green which carried to close in drapes.

Divertissements

The second part of this program is varied and consists of three numbers:

(a) Doris Niles and Capitol Ballet Corps, dressed in pierrot jackets and white tights to the orchestral rendition of "Pierrots." (Chaminade). The lighting on this number is amber and green from front and dimmed floods from sides back stage, high lighted with flood white from front with cross spots of same from back stage and magenta and green from booth. The scene is stretched black with high stand (fancy) candle sticks of a scrolled design and from top hung huge crystal chandelier with flickering points of red as of burning candles.

(b) Frank Moulan in "A Moment from 'Lolanthe'," costumed as "The Lord High Chancellor" Mr. Moulan sang his number in a canary spot, in front of the close in drapes which were toned purple through blue flood on orchestra.

(c) Mlle. Gambarelli, Prima Ballerina and Dan McCarthy, danced beautifully to the "Midnight Waltz" (Donaldson). The costuming was dress suit on Mr. McCarthy and Mlle. Gambarelli in white semi-ballet with white tights. The setting conssited of soft hung green velvet backing an inverted moon hung low over a stone bench between natural trees set four in a row across 3rd.

(c) The lighting was flood green from proscenium cross flood spots, with foots, borders, sides and top of green, the trees were high lighted with amber spots on leaves and the orchestra same flood of blue with metallic drapes toned green, blue, magenta and the windows as other scenes. The dancers were spotted with white and line lighted with green as they finished.

Impressions of "Martha" (Flotow). With Caroline Andrews, Louise Scheerer, Joseph Wetzel and Jack Abbott.

(a) "M'appari" (Ah So Fair), sung by Mr. Wetzel.

(b) Duet: "When to Life I Awoke," sung by Messers. Wetzel and Abbott.

(c) Solo: "The Last Rose of Summer," sung by Miss Andrews.

(d) "Good Night Quartette," sung by Misses Andrews, Scheerer, Messrs. Wetzel and Abbott.

(a) The settings consists of stretched black velvet back stage and transparency in one, with no particular lighting except on the individual numbers which are lighted with spots on set pieces and players. The first number was lighted with canary spot on singer, just back of right 1st.

(b) Canary spot floods from each side, lighted the two men as they rendered the duet, Mr. Abbott seated and Mr. Wetzel standing in front of rustic bench flanked by a sapling, fully leaved, on either side of bench, the orchestra is in total darkness and the metallic hangings are toned green on dimmers.

(c) Miss Andrews solo, sung in divided spots of green, white and rose lighting only the singer, is very effective and symbolic of the number, "The Last Rose of Summer," the orchestra is flooded blue on dimmers with green tone on metallic hangings.

(d) This number is set with lilac tree, with bench, the lighting is cross spots of green flooding the singers who sit and stand at base of tree which is top toned with purple cross spots, the orchestra lighting remained the same as last number.

These numbers are dimmed to a black out for each finale.

A Greater Movie Season Special
No. 4

WITHIN THE DUSK AN EAST INDIAN IDYLL

A Moving Picture World Presentation
Devised by Colby Harriman.

In offering the concluding number of our series of four Greater Movie Season Specials it seems altogether fitting that a number be used to cap the climax which is not only exotic, but carries with it certain elements of Romance, the lure of the Far East, which is particularly attractive to Occidental peoples, plus the beauty and the rhythm of the music which is identified to that particular part of the country.

This presentation may be termed a "Storylogue" as it should be produced in such a manner as to carry with it in pantomime story for which this set has been designed.

The action concerns the story of two men and one woman. The men are, an Indian Prince and a man of lower caste. The woman is a dancing girl of India. As the legend goes which may be set in a title preceding the act, either in film or with a slide, the theme may be stated.

"Once upon a time there lived in a far Indian province a young prince who had become enamored of a dancing girl who was of lower caste. It was absolutely impossible for him to come in direct contact with this dancing girl, as the barriers raised by his caste forbade such contact with an inferior mortal. However, he had a trusted servant who would do anything his master's heart desired, this service amounting practically to a worship of his master. As the story goes the Prince one night sent a vase of precious ointment and a chest of wondrous jewels to his heart's ideal, the dancing girl, using the servant as his emissary. It was planned that the Prince would meet this servant at a given point secluded from the eyes of members of his own caste, and that he would change his raiment to that of the servant, and the servant would go on the road enacting the role of the Prince.

"The dancing girl was told by a runner that she would be met by a servant who would offer her many jewels and fine ointments, and that in the eyes of this servant she would see the love of her heart.

"The pantomime starts with the action of the servant approaching the spot chosen for the tryst. He carries a large urn, and a box of jewels. He places them at the foot of the tree, and awaits the approach of the Prince. The Prince does not come along the road at the specified hour and he is astonished when the dancing girl appears and begins a love dance before him ending with caresses on the face of the servant. He dare not speak to the girl as she is of a caste above him, and in his effort to dumbly tell her of the error she is making, that his master has been delayed, that he is simply the servant he soon finds himself enwrapped in the arms of the girl. She looks at his hands for the ring of nobility, and finds that the servant's hands are bare, she draws back in astonishment as though she has touched an unclean thing, as though she had committed a sin. The servant prostrates himself before her, his hands upraised in supplication pleading for forgiveness although he had been guiltless. The night comes on, deepens, and the dancer disappears in a whirling dervish number which ends in tragic manner as she falls upon a knife which she has taken from the servant, her body falling over the box of jewels and the urn.

The servant looks helplessly at this tragic spectacle and then in a dazed condition turns in the direction he has come and peers for the Prince, but he is not seen along the roadway, and so the servant sits down beside the precious jewels before the body of the dancing girl, and weaves an incantation over the calamity which has happened Within the Dust.

There is a black out and the lights come up and we see the scene practically as it was before, only an old man hobbles in and looks at the form seated at the foot of a tree, beside him a worn casket and an old urn. It is one of those magical nights of India, the air is heavy with the incense of flowers, a distant temple bell croons out an irregular rhythm as the old man who is garbed in rags inquires the name of this guardian of the jewels. The servant now aged looks up and tells the man the name and as the old man identifies himself with a little token which he has preserved during the years which have intervened, and marking his poverty the servant suddenly realized that the old man who now stands before him in rags is none other than the Prince. There is an affectionate meeting and in the dusk the spirit of the dancing girl arises and woos the feeble form of the old man. The old man is about to stretch out his hands to clasp this vision before him when it disappears and in his anguish he falls before the figure of his servant. The servant opens the box of jewels, and lifting it high is surprised to find that the box is empty. He starts to pick the vase with the precious ointment and it crumbles in dust. There is a call of a priest heard from a nearby shrine and the servant picks up his few belongings and departs in the direction of the voice.

The accompanying ground plot specifies to the extent on the chart of permitting a simple understanding of the entire presentation.

The scenic treatments should be a dark foreground, almost a silhouette against a mountain scene highlighted here and there with snow. The lighting treatment should progress from the sunset period to night and in the second movement from night to the first rays of dawn.

The costuming for the presentations are comparatively simple as it embraces some of the most picturesque garments of India, vivid colors can be used in arranging these costumes.

RIALTO THEATRE
New York City

Feature Picture: "Grounds for Divorce"
(Paramount)

Music

"Raymond," by Ambrose Thomas was the overture played by Rialto orchestra, with Frank Tours, conducting.

This was followed with the ever popular Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz, which fitted the lighting effect used for this portion of the program and which was effectively combined with blue and magenta split flood, from over head spots, while a flood of blue, from balcony baby spots, lighted the close in curtains.

Divertissements

Carl Formes, baritone, dressed in Spanish costume and carrying a guitar, sang a song from "Marriage of Figaro," by Mozart. The background was the velvet close in curtains lighted a green, on dimmers, from sides and top, while the singer was spotted with amber spot from booth.

Delors Farris, danseuse, dressed in white, close fitting, satin, studded with rhinestones and draped in collar and short skirt of green ostrich feathers, danced in hard white spot, against background of Jazz design, painted blue to the height of dancer and above that, a conglomeration of designs, resembling very much the hanging current weekly magazines, as seen in the busy subway of any big city, where there is a riot of titles and cover pictures, but nothing definite but the word Jazz here and there. The lighting on this was soft blue from top, side borders and foots.

Patrick Henry's "Appeal to Arms," rendered very effectively by Mr. Maurice Cass, through the courtesy of the Theatre Guild. Mr. Cass, dressed in the period of Henry's time (Colonial) worked entirely in white spot, against the close in curtains.

COLONY THEATRE

This presentation is preceded by screen story depicting the early Colonists in their fight for freedom, scenes of Franklin before George the Third, Ride of Paul Revere, Minute Men, etc., screen curtain then rising revealing tableau in dead center setting in cameo effect, highlighted with rose outlined against a background of dull black plush drop, the three figures mounted on base lighted in green resembling rock.

Colony Soloists

Colony Land of Jazz

Ace Brigode and his 14 Virginians in A Venetian Fantasy give interesting action.

Curtains drawn revealing setting with tinsel strand curtain hung in one blue flood slowly rising giving full view to setting. Setting suggests Venetian balcony scene.

Front of stage reveals arch effect sides being of iron lattice effect in panels lighted from sides from top down, canary, orange amber, magenta, light blue. Overhead hanging to carry off of rainbow perpendicular striped drape to mask edges being visible in sawtooth balance effect. This hangs in one between the two panels front.

Artists are seated in sem-circle position with piano extreme left. Light blue cyc without rippler, evidently to give impression of canal, as two set pieces resembling stone walls in curved shape right and left with two high posts, coiled rope in design on pedestals were placed right and left center where the ends of the set pieces came down. Magenta lighting from sides on these walls. Artists working in white costumes, of satin trousers and fancy vests, conductor in black satin.

PRICE REDUCTION FOR RADIANA

A reduction in luminous paint suitable for costume and theatrical use has been brought to our attention by a firm who has lowered the price about one-sixth of the price formally asked by regular dealers. The paint comes in two forms, "Fluorescent" which is ready for use but which must be used in connection with a blue medium, and "Radiana" which is also ready for use but needs no medium, and glows in the dark. Both paints come in all colors. The former costs $1.50 an ounce and the latter $3.00 an ounce. An ounce covers approximately eight square feet of material and may be used on various kinds of fabrics, drops and scenery.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Sent Ticket Apologies to Credulous Who Answered Classified Teaser Spaces

HERE'S W. A. Burke in again. Burke, you probably will recall, is the press agent for the Rialto and American theatres, Butte, Mont. He is the chap who attempted to start Kelly and Ginsberg in the junk business in the heart of Butte's fashionable shopping district when he put over The Rag Man.

His latest stunt has to do with School for Wives, and concerns a set of three teaser advertisements inserted in the classified ads in the Butte newspapers.

He did not suppose that anyone would take seriously what so evidently was intended to be theatrical publicity, but he received a number of replies to each of the three displays.

Three New Wants

His first advertisement was under "Help Wanted, Female" and ran down two inches. The copy read: "Wanted, three teachers for a school for wives, which will open in Butte soon, applicants must be either widows or divorcees and have at least one year's experience in handling husbands. Must be young and attractive and know everything connected with the duties of a wife. Answer must contain full description of applicant and brief analysis of actual experience. Address all replies to Box 300, Standard, Butte, Montana."

The second call was for a location for the school and was classified as "Wanted to Buy." This copy ran: "Wanted—A location in Butte for an up-to-date school for wives.

"Because of its central location, I have chosen Butte as the home of the first of its kind in the entire country—A school for wives.

"I am in a position to pay spot cash for a location that will meet with my approval. Will consider any seven-room modern bungalow that is centrally located. Need not necessarily be furnished, but would prefer same.

"State in letter full description of property, location and lowest price. Address all replies to Box 300, Standard, Butte, Montana."

Wanted Pupils, Too

The third was under "Miscellaneous" and was an advertisement for pupils for the school. This was worded: "Wanted, a limited number of pupils for a school for wives, to open in Butte soon, at a location to be announced later. The aim of this school is to make happier homes and to lessen the alarming number of divorces, pupils will be taught everything connected with the duties of a wife.

"For full information, rates, tuition, etc., address Box No. 300, Standard, Butte, Mont."

It seems incredible that anyone should accept seriously such a palpable press stunt, and yet a number of replies were received to each of these, and Mr. Burke sends in one of each class. From our own experience we can accept them as genuine. There is real pathos in the letter of a girl in a nearby town who wrote that she was 21 and had been married five years, adding "I would like to get some idea of how to get along a little better." Several house owners offered their homes, and there even were applicants for the teaching positions.

Did It Nicely

Mr. Burke and W. J. Sullivan, of the American Theatre, where the picture was to be played, were rather startled to find that so many were taking the matter seriously. They realized that something must be done, and they found a quick and graceful solution. Each writer was sent a letter which ran: "We beg to inform you that the advertisement which you answered was but an advertising scheme to herald the coming of School for Wives, a photoplay starring Conway Tearle, and which will open at the American Theatre, starting next Tuesday.

"We are enclosing a pair of complimentary tickets and request your presence as our guest at any of the performances of the picture. Assuring you that we sincerely reget any inconvenience caused you, we beg to remain———."

It is significant that there were so many of these letters that they were manifolded. Burke got out of it very nicely. Perhaps his problem and its solution will aid others.

The Band Played

Two outstanding stunts of Howard Waugh on Old Home Week were the distribution of 2,500 red celluloid buttons to school children the previous week and "The Old Home Town String Band" which was added to the program as a special feature.

The buttons were printed with the title of the play, the town and the date.

Evidently the band was a good one, instead of the usual "rube" variety, for they were broadcast twice during the week.

The Chamber of Commerce addressed 2,000 mailing cards from its stencils and a laundry gave out 5,000 more.

An Exception

Most safety first campaigns are tied to the defenseless automobile, but George Schade thought he would be different. He had some doorknobs printed up with "The Fire Chief says: 'Look out for Smouldering Fires,' see it at the Schade Wed.-Thur." Smouldering Fires is not what might be called a good hot weather title, but it sold a lot of tickets just the same.

THIS SIMPLY MADE PERAMBULATOR HELPED HE AT HUNT'S THEATRE, WILDWOOD, N. J.

The cage is a shallow affair built around a delivery truck and the animals are merely beast masks from a costumer, buried in straw to conceal the fact that they have no bodies. This is much more simple than the usual elaborate cage and it brought just as much business to this seaside theatre, where the main point was to overcome the awkward title.

A Spanish Poster for The Spaniard

Because there is a large Spanish population in Jacksonville, Guy Kenimer made a special poster for The Spaniard, which was placed in a restaurant close to a cigar factory employing hundreds of Cuban cigar makers. The poster is home made, the flute player in the orchestra doing the translating, and the house artist the lettering.

THE HOME MADE POSTER

A baritone, singing Juanita, and a woman tango dancer formed an effective prologue. The baritone also contributed a straight singing number.

The poster and the dance combined to make a large extra business.

Knowing what it had done for him before, Oscar White revived the Spanish colors for his lobby when he played The Spaniard at the Liberty Theatre, Greenwood, S. C.

He used both crepe paper and colored lights and the house was ablaze with color, backed by a telephone campaign the picture went away over the average.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

Hot weather had no terror for the thousands who crowded in to see the breezy, cooling show which had Reginald Denny in "I'll Show You the Town" as the feature photoplay. The show constructed on this farce-comedy had two other film subjects: "Twinkle Twinkle," a Grantland Rice reel showing well known screen personages taking their favorite form of exercise, and the Mark Strand Topical Review. The running time of the films: feature picture, one hour and twenty-one minutes; sport pictorial, nine minutes, and Review, eight minutes. The musical presentations, six in number, required twenty-six minutes, bringing the total performance up to two hours and four minutes.

The overture was "Raymond," by Ambroise Thomas. Lights: Two light pink Mestrum floods from the dome on musicians and apron of stage, these covering also the purple spangled draw curtains over the small production stage; green foots small stage; two light green floods from projection room on curtains; large stage in blue; color blend spots from transparent windows at either side, hitting ceiling drapes; rose pink overhead spots on blossom trees in above windows. Eight minutes for the overture.

Harry Breuer, xylophonist of the orchestra, played special arrangement of "June Brought the Roses" from his place in the ensemble, under one of the pink floods from the dome; other lights remained. Three minutes were required for this presentation.

"Invitation to the Waltz," by Von Weber, was danced by premiere danseuse and male partner and six members of the ballet corps. Incident in full stage, with black cyclorama as a background. In the center of the "cye" was a five-foot flower-heart. Properties included settee and two chairs of 1830 period, blending with the period of the costuming. All lighting from the stage, built on steel blue from overhead and sides. Amber spot from overhead on the heart and gold furniture. Six minutes for the dance.

After the Topical Review came a lyric soprano on the apron of the orchestra stage. She sang "Song of Songs" and then "Honest and Truly." Both selections took up three minutes, with singer under a combination spot of straw top and (eryth) new color of blue bottom. Two purple Mestrum floods from projection room on orchestra and curtains of mettaline closed over production stage.

After the "Twinkle Twinkle" reel came another vocal selection, "Vesta la Guibba" from Leoncavallo's "Pagliacci," on the apron of the production stage by operatic tenor in correct costume. Gold draw curtains used, lighted by nile blue floods from the dome and variegated hues from projection room; steel blues on singer from the sides; large stage foots and borders in blue. Three minutes.

The final presentation before the feature picture was a ballet novelty, "In Holland," by four of the ballet and the premiere danseuse and her male partner. Costuming was Dutch, with wooden shoes, and the setting was Holland Dutch painted drop. Orange, amber and white were the lights. Three minutes.

Props Were Handy

Using a chariot for Quo Vadis, E. R. Briggs, of the Rialto Theatre, Pueblo, Col., was fortunte in being able to enlist a strong man, who had a Roman costume, as driver, and it looked like a real rig. The chariot was in blue and silver and was drawn by a quartet of black horses which were prize winners at a local show. It made a flashy turnout and brought in a lot of extra business for the hot weather.

Plane Profit

Eddie Collins, of the Queen Theatre, Galveston, paid a pilot at the beach to paint his plane with an advertisement for The Ai- Mail. The plane made short trips along the beach and flew low, carrying passengers.

On the day of the bathing parade Eddie figured that every one of the 75,000 crowd saw his announcement. It got the picture off to a wonderful start.

THE LOS ANGELES IDEA

From the front the blinders were the only noticeable feature, but to the back of his well-fitting coat was attached a small sign for the house and attraction. Most persons turned to look after him, knowing they probably would see a sign, and the back sign left much more of an impression that would a placard on the chest.

Five First

Preceding the showing of The Lost World at the Rowland and Clark houses in Pittsburgh, Richard A. Rowland, general manager of First National Pictures, arranged to loan the film for a special showing at Carnegie Hall for the benefit of the Allegheny General Hospital.

Seats were priced at five dollars, and because it was for a charity, the newspapers put it over as a picture seldom has been put over before, all of which will help the later regular showings.

In these days of five dollar premieres it is interesting to remember that the first fancy price showing was a New York presentation of First National's Auction of Souls at ten dollars a ticket.

Free to Aunts

Any woman in Knoxville, Tenn., who had a nephew named Charley had only to fill in a coupon printed in the News and present it at that paper's office to receive a free ticket to Charley's Aunt at the Riviera. It's just a variant of an old stunt, but it was played up so strongly that it drew a big business and the farce came close to a record in spite of the heat.

Padlocked Book is an Improved Pram

Using a walking book to advertise Enticement, H. B. Sobottka, of the Colonial Theatre, Tacoma, Wash., made an improvement on the usual form. He closed the covers with an immense padlock. The special text was "Open it. Its pages will thrill you. Its story will thrill you. The key awaits you at the Colonial."

The suggestion of a prohibition made for greater interest in the story and a large addition to the average audience used the Colonial as a "key" during the run. If you have worked the walking book to a frazzle, get a compo board padlock and give the idea one more whirl.

For Born Rich Mr. Sobottka hooked in to the stores featuring their credit systems with the suggestion that you do not have to be born rich to obtain the good things of life. All you have to do is to put up a dollar and pay a dollar a week. This stunt, illustrated with stills, worked well for men and women's clothing and for jewelers.

To put over Love's Wilderness he obtained from A. C. Raleigh, the local First National exploiteer, some stills of Miss Griffith's home. The exteriors he laid off to a real estate firm, while the interiors were carded for decorators and furniture stores, while a straight portrait landed a window of a clothing store which displayed a costume much like one of those worn by the star. Mr. Sobottka credits Harry Stone's fine brush work on these cards with making the grade. He approached only the most exclusive stores and only the best work could land them.

Widespread

Exploitation is not a matter of geography. Down in Australia they have delivery trucks in the shape of a huge roll of life savers, and they tie them to the pictures just as they do from Boston to Seattle. One of the latest stunts was samples for Norma Talmadge in The Only Woman at the Tivoli Theatre, Sydney, and the truck carried a special banner to help along.

THE FIRST HUNDRED CHILDREN IN WILD WEST SUITS GOT PASSES

That's one of the stunts Herman Whitman, of Keith's Greenpoint Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., used to launch the first episode of The Fighting Ranger. He was liberal in his count, because so many showed up, and it does not pay to disappoint the kiddies.

Came Pretty Soft for Joseph Greene

When you can borrow a circus tent and 75 clown costumes, and then get a present of heralds, it looks pretty much like velvet. But it takes hustling to get them coming that easily and Maurice Davis, Universal exploiteer, helped Green to hustle in putting over The Great Circus Mystery at the Lafayette Theatre.

The Clown Cigarette Co. contributed the tent and costumes. They were part of their regular advertising equipment and they were very glad to have them used. On top of that they supplied 2,000 heralds in return for having them imprinted with a statement that Bonomo smokes that brand.

All Mr. Green had to do was to put the material to use. He put his ushers and a school drum corps into the clown suits and let the neighborhood children get into the rest. These formed the nucleus of a parade which was swelled by practically every child in the neighborhood, and in the rear came seven automobiles filled with members of the Hogden School Mothers' Club. Just how they were coaxed into the parade is not stated, but it might make interesting reading.

The tent was raised in front of the theatre, which is in a residential district, and made a good ballyhoo, and served as a rallying point for all the youngsters within a mile radius.

It made a wonderful starter for the serial and cost so little that Greene is almost ashamed to give the figures.

This is a picture of Joe Green's way of putting over The Great Circus Mystery, at the Lafayette Theatre. A cigarette company supplied the tent and 75 ballyhoo clown costumes and then bought him his heralds. All he had to do was stage manage and collect.

Flashlighted Lovers

Here's a new suggestion in spotlighting. For A Thief in Paradise Frank L. Miller, of the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., made a garden scene in the lobby with Miss Kenyon and Colman in a clutch. A cupid, sitting on a cutout moon, threw a spotlight on them from a painted flashlamp held in his hand. It gave a pretty effect with little, trouble, and you'll find it worth trying if you do much building.

Mr. Miller also tied up the polo game to six Jantzen bathing suit agencies, which means an indirect tie-up to 99 per cent of all the automobiles.

Kindly Deed Was Boomer for Sally

A real human interest stunt made a mint of money for Sally and the Palace Theatre, San Antonio, proving once more that often bread cast upon the waters comes back well spread with butter and jam.

Some time ago a woman was found dying in a tent on the outskirts of the historic Texas town. She was only seventeen and was too weak to tell the authorities anything about herself or the weakling baby she vainly sought to nurse. It looked as though the little one would follow its mother, but a blood transfusion saved the youngster, and she was taken over by the Child Protective and Humane Society.

There were no funds for the child's care, but the society did the best it could with its limited resources, and finally gave it into the care of a local woman. But she too was taken sick and unable to care for the infant and it was thrown back upon the society. It was only nine months old, and the orphan asylums did not take children under eighteen months of age. Some way had to be found to finance its boarding out until it reached that age, and the society could not afford the requisite $5 a week and carry on its regular work.

That is where Louis Santikos, manager of the Palace, and Jack Jackson, his publicity man, came in. They offered to make an effort to finance the child's support on condition that it be named "Sally" after the Colleen Moore production, shortly to be played.

Mr. Santikos provided a substantial check which he turned over to the Guaranty State Bank, as custodian of the fund.

Jackson sold one of the leading papers on a campaign and wrote a daily sob story to help the campaign along. There was a nice check in the name of Colleen Moore, and daily mention of the child's intended name.

A local dance place staged a benefit night, anxious to get in on the publicity, and there is assurance that the child will be cared for in a private home until such time as she is eligible for admission to an institution, and she was christened Sally in the McKinley Avenue Methodist Church.

Some years ago a number of managers tied into a story with the offer of a child for adoption, and in one instance no fewer than seven children were taken out of one orphanage into private homes. The idea has not been worked in several years and the time should be ripe.

As the scheme was worked, the most attractive child was selected, provided with an outfit through the generosity of the local merchants, and exhibited either in the lobby of the house or in a special play room, where the latter was possible.

In every instance it brought yards of publicity, ample good will and a profitable sale of the picture being advertised, as well as accomplishing a real and permanent good for the child.

How about a revival of the idea?

New England roads are literally infested with bus lines running between the larger cities and with stops at intervening points. Some thirty lines run into providence. Store Spends $250 for Sans Gene Ad

Herschel Stuart, of the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, obtained the loan of some of the Sans Gene costumes and told Bill Saal, his publicity provoker, to do something about it.

Bill laid the gowns off to a store where some 30,000 persons pass daily, and 29,986 stopped to look. The others were near-sighted.

But the big point is that the store liked the pull so well that it spent $250 circularizing its customers, announcing that they had the costumes on display and adding a Sans Gene herald to show what it was all about.

The store manager knew that of the women who would be attracted by the display a sufficient number would come in to make purchases to give him a profit on the investment.

Tire cards were used on 400 cabs and the Sans Gene coins were handed out at the ball park. You can't break records in St. Louis after the middle of May, but Hersch hung up a nice mark for hot weather shooting.

State Societies for Old Home Week Run

Here's a bright angle on Old Home Week.

Every large city, and many of the smaller ones, have societies composed of former residents of other states. Here in New York we even have societies composed of people from the same up-state counties.

When C. W. Hallock, of the Victory Theatre, Denver, got the Meighan picture with the George Ade title, he sent out 2,000 announcements to the members of five such societies, naming a different night for each society. Naturally the members responded on "their" night, and not only helped to swell the crowd but gave an air of festivity to the house that interested the non-member patrons. It really was old-home week except on Saturday and Sunday, when Hallock felt he would not need the boost.

For a novelty he sent out 300 small corncob pipes to a select list of addresses, tying the homely Missouri product to the old-home week idea. That helped, too, and the pipes cost very little in wholesale lots.

Made May a Special to Retain Business

Jack Rowley, who runs the Royal Theatre, Laredo, Texas, is so close to the Mexican border that he has to hustle to keep them coming through the sun-baked months.

This year he decided upon a special drive to hold business through May, feeling that if he could keep them coming through the first hot spell, he would be able to hold up later on.

He made it a special "First National Month," using the regular program, but making an extra fuss about the attractions, both in the newspapers and the house front. He is particularly keen on his fronts, realizing that it takes a little effort to pull them through the doors even after they get to the house.

On pictures he thinks will go specially good he uses extra efforts. Frivolous Sal was one of these and he resorted to the telephone stunt, getting a girl with a pleasant voice to call the names with the better addresses. If a man answered the call she said: "This is Frivolous Sal. Meet me at the Royal tonight." If a woman answered the message was changed to "Of course you have never met Frivolous Sal, but she would like to see you at the Royal tonight."

Extra jazz on the house front brought in a nice business, the chief appeal being a large sign which started "Stop! Look! Be on your guard. Don't be caught napping. Frivolous Sal today." It didn't mean anything much, but it got attention, and that was what Rowley was after.

Made a Special

Because he had three "all star" pictures on his program for a single week, George Peck, of the Strand Theatre, Tampa, Fla., declared it an all star week. The three casts gave him a dozen and a half good names and these were displayed on large gold stars under the marquise, while a larger gold star above the box office carried five of the best names.

The result was an unusually good business on all three pictures, each helping the other. Try this some time when you have no particular star to play up.

SELLING THE TEN COMMANDMENTS TO REAL QUEUES IN JAPAN. THEY WAITED IN LINE

Maybe the Japanese do not wear queues, but they formed them for the presentation of the big biblical picture. Paints His Marble for a Lobby Effect

Don Nichols, of the Durham (N. C.) Amusement Company, handed us a jolt when he wrote that he painted over his lobby with kalsomine for Corrinne Griffith in Declasse.

The lobby of the Paris Theatre is a really handsome one, with the upper part paneled in carved marble, but he writes that often he can get a better effect with kalsomine and he does not hesitate to lay on the color to get what he wants. With straight grounds and blends, he can completely change the aspect of the house and get a tone that harmonizes with the lobby frames.

Pink was the color he decided upon for Declasse, with lighting to match, and with rose colored light outlining the title on the banner above the box office. The central display is a shadow box, lighted from back of the front plane. The side pieces are solid.

Painted marble sounds interesting and new.

Mr. Nichols also sends in a roto on A Thief in Paradise, printed in the blank space with his entire week's program and the underline. He writes that the Sunday afternoon newspaper puts these into its edition without charge, even though the house gets a full advertising space. They figure that he is entitled to the advertising in return for the four pages of illustrations, so both sides are well pleased.

NICHOLS PAINTED A MARBLE LOBBY FOR DECLASSE

He figured that a light pink would work better on this Corinne Griffith picture, so he did all of the lobby of the Paris Theatre, Durham, N. C., over in color and then worked light effects. We think this even beats gilding the lily.

White Is Working

Oscar White's first stunt in his new berth at the Liberty Theatre, Greenwood, S. C., was to invite the graduating class of the High School to be his guests at a performance of New Lives for Old. They attended in a body and the stunt made for a lot of good will.

Mr. White has two shadow boxes, one either side of the stage, large enough to contain three sheets, and these are illuminated when he runs a trailer for the picture so advertised.

Tied Trust Company to Last Laugh Will

Using a stunt from the press book on The Last Laugh, but one which has not been reported upon before, the Lyric Theatre, Butler, Pa., used a hook to the freak will which gives the unexpected happy ending to the play.

Copies of some local freak wills were made the basis of the display. Added to these was the clause of the supposed will which made the old carriage opener a millionaire and the suggestion that you could avoid freak wills by letting the trust company draw up the document and act as executor.

This is right in line with much modern trust company advertising and it should be easy to obtain the co-operation of your local concern for this or any other play which concerns a will.

The Lyric made a connection with the Butler County Trust Company, and while it made no immediate business, none was expected. This sort of advertising has a cumulative effect.

Makes His Banners Match Newspapers

George J. Schade, of Sandusky, appreciates the value of the hook-up between his house and his outside advertising, and his latest is to reproduce in banner form the newspaper display. This may be either an original art layout or the use of a First National cut, but whatever it is, Mr. Schade gets the same design on his banner that he uses in his ad.

He does not use photographic enlargements. These would be too costly in the size he needs. Instead he uses a scheme that is within the reach of any manager who can use a pencil.

He places the advertisement in a postcard projector and throws it upon a piece of compo board of suitable size. With a little care it is a simple matter to outline in charcoal without cutting off the design, and the sketch is then worked up in the same medium to a finished product, fixed and set into frames on the marquise of the Schade Theatre.

Persons who have seen the advertisement, seeing the design repeated, are reminded of the type argument and are more easily sold into a ticket purchase.

He started the stunt with I Want My Man and liked it so well that he will continue it for a time at least, though he is so fertile in ideas that he'll probably have something new in a few weeks.

Newspapers Won

Facing the pleasant situation of having to fight Sans Gene and Charley's Aunt in town at the same time, Will H. Sohm, of the Belasco Theatre, Quincy, Ill., took counsel with Universalist Maurice Davis, because he had Denny in The Fast Worker as his attraction.

Dr. Davis prescribed newspaper work and lots of it, and helped him to land on both papers. One got a double truck with one word of a slogan in each ad, the slogan being: "The fastest thing on reels today." If you got it together, you got tickets.

The other paper was tied to a spring poem contest, the poems to be about Denny, Laura La Plante of the picture.

Sohn kept his receipts up in the face of the stiffest opposition he has had in a long time.

Mr. Larmour Uses Linoleum Cuts

Here is another example of linoleum cuts from M. W. Larmour, of Graham, Texas. That reverse signature for the National Theatre is cut into a strip of fine linoleum, as there is no engraver handy to Graham. Mr. Larmour writes that when he has to make a new one he is going to make the "theatre" a little smaller. He figures that as it stands it takes somewhat from the more important "National." We are in agreement with him. In a small town everyone knows that the National is a theatre and not a trick grocery store, and we think that a straight block on the lower part of the L would be as good and save a lot of work. The main idea is to hold the space from the rest of the paper, and the black would do this as well, if not better. Patent leather cuts are not new. We have had them from several sections of the country, and either patent leather or a good grade of linoleum will give a good printing surface and on a small edition paper will last better than you would expect. This original is as nice a black as you could get from copper, and the cost is much less, once you get the trick of cutting. The type display throws most of the mention to the opening attraction, but it gets the entire week's program over very nicely, and the full week is necessary, since there is only a weekly paper. No great display is striven for because the reverse gets the eye over to the location and after that stress is not so essential. The little verse at the bottom is a fad of Mr. Larmour's. He gives a ticket for each verse used, and he has the whole town sitting around thinking how good the National is and trying to put the thoughts into four line verses. That's worth a great deal more than a pass a week. Ever try it? It has worked for a lot of others.

Circle Ads Give Better Displays

This space from the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, uses a plan book cut to good advantage in a more compact display than has been the custom of late. There is less space wasted on the small features, and they even double up the comedy and organ solo, to good advantage. The old scheme was to line each item in narrow measure in wide space, which took up room without giving a return in white space value, since there was too much white space. Here the drop of the cut breaks the space, holds the type together better and looks much less like lost motion. White space is one of the best attractors, and yet wrongly placed it serves only to make a space look bleak, and for a time the Circle spaces were as wintry as a polar landscape. Here the small drop break the bareness, but does not rob the space of any display value. The drawing is well planned to give display. Even with poor printing this cut could not go very far wrong. The Circle, like all other houses, must find that the display of small features brings business that the main title might not reach, but it carried the display of these to an excess that was both wasteful and ugly. Recent examples show that the house is getting back to its old form.

Lewis Uses Them with and Without

Just to show he can take them or leave them, Cliff Lewis, of the Strand Theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., sends in two ads for Buster Keaton in Seven Chances one of which uses a cut, while the other is all type. The opening ad is all type, whereas most managers would start with the cut and run to plain yet they look more because they loom so large. And just for a pastime count the all-capital lines in these two ads. It won't take you long. Cliff can't afford to throw money away on all caps where he uses small spaces. Each line must work to the limit, and all cap lines are mostly drones. But we think that if Cliff sometimes broke the column measure on a title line as in that opening day, he would enjoy seeing how the title comes up if he will run it three ems each side wider than the rest. But just the one line and only when it is reasonably centered in the space.

Now is the time for that bathing beauty contest, and the further you are from real water the bigger the hit you'll make.

brief description which tells that while the story is jazzy it is out of the usual flapper classification. That cut, in connection with the copy on the right, is going to reach the average patron and sell him. This follows the usual layout used by the two Loew houses in Washington, but it is a little better than their usual work because it is such a good combination of copy and cut, wedded to good display. In all of these Loew reproductions it should be remembered that the two houses are always together, so that the linear border gives each the display value of the double space. This border is even more standard than the layout, and is virtually a trademark. If you are looking for the Loew houses you know the location of the ads the moment the page is opened. If you are merely looking for entertainment, the chances are that these will claim your earliest attention and get first chance at your interest. Getting the first look is often half the battle. The other offerings may be as good, but they must be much better to unsell the first choice; a psychology that many managers overlook.

A Large Display in Shopper Guide

Sometimes an apparently negligible medium will be found more directly profitable than a more elaborate issue. Tod Browning, of the Olympia Theatre, New Haven, has found such an issue in the Shopping News, which is largely patent inside and dry goods advertising. This gives him an almost 100 circulation, since most of the women readers are interested in the picture. Since space is cheap, he is able to run a large advertisement, and since not many houses come in, he gets a better chance of making a sale. This space on Declasse is a four twelves, which lets him use a large cut and plenty of talk. It is not a bad cut except that the artist has punched Miss Griffith's jaw in on the right so that it does not match the left side of her face. This is due to the fact that she is supposed to be pressing her hand against her face. That thing that looks like a lame octopus is supposed to be her hand. The average of the First National art department is decidedly good, but this sketch is plain libel. At the left is the line "Watch this beautiful girl fight back and win her own." That helps to clinch the laugh. But apart from this misguided art effort Mr Browning has turned up a nice layout, with plenty of reading to sell the shoppers, who will stay over an advertisement longer than a newspaper reader will. The big idea is that often a small price, apparently inconsequential sheet will bring you a better return than a more expensive medium. Look your sheets over.

The combination should sell practically anyone who is looking for light entertainment, for the text suggests humor and the cuts give emphasis to the suggestion. The catchline works well with the top cut and the combination of one all cap line with the lower case below is much better than all caps, which is one of the besetting sins of Baltimore compositors. The general type layout of this space is decidedly pleasing, and the twelve point lines are just about wide enough without being too wide. It's good work.

press book. This, of course, includes the lettered titles, which save art work. If you have the M-G press book you will find it interesting to look up the originals and see just how this was worked out. It gave Mr. Allison precisely what he wanted, without any considerable cost, and he used these as the basis of a very pretty display. The advertisement is particularly admirable in its freedom from confusing lines. Most of the talk is in plain Roman, and no line is too wide for that height of type face. This is far more effective than a similar or even a larger space stuffed with very black letters, and has several times the display value, in spite of the old theory that the blacker the letter the better the display. The best display is gained through contrast, rather than through the spilling of ink, and here the display lines are good because they spend all their time reaching out for the reader instead of wasting their strength fighting other lines of almost equal value. More and more the managers are coming to realize this, but it is seldom that we encounter a space to well planned.

"Paths to Paradise"

Raymond Griffith is a Whirlwind of Comedy in This Paramount Production of Armstrong's Play

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

As a stage play "The Heart of a Thief" was an affront to the intelligence with its implausible situations and its impossible switch to virtue for a conventional happy ending. On the screen, with its title changed to "Paths to Paradise" the story is even more illogical, but it is frankly a farce, and thanks to its playing, one of the most amusing stories of recent release. All efforts at plausibility are thrown to one side. If you laugh—it's all right. And nothing short of paralysis of the facial muscles will prevent your laughter.

It is just a succession of gags pinned to a slender thread of story, and so nicely built up that the action never sags. It works up to a tremendous chase finish, the like of which has not been seen since the motorcycle parody of "The Birth of a Nation" ride shown in "A Connecticut Yankee."

If "Paths to Paradise" had no more to offer than this chase, it probably would get over on the strength of these last two reels, but the chase is merely the finish of a succession of comedy events that are clever enough to amuse the highbrows and broad enough to delight the man to whom the thrown custard pie still is the pinnacle of comedy.

Most of it is Raymond Griffith, though Betty Compson is a most admirable foil and gives a more sincere piece of acting than she has offered in some of her recent productions. These two are practically the entire show, but Bert Woodruff, as an amiable old man, serves almost to make logical Betty's plea that she wants to get the necklace back in time to let "that nice little old man" give it to his daughter on her wedding day, as he had so fondly planned. The direction is thoroughly good and Badger should share the honors with his players.

Story

Molly is a cook in San Francisco's underworld. She is trimmed by a supposed visitor to the den, and collects all the gang's money on the strength of a meter reader's badge. Broke, the gang seek to acquire a diamond necklace, intended as a wedding gift, and Molly gets a job as maid in the household of the bride. The slick stranger turns up as a guest-detective, to guard the jewel, and the San Francisco police also send three real detectives to do guard duty. In spite of the trio, the stranger (who never uses the same name twice) acquires the necklace and with Molly breaks through a cordon of police and decamps in a high-powered automobile. They chase him clear to the Mexico border, the original pursuers being added to at each town as they pass through. At the border Molly repents her action, and the stranger races all the way back to San Francisco to get the necklace back in time to serve its destined end as the wedding gift of the bride's father. Then Molly and the stranger set out to get married themselves and live honestly and happily ever after.

"The Love Gamble"

Cleverly Sustained Suspense and Good Melodrama Makes Banner Feature a Good Audience Picture

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

As the first release of the new season from Banner Productions, Inc., "The Love Gamble," based on a novel by Maysie Greig and with a cast which includes Lillian Rich, Robert Frazer and Pauline Garon, is being offered by Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation, a newcomer in the independent field.

The earlier reels would indicate the picture is going to be developed along the lines of the problem facing the heroine as to whether she should marry a man she does not love in order to escape from the drudgery of household work and the cruelty and abuse of her father who does not understand her. A small inheritance, however, provides her with an opportunity to get out in the world. She becomes a partner in a tea room and this gives an entirely new twist to the plot for she falls in love with a wealthy man who is separated from his wife, and when this woman is murdered and the hero tried for the crime she comes to his rescue and sacrifices her own good name to save him.

While the theme in the beginning is not one that promises the exciting developments that follow, there are a number of individual situations that are well worked out and hold the interest. It would seem that much of the credit is due to the smooth adaptation prepared by Harry O. Hoyt and the careful direction of Edward Le Saint, both of whom have directed a number of successful productions. The cast, however, adds its full share.

Lillian Rich and Robert Frazer in the leading roles do thoroughly capable work, while the work of Pauline Garon and Arthur Rankin in lesser roles is well on a par with them, particularly in one amusing scene for which clever and amusing subtitles have been furnished by Frederick and Fanny Hatton. In fact the work of these title writers serves to add considerably to the entertaining qualities. Kathleen Clifford also scores in an out-of-the-ordinary and breezy character bit.

An unusual feature of the story which enhances the suspense and helps materially to sustain the interest is the very clever manner in which the love angle has been handled. By slightly clouding the motives of the hero and an old sweetheart of the girl's who again appears on the scene and playing them up against each other, the romantic interest is so nicely balanced that the average spectator will probably be kept in doubt until almost the final scene as to which one she will marry, and will feel a bit of regret for the losing suitor.

The tempo is continually accelerated up to the whirlwind melodramatic finish, and we believe this picture will afford pleasing entertainment for the majority of spectators.

Linton Works Night and Day to Rebuild Utica Theatre

Cleaned out financially at the age of 59, yet having the same enthusiasm as at 29, W. H. Linton of Utica, better known as "Pop," one time treasurer of the New York State M. P. T. O., has started the battle once more and by working night and day will open a new Olympic in Utica on September 15, replacing the one destroyed by fire several months ago. Mr. Linton was in town during the week, stopping off for a few hours while on his way to New York, dropping in at various film exchanges and renewing the friendships that have extended in many instances over long periods. Mr. Linton's new theatre will seat about 1,100 and will be erected on the same site as the one destroyed by fire eleven days after it was opened. In order to finance the new theatre, Mr. Linton formed the Olympic Theatre Corporation, with Benjamin Gerwig of Herkimer as president. E. W. Linton, the son, is treasurer of the company. The new theatre will be of the same type as the old but with a larger balcony. Work will begin at once and there will be both a night and day force.

Front page stories, no matter how important, can't compare these days with the sporting page for Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Milligan of Schuylerville, whose son is doing the twirling for the Baltimore Orioles this season. The boy played with the Ticonderoga team for a time, and upon leaving college broke into league ball.

What's all this about William Shirley, whose interests in Farash Theatres, Inc., were recently acquired by W. W. Farley of Albany, starting in business for himself? Anyhow, a company to be known as the William M. Shirley Enterprises, Inc., has been formed and is occupying offices in the Strand Theatre building.

The Pember of Granville reopened on June 20 with Vincent Dailey of New York as manager. The theatre will run on Wednesday and Saturday nights during the summer. During the three weeks the house was closed the lobby was redecorated and something more than $1,000 spent in the way of improvements. A couple of new projection machines have been installed.

Although W. W. Farley of Albany is head over heels in the business of being an exhibitor these days and has little time for his law practice, he declares that he will take a vacation this year but admits that he does not know when it will be. Mr. Farley has installed Mr. Gildersleeve of Kingston as manager of the Community Theatre in Catskill, while Frank Hickey, auditor of Farash Theatres, Inc., has been given charge of the Strand in Schenectady. Mr. Farley stated that the weather would guide his action relative to running either two or three theatres during the summer in Schenectady. There has been some talk of closing one of the houses, probably the Albany, in order to divert more business to the Strand and State theatres.

It makes no difference to Robert Denton of the Capitol Theatre in Elizabethtown whether the days are sizzling hot or as cool as in the fall, Mr. Denton running an ice business as well as providing the good folks of Elizabethtown with a picture entertainment.

The by-laws for the New York State M. P. T. O. are to be drafted by Louis Buettner, Uly S. Hill and W. W. Farley, representing the Albany Zone, while Messrs. Michaels,

With construction work already under way, Lake Placid, one of the most noted all-the-year-round resorts in America, will have another theatre and one which will rank with the largest and finest in northern New York. The house is being erected by the Adirondack Theatre Corporation and will seat about 1,000.

The Colonial in Utica, a Robbins house, is closed for the summer and there is some talk of enlarging the theatre. Considerable money has been spent recently on the Gaiety in Utica, the improvements including a new marquee as well as a large electric sign.

Jimmy Rose is branching out. On July 1 Mr. Rose took over the King in Troy, a 10-cent house that has been run by Ben Apple since the American was closed and the house in which Mr. Apple got his first start as an exhibitor years ago. Mr. Apple's plans for the future have not been announced. Mr. Rose will take over a theatre in Victory Mills on September 1 and is also operating a house in Nassau.

There is a pretty good story going the rounds on one of the Northern New York exhibitors. It appears that one of the film salesmen approached the exhibitor with a proposition to book the Dempsey pictures. "Dempsey may be all right," replied the exhibitor, "but he can't hold a candle with Laemmle in 'The Leather Pushers.'"

Tony Veiller, manager of the Lincoln Theatre in Troy, is a mighty busy individual these days, arranging for the Greater Movie Season in the Albany Zone. Mr. Veiller met with the Albany exhibitors on Monday morning, following this with a meeting in Troy during the afternoon and then jumping over to Schenectady, where he met with the exhibitors of that city on Tuesday. Within the next few days every exhibitor in the Albany Zone will receive a letter from Mr. Veiller, explaining just what is being done in these three cities and advising the exhibitor that all those who desire to take advantage of the proposition are to receive the fullest co-operation from him. Exhibitors desiring to reach Mr. Veiller should address him in care of the Lincoln Theatre, Troy, or in care of the Albany Film Board of Trade.

Maybe Uly S. Hill wasn't a busy man last week. With Herman Vineberg, manager of the Mark Strand in Albany, away on his vacation, Mr. Hill looked after affairs at this theatre and then jumped over to Troy and relieved Ben Stern, assistant manager of the Troy Theatre, who was handling the house while Walter Roberts was away on a week's vacation in New York.

Elmer Shard and Louis Snitzer, who operate a chain of theatres in and about Cincinnati, and who recently purchased the Washington Theatre, Cincinnati, have now acquired the adjoining lot and will increase the capacty of the Washington to 1,200. They expect to spend $10,000 on improvements.

Dayton, Ohio, is featuring revivals in pictures, Loew's showing "Way Down East," "Pollyanna," "Robin Hood," "Broken Blossoms," and "Orphans of the Storm," in a single week, while the Strand played a return of "The Kid" during the same period.

The Cherokee Theatre, Louisville, Ky., has passed into possession of the Hill Top Theatre Co., Louisville, for a consideration of $50,000.

A. H. Coplan of Ottawa, Ontario, who with S. Coplan, his brother, leased the Imperial Theatre, suffered a serious fire loss on June 24 when a portion of the large steel plant at Ogdensburg, N. Y., owned by Mr. Coplan was destroyed by fire. The whole plant is valued at $125,000 but the loss through the burning of one section of the works was estimated at $25,000.

Harold Hitchinson of Toronto, special representative of Famous Players Canadian Corportion, is temporary manager of the Regent Theatre at Ottawa, Ontario, during the absence of Manager Leonard Bishop in California for a vacation during the present summer.

Rhode Island

One of the first picture theatres in New England passed out of existence when the Bijou Theatre, at Westminister and Orange streets, Providence, R. I., was closed on July 3, to make way for a modern commercial building. Since it was opened in March, 1908, the Bijou seldom has failed to yield a profit for its operators. Only in the last two years has here been a decline in the business, and this, according to Frank E. Page, for a number of years manager of the Bijou and one of its builders, was caused by daylight saving and the stronger competition from the larger theatres, which for some seats brought their price range within that of the low scale of admission at the Bijou.

Along with the old Nickel Theatre, where the E. F. Albee Theatre now stands, and probably the first real picture theatre in the city, and the old Scenic Theatre, on the site of the present Rialto Theatre, the Bijou, when it was built, was considered the last word in theatre construction. It ornamental front, originally painted white and illuminated at night with more than 2,000 electric lights, was the prevailing fashion. The front today is unchanged, save for green paint in place of the white.

The seating capacity of the Bijou is 407. At first the Bijou instituted the 5-cent admission price, but of course it was obliged to make increases as the cost of operation mounted.

The costumes worn by Greta Nissen, beautiful Norsë screen star in Paramount's production, "The Wanderer," were designed by Edith Head, of the Paramount wardrobe department. The picture shows Miss Head consulting with Miss Nissen and showing a sketch of the gown she will wear as the dancing girl, "Tisha," in the production.

Affairs of the Pond Theatres, Inc., stock in which was sold in Northern New York upwards of a year ago, have now found their way into the courts. Hearings were held in Malone recently on foreclosure of liens against the partly constructed theatre which was to have been erected by the company in Tupper Lake. The liens aggregate about $7,-300. Up to the present time, four sidewalks and a concrete stage have been constructed.

Does A. A. Elliott, who runs the Playhouse in Hudson, ever indulge in lunch? He claims not, and according to film salesmen and others who just happen to drop in on Mr. Elliott during the noon hour, there has never been any evidence of any such procedure.

The Star in Greenwich, which is run by Dennis Regan, is operating on a two day a week basis, running on Thursday and Saturdays.

Work on Fred Mausert's theatre in Glens Falls is progressing satisfactorily. Mr. Mausert contracted for a couple of new Simplex machines last week and expects to have the house ready for opening in the early fall. It will seat about 1,400.

Earl Flack of Potsdam, whose house was recently sold without his knowledge to his competitor, will be obliged to pay for all film which he has contracted for, despite the fact that he has has no house in which to run it. Mr. Flack was up before the Arbitration Board in this city last Monday, and the decision was to the effect that so long as he had signed a contract for the pictures he would be forced to accept or pay for the same.

Harry Hellman of the Royal in Albany feels a bit more cheerful these days as his son-in-law, Jack Little, a vaudeville headliner, who has been in one of the Albany hospitals, has recovered.

It looked almost like an old home week the other day when Fred Elliott, former owner of the Clinton Square Theatre, but who is no longer in the business, was seen talking over old times with "Pop" Linton of Utica.

Vic Warren, a well known exhibitor in Massena, is dabbling a bit in real estate these days, having just bought a piece of property in the northern town upon which he will erect a business block in the near future.

Jake Golden, manager of the Griswold in Troy, got the thrill of his life the other day when he served as best man at a society wedding in Providence, R. I. In fact, it took Mr. Golden about two days to recover.

Well, maybe Charles Sesonske of the Grand in Johnstown didn't have the time of his life in Albany the other night when he went to the circus. He took along Walter Suckno and a number of other friends, and Mr. Sesonske, being a friend of one of the managers of the big three-ring affair, had the best the place afforded.

Connecticut

W. W. Walker and W. E. Walker have sold the Majestic Theatre building in Hartford to Fred J. Carey for $500,000. The sale of the Majestic building involves no change in the conduct of the theatre, which is managed by Allan C. Morrison.

A patron occupying a seat in the balcony of the Crown Theatre in New London was injured when a section of the plaster ceiling fell upon him. The lights were quickly turned on when the cries of the man were heard and order was restored before the confusion reached the stage of a panic. A section of plaster about ten feet square fell.

Herbert Kelly Pays $500,000 for Victoria, Rochester, N. Y.

The Victoria Theatre, Clinton avenue south, Rochester, has been sold by the Auditorium Theatre Company to Herbert C. Kelly, treasurer of the Rochester Theatre Company, which has leased and operated the theatre for about thirteen years. The price involved is reported to be more than $500,000. The announcement of the sale was made by Frederick W. Coit, attorney, and president of the Auditorium company, who acted as agent in the transaction. The other officers of the company are in California. Mr. Kelly, who was represented in the deal by C. C. Davy, of the East Side Savings Bank, has taken title to the property and will continue to operate it. The lease of the Rochester Theatre Company would expire in March, 1927, but it will be renewed at expiration. John J. Farren, who has managed the theatre for many years, will continue as manager.

An action for damages amounting to $200,000 has been brought by Mrs. Miranda Stevens, Oakfield, against Joseph and Mina Goldberg, Herman Schwartz, Max Pollock and Louise Weidrich, owners of the Oakfield Opera House, for injuries Mrs. Stevens alleges she received when she fell down a flight of stairs in the theatre on February 25 last. A similar suit for $5,000 is being brought by the plaintiff's husband, Richard Stevens, for the loss of his wife's services. The case will be tried at the November term of Supreme Court.

Nikitas Dipson, president of Genesee Theatrical Enterprises, says his company has no immediate building plans for the recently acquired Community Theatre site in East Main street, Batavia, N. Y. The report is that a combined hotel and theatre to cost $350,000 will be put up there, construction to start this summer.

Fred M. Zimmerman, president of Western New York Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., announces that his company has taken over the operation of the Scenic and Allen theatres in Medina, N. Y. These two picture houses have been operated for a decade or so by Sidney C. Allen, one of the most widely known exhibitors in the Buffalo territory. The company recently acquired the Family Theatre in LeRoy, N. Y., and a house in Brockport, and has also leased the new Lafayette Theatre, soon to open in Batavia.

At a meeting of the members of Buffalo Zone, M. P. T. O. of N. Y. in the Hotel Statler, Friday, June 26 the officers named at the recent Syracuse pow wow were ratified and plans further discussed for the Greater Movie Season, which was indorsed 100 per cent.

Johnny Carr, manager of Shea's North Park Theatre, Buffalo, has been ill and confined to his home, following an operation in a local hospital. During his absence George Mason, assistant manager of Shea's Hippodrome, has been in charge.

Vincent R. McFaul, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, has a new automobile and is planning a dash to Alexandria Bay soon for a few days vacation. Mr. McFaul also plans spending the week ends at his summer home at Niagara-on-the-Lake. M. Shea, president of the Shea Amusement Company, was in town the past week looking over the construction work at his new Buffalo Theatre. Mr. Shea is spending the summer at his home at Manhattan Beach, New York.

Manager Ray S. Averill of the Olympic, Buffalo, pulled a good exploitation stunt this week in connection with "I'll Show You the Town." He entered a beautiful damsel in the Evening Times bathing beauty contest at Crystal Beach under the name of Miss Olympic, who was also driven about town sitting on top of the rear seat of a sporty car in a stunning bathing suit.

Laurence (Buddy) Stuart, managing director of the Fenway Theatre in Boston, has been appointed general manager of the Hub motion picture managers in charge of the promotion of the Greater Movie Season.

A theatre under construction in Arlington is to be named the Arlington. It will be ready for opening in September.

Lawrence De Cane, treasurer of Waldron's Casino in Boston, has been appointed assistant general manager of Norumbega Park, amusement resort near Boston.

The Goldstein Brothers have eliminated vaudeville from the programs at their Broadway Theatre in Springfield and a double feature film policy will prevail for the summer.

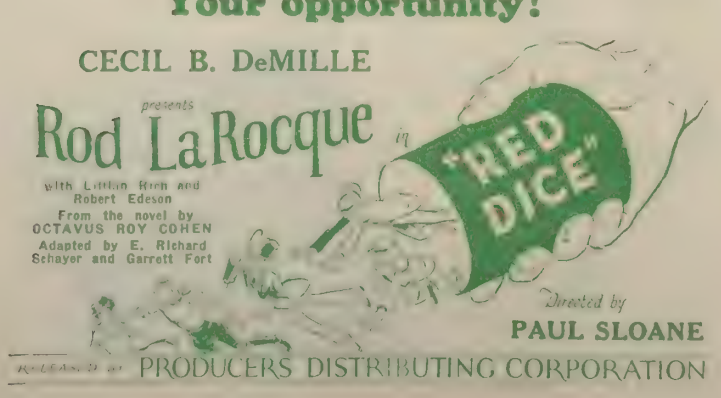
The Starlight Promenade at Gordon's Capitol Theatre in Allston is an inducement for movie-goers to go to the Capitol in the summer-time. At intermission periods patrons may visit the promenade where refreshments and smokes are dispensed.

When the Arlington Theatre in Boston is reopened in September it will again be known by its former name, the Castle Square.

Dan Finn, general manager of Gordon's Olympia Theatre in Lynn and assistant vaudeville booker for the circuit, is now enjoying his vacation. James J. Moore is keeping things humming at the Olympia.

Work soon will be started on the construction of a modern theatre, seating 2,000 in Roxbury to be known as the Rivoli. It will be operated by the New England Operating Company, one of the largest independent theatre companies in New England, which controls the Modern, Beacon, Dudley, Shawmut, Jamaica and other theatres in Greater Boston.

The Thompson Square Theatre, Charlestown, Mass., has devised a summer announcement in the form of a card that should interest all community theatre operators. It reads: "To the mothers of Charlestown: Vacation will soon be here and knowing as we do your worries and cares about your children, we cordially solicit their patronage. You can send them here. We will give them all the care and attention that is in our power. The theatre is kept cool and fresh by three large fans. Keep them off the streets. They are safe here."



MAKING PICTURE THEATRE HISTORY IN LYNN, MASS.

Lynn, Mass., Theatres Boast Four Romances of Industry

COUNTLESS, indeed, are the romances that have been written of those in industry from time immemorial, and in —the motion picture industry—these certainly are not confined to the studios.

Witness forthwith.

The managing director of three theatres, who found his bearings in a theatre as a singer; his chief assistant, who rose from the ranks as a cleaner.

The scene is the Comique Theatre in Lynn, Mass., twenty years ago, when Moe and Mitchell Mark were the proprietors of this pioneer New England picture theatre, with the latter as manager. Songs, some illustrated and some without the laugh or tear-compelling slides, were an added attraction to each program. The singer was Allan B. Newhall.

Passing swiftly through the ten years, we find this self-same singer the managing director of the Mark-Strand Theatre, Lynn, which was opened in 1915.

Mr. Newhall's responsibilities, however, do not consist merely of managing the Mark-Strand. His position as managing director also has placed him in charge of the Mark-Comique, where he once was the taker of orders to do this or that—not the "giver" as he has been for the past decade. Furthermore, he also is part owner of the Waldorf Theatre.

All are exclusive picture houses. The Mark-Strand's policy consists of double feature programs, changed Sunday and Thursday, with occasional full week runs of the super-features. There is a ten-piece orchestra and a soloist, the latter being changed each week, sometimes a vocalist and at other times an instrumentalist. The Comique is a first-run house, presenting double-feature programs for the week starting on Monday. A different double bill is presented on Sundays only. The Waldorf has three double-feature changes weekly, with a popular price of admission. During the fall and winter season vaudeville is an added attraction on Sundays.

Becoming an employe at the same time these intrepid showmen were embarking upon their illustrious careers in the world of amusement, Mr. Newhall has been on the Mark payroll the longest of any person now employed in the Mark-Strand theatres. He always has been in Lynn and never has worked for any theatrical concern except the Mark-Strand Theatre Company.

And Mr. Newhall found his greatest romance while in the theatre business—his marriage. His wife, Mrs. Eva Newhall, has been of great aid in his success—he admits it—and she now is the manager of the Comique Theatre.

Mr. Newhall's right-hand man at the Mark-Strand is the young man who rose to his present position from that of cleaner of the theatre of which he is now assistant to Managing Director Newhall in the position of house manager.

This young man is Roy D. Fraser, a native of Halifax, N. S. Mr. Fraser became an employe of the Mark-Strand in July, 1921, when he was hired as a cleaner. His evident pleasure in his work and his close attention to his duties brought his promotion to the post as chief usher, but he still continued to do the cleaning work every morning. Later he was made superintendent of the Mark-Strand building, which in addition to the theatre includes several stores and offices.

Two years ago when Mr. Newhall took charge of the Waldorf Theatre, Royce J. Beckman, whom we will tell you about later in this article, who had been assistant to Mr. Newhall, was made manager of the Waldorf and Mr. Fraser succeeded to the post as house manager of the Mark-Strand. Mr. Fraser's liking for the theatre began in his native Halifax when he played in minstrel shows and with dramatic companies for more than four years.

Another important factor in the Mark-Strand Theatre Company of Lynn and, in fact, in the New England Mark theatres, is Moe Silver, who is general auditor of the three Lynn houses and the Mark-Strand in Worcester. Mr. Silver has been connected with the Mark interests for ten or more years. Two years ago he formed a partnership that included Mr. Newhall and they took over the old Lynn Theatre. After remodeling it considerably it was opened as the Waldorf. Mr. Silver is secretary of the New England Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce.

Royce J. Beckman, now house manager of the Waldorf, while employed at the Mark-Strand was house manager. He was at the Strand between seven and eight years. He recently took as his bride the cashier at the Strand. Mrs. Beckman also has been a Strand employe for more than seven years. So here's another romance that can be chalked up to the Mark-Strand.

The Lynn Strand is a 2,000-seat house, constructed similar to the other houses of the circuit. Its ten-piece orchestra is one of the best picture house aggregations in New England. Soloists are presented each week. In fact, everything about this beautiful theatre follows the plan that has made such a success of the theatrical endeavors of the Mark Brothers.

The exhibitors' contribution, it was estimated, will make $33,000 of the needed fund of $50,000.

Giles Master, Strand Theatre, Gallup, New Mexico.

Better than Mix. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Not suitable for Sunday. Not a special. Ed. F. Cox, Princess Theatre, Bristol, Colorado.

MASK OF LOPEZ. (4,900 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Very good western. The horse is very good. I would say book it if your folks like westerns. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. MIDNIGHT MOLLY. (6,000 ft.). Star, Evelyn Brent. An excellent program picture which comes very near being a special. A very clever mystery story, with comedy dashes mixed in and Evelyn keeps one guessing as to which girl is Molly. Tone, all right. Sunday, yes. Special, I think so. Excellent audience appeal. Mixed class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

NO-GUN MAN. (4,522 feet). Star, Lefty Flynn. Just a fair western. Don't say much in advance of this picture, just play it and keep still and your audience will be pleased fairly. Tone, Okay. No for Sunday or special. Appeal, sixty percent. Draw farm and town class, town of 400. Admission 10-25, 15-35. A. H. Higley, Rushmore Theatre (260 seats), Rushmore, Minnesota.

NO-GUN MAN. (4,522 feet). Star, Lefty Flynn. Although a western melodrama it isn't the wildest of the wild and wooly kind but has a good plot, plenty of realistic action and thrills and suspense. It is much better than "The Millionaire Cowboy" and Lefty Flynn, good, wherever you put him. He is a first rate western stunt star and a fighting hero who wins the girl and puts all the villains hors de combat. Bound to please everybody. Get the money boys. City and country class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerrville, Texas.

SILENT STRANGER. (5 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. Good action picture that should go in every small town, big ones too. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre (150 seats), Glenalum, West Virginia.

SPEED WILD. (4,700 ft.). Star, Lefty Flynn. One of the best pictures, from an entertaining standpoint, I have ever run. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred percent. Mixed class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

THAT DEVIL QUEMADO. (4,720 ft.). Star, Fred Thomson. As good an action picture as money can buy. Fred Thomson is now an established box office attraction for the folks who like this kind of a picture. It goes over better than some of the so-called special. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, ninety percent. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre, Lebanon, New Hampshire.

THUNDERING HOOFS. (6,915 ft.). Star, Fred Thomson. Another good one from Thomson. Action is great and stunts marvelous. "Silver King" improves all the time. A whirlwind finish to this picture. Tone, good. Special, no. Strong audience appeal. Working class city of 100,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

UNTAMED YOUTH. (5 reels). Star cast. Very weak. Not in accordance with the press sheet. No tone. Sunday, no, special, no. Appeal, thirty percent. Small town class town of 450. Admission 10-30-35. A. F. Thomas, Pastime Theatre, Almyra, Arkansas.

WHITE FANG. (5,800 ft.). Star, Strongheart (dog). Just an ordinary picture that should sell at prices of ordinary westerns. I played this Memorial Day night and lost money. Appeal, sixty percent. Sunday, no. Special, no. A. H. Higley, Rushmore Theatre, Rushmore, Minnesota.

First National

DECLASSE. (7,889 ft.). Star, Corinne Griffith. Another good one. Star is very good, also print. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Hardly suitable for special. Appeal, eighty percent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-25. J. E. Draginis, Strand Theatre (450 seats), Yoakum, Texas.

FOOLS FIRST. (5,773 fet.) Star, Richard Dix. A First National picture, Marshall Neilan's fine direction, Marian Fairfax responsible for the scenario and an all star cast, say boys, don't you know it must be a masterplay. A crook story, but the gang isn't the whole thing for there's Richard Dix and Claire Windsor staging a splendid sentimental story, Claude Gillingwater and Robert Brower in rich old gentlemen's comedy, Raymond Griffith as the Wop, leader of the gang, exquisite photography and wonderful out door natural settings gives you a production one hundred percent entertainment and money in your till. City and country class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

FOR SALE. (7,840 ft.). Star, Claire Winsor. Just an ordinary program picture that will get by if used as such and not heavy exploited. Tone, fair. Special, no. Appeal, sixty-five percent. Industrial class town of 7,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (750 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

HER REPUTATION. (7 reels). Star, May McAvoy. A very pleasing subject. Lloyd Hughes is prominent in cast. Good outdoor picture. Mississippi flood scenes good. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal ninety percent. Good class town of 800. Admission 20-30. C. S. Chapman, Belvidere Theatre (300 seats), Grove Hill, Alabama.

HUNTRESS. (6,236 ft.). Star, Colleen Moore. A Hulbert Footner story that is some comedy and some rough stuff. Went over big with some and isn't a bad show at all for small town if you plug it right and explain what it is all about. Good tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, ninety percent. Working class town of 3,500. Admission 15-30, 20-40. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

IN HOLLYWOOD WITH POTASH AND PERLMUTTER. (6,750 ft.). Star cast. Not a small town picture. May go over big in the large centers but a village show should lay off this kind. Some walked out on this one, although the acting was flawless. The better class enjoyed this fairly well and the same play on the stage should be a scream but Jew comedy on the screen doesn't always hit the spot. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Not a special. Poor audience appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

IN HOLLYWOOD WITH POTASH AND PERLMUTTER. (6,750 ft.). Star cast. A good comedy drama that will please but for some reason failed to draw for me. These high class comedy dramas are not made for small town patronage. So go slow in the small towns on these. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, eighty-five percent. Industrial class town of 7,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (750 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

NEW TOYS. (7,811 ft.). Star, Richard Barthelmess. They certainly had it in for Dick when they put him in this picture. Why not shoot him and be done with it? Story silly, and comment very unfavorable. This boy is generally good. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, forty percent. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre, Lebanon, New Hampshire.

SALLY. (8,636 ft.). Star, Colleen Moore. Boys, this is a dandy. You can promise them plenty and they will sure get it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, ninety-five percent. All classes in town of 6,000. Admission 10-25. J. E. Draginis, Strand Theatre (450 seats), Yoakum, Texas.

SANDRA. (7,905 ft.). Star, Barbara LaMarr. Slow moving society drama that pleased the ladies one hundred percent, the men about fifty percent. A few walkouts. Tone, doubtful. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SECRETS. (8,345 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. This is a good Norma Talmadge subject but not the best one she ever made. However, it will get money as a Norma Talmadge and please so if you have run her pictures you know about what to expect from this one. Don't pay an increase for this one. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, yes. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Industrial class town of 7,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (750 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Straight From the Shoulder, for the benefit of some new recruits to "Our Dependable Tip Gang" repeats the fact that it offers exhibitors another service besides the gathering of trustworthy tips.

Service, to Straight From the Shoulder, also means willingness to help exhibitors get together when one is stumped by some problem that another may have a solution for.

Not long ago an exhibitor wrote in frankly that he was up against bad conditions and he got sympathy and as good help as could be sought out for his troubles.

Maybe you are up against some exhibitor problem; probably there are others who have solved the puzzle or who have had experience that would help.

Folks, feel entirely welcome to write me about such things—and I'll try to find somebody whose experiences will help you out. Maybe I can't: but if I can, I will.

VAN.

SO BIG. (8,562 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. For real honest-to-goodness acting, Colleen can't be beat. Played two days to nice crowds and it was thoroughly enjoyed. A real picture with human appeal. Tone, okay. Sunday okay. Special, yes. General class town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

THIEF IN PARADISE. (7,231 feet). Star, Doris Kenyon. Not considered a real special but I think it one of the best pictures of the year. Good from every standpoint of view. Do not be afraid of this one. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. Rural class town of 1,500. Admission 10-30. D. C Kennedy, Electric Theatre (400 seats), Glasgow, Missouri

TWENTY-ONE. Star, Richard Barthelmess. The poorest picture he ever made; will not please in any town, any size. Lots of kicks here. No action; no nothing. Stay off of this one. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

Fox

DESERT OUTLAW. Star, Buck Jones. Buck back in westerns! Right where the fans want him, and they didn't fail to show their appreciation! This one pleased all of them and they couldn't help but yell 'Look at old Buck!' when Jones appeared in his old type western role. Plenty more like this, Buck, and remain "the hero of the cowboys." Tone, okay. Maybe for Sunday, no as special. Strong appeal. Draw from general class, town of about a thousand. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

NORTH OF HUDSON BAY. (6 reels). Star Tom Mix. Good entertainment for our patrons. Did good business. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. Town and rural class town of 1,028. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats) Vermont, Illinois.

TEETH. (6,190 feet). Star, Tom Mix. As a special this is a fairly fine flop. Bought for a special and advertised as such, but proved no better than lots of poor program offerings. Don't pay too much rental. Tone, good. Sunday, doubtful. Special, no. Fair appeal. Average American class town of 1,200. Admission 10-40-50. E. L. Wharton, Orpheum Theatre (335 seats), Glasgow, Montana.

Metro-Goldwyn

BEAUTY PRIZE. (5,759 feet.) Star, Viola Dana. Very good comedy drama. Viola popular here, and this one pleased. Ran one day to nice crowds. Bought it right and made money. Tone okay. Appeal eighty per cent. No as special. Draw all classes, town 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

DIXIE HANDICAP. (6,965 feet). Star Lloyd Hughes. As fine as they make them. Everyone enjoyed it and many came by to tell me. Will please any audience. Horse race real exciting. Boost it. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. One hundred per cent appeal. General class town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

GREAT DIVIDE. (7,811 feet). Star, Conway Tearle. Very draggy at first. Last half of the picture is good. Pretty thin story. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. Mixed class town of 2,000. Admission 10-30. G. F. Wallis, Mainstreet Theatre (500 seats), Russell, Kansas.

HE WHO GETS SLAPPED. (6,613 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. Very good. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fair appeal.

NAVIGATOR. (5,600 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. I've got to call this one of the best of Buster's. It sure pleased. Tone okay. Yes for Sunday; possibly as special. Draw village and rural, town 400. Admission 15-25. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

THREE AGES. (5,500 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. This is an old one and positively not good. It came as a feature length comedy, but we failed to find a laugh in it. Lay off, boys. No tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. No appeal. Rural and village class town of 300. Admission 10-35. Nelson and Ottem, Rex Thetare (135 seats), Osnabrock, North Dakota.

THY NAME IS WOMAN. (9,087 feet). Star, Ramon Novarro. A poor excuse for a picture. They left too much untold in this picture. It leaves too much to the imagination. They tried to imitate Elinor Glynn here, but they failed. If the original story was like the picture then Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer must have been hard up for stories. Stay off this. Print good. Tone, bad. Sunday, no. Special, no. No appeal. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

Paramount

ARGENTINE LOVE. (5,970 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. We struck a hot night and had a very poor attendance. It is a program show that is fair. Daniels is not a big drawing card. Tone, good. Special, no. ICEBOUND. (6,471 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Just a little above program schedule. Not a box office attraction only fair but worth seeing. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

Must Have World

He has sent dependable tips from time to time! That makes it logical that his picture should get into the pages devoted to "Our Trustworthy Tip Gang."

Look upon him, folks. One of "Our Gang" and an ornament to it pictorially as well as "contributorially."

James N. Fisher, of the Berryman-Fisher Company, operating the Lyric Theatre, Versailles, Kentucky.

Says Mr. Fisher:

"Have been camping on the Kentucky River for several weeks, but had my Moving Picture World mailed to me, for that is one magazine I cannot do without!"

MANHATTAN. (6,415 feet). Star, Richard Dix. A program show that is fair. We had the poorest attendance on this show in a period of seven years. The business is shot to pieces in this town. Tone, good. A family picture. Not a special. Fair appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

Special, yes. Very good audience appeal. Town and rural class town of 1,018. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

OLD HOME WEEK. Star, Thomas Meighan. Lila Lee sure did look good in this one, and that helped put the picture over. This is a first class production and will please but all Meighans are so much alike that when you see one you see them all. This star has no drawing power here at all. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. A great fairy tale, but not much to it for anyone outside school children. No appeal. Sunday, yes. Special, in length. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre (200 seats), Natoma, Kansas.

SHOCK PUNCH. Star, Richard Dix. One of his best. Has thrills and action and some suspense scenes on a skyscraper that are excellent. It is the kind of a story in which Dix is at his best and goes a long ways toward making him more popular. Draw from city of 15,000. Admission 20-40. Ben L. Morris, Temple and Olympic Theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

ISN'T LIFE WONDERFUL? (8,000 feet). Star cast. Advertised as a simple romance of love and potatoes, and it sure lives up to it, simple is no name for it, it's terrible. No appeal. Not suitable for Sunday or any other day. Special, no. Rialto Theatre (700 seats), Bloomington, Illinois.

ISN'T LIFE WONDERFUL? (8,000 feet). Star, Carol Dempster. Nothing wonderful in this but title and acting. Too much sordid realism kills it. Who in heck wants to sit through eight reels to look at half starved people struggling for spuds in order to maintain life "Grief" would be an appropriate title for the story. Will not stand exploitation. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, sixty per cent. General class city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, fifty per cent. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre, Lebanon, New Hampshire.

SALVATION HUNTERS. (5,500 feet). Star cast. If you like mud, maybe you'll like this one, try and find out who was kidding one or the other, Chaplin or Fairbanks. No appeal. Not suitable for Sunday. Not a special. Rialto Theatre (700 seats), Bloomington, Illinois.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY. (10 reels). Star, Mary Pickford. As old as the hills but was bought right and made a little money on it. If you haven't played it don't let age stop you from doing so. Print nearly new. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. Admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

THIEF OF BAGDAD. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. This is a big picture and we paid a big price, but did not draw at the box office although heavily advertised. Fairy stories do not go in our city. Rankin, Co-operative Theatre, Idana, Kansas.

General class city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Stillman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

DARING CHANCES. Star, Jack Hoxie. Hoxie sure proved a good tonic for torrid weather temperature here hovering around the Century mark, but he pulled 'em in just the same. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes in big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

MAD WHIRL. (6,184 feet). Star, May McAvoy. A comedy drama spiced with lots of jazz. Comprises a splendid cast trying to portray characters of a crazy story. It will get by and that's all. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, sixty per cent. General class city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

SADDLE HAWK. Star, Hoot Gibson. An average Hoot Gibson picture that will please all Gibson fans, and where a western is popular, this should go over fine. The paper on Gibson's new pictures is fine. Gibson, it seems, now equals Mix in drawing power in most small towns. Good tone. Appeal ninety per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw industrial class, town 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

SIGNAL TOWER. (6,714 feet). Three good players, Rockcliffe Fellowes, Wallace Beery and Virginia Valli—put this railroad story over in pretty good shape. It lacks a romance that so many movie fans like. A good bit of the railroad stuff is staged but seems to please. Draw from city of 15,000. Admission 20-40. Ben L. Morris, Temple and Olympic Theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

STRAIGHT THRU. Star, William Desmond. Failed to draw. Desmond has no drawing power here. Pull all classes, town 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

Vitagraph

CAPTAIN BLOOD. (10,680 feet). Star, J. Warren Kerrigan. This is a real big show as most other exhibitors have already said but for some unknown reason it was a complete failure here. Special, no. Good appeal. Family and transient class, city of 65,000. Admission 10-15. R. K. Covington, Bijou Theatre (500 seats), Fresno, California.

EMPTY SADDLE. Star, Pete Morrison. This is the first of eight Pete Morrison subjects released one each month by Vitagraph. Usual advertising brought good Saturday night crowd but failed to please my western fans. Usually they expect plenty of action from this star, but this one is slow. Pete gets canned in the first reel. What can you expect of a hero locked in jail until the last hundred feet of film, disappointment? Here's hoping the next seven on my contract is better than the "Empty Saddle." No tone. Sunday, no. Good attendance. Draw miners. Admission 15-25. C. M. Lane, Big Sandy Theatre (200 seats), Big Sandy, West Virginia.

FEAR BOUND. (5,700 feet). Star, Marjorie Daw. A remarkable picture of a fear crazed man whose degraded father and brothers play upon his affliction in order to gain their ends until he finds himself in last reel and cleans them up by a ferocious fight. It's pretty rough but full of pep and will please the majority. Tone, poor. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. General class city of 500,000. Admission 10-20. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

PAMPERED YOUTH. (6,640 feet). Star, Cullen Landis. A drama of regeneration of a cad with a thrilling rescue from a burning building and a happy ending. A good program picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, seventy per cent. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Warner Bros.

CONDUCTOR 1492. (6,500 feet). Star, Johnny Hines. A clever, clean comedy drama that our patrons enjoyed greatly. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special no. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Town and rural class town of 1,018. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

GOLD DIGGERS. (6,500 feet). Star, Hope Hampton. Who said this picture isn't good? A good evening's entertainment for anyone. Lots of comedy. Better than lots of trash being shoved at us nowadays. Nothing to feel ashamed of after running it. You can take your sweetheart or your wife and still need not blush at anything. Our audience liked it and told others to come and see it. The only trouble is it is too long. Nine reels. Seven or eight would have been enough. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

GOLD DIGGERS. (6,500 feet). Star, Hope Hampton. Comedy-drama that would go fairly well as a program picture, provided the film wasn't full of bum splices and abbreviated subtitles. This production kept the projectionist standing on his head trying to keep the picture in frame. Our friend, Richardson, of the Projection Department, surely would have set up a big howl had he seen the beautiful (?) splices in this film. Fair tone. No for Sunday, no indeed as special. Program appeal. Draw general class, town of about a thousand. Admission 10-25 to 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

LOVER'S LANE. (6,000 feet). Star, Robert Ellis. Fair. Nothing to get excited about. I lost money on it. Same as on all Warner's, due to high rental. Appeal, seventy per cent. Sunday, yes. Special, no. D. C. Smith, Lyric Theatre (300 seats), Fordyce, Arkansas.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Will Picturize "The Crazy Fool"

"THE CRAZY FOOL," Donald Ogden Stewart's latest humorous book, has been purchased for screening by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. It's the story of one, Hatch, who inherits an insane asylum, runs it on rotarian principles, becomes immensely wealthy, and discovers finally that persons who are insane are saner than those who are presumed to be sane.

This book, published by Albert and Charles Boni, is reported to be selling on the stalls at the rate of more than 1,000 daily. It has received most excellent reviews. Burton Bascoe said of it:

"Now and then there comes along a rare book which is so good that our national professional vanity makes us wish to be among the first to acclaim its excellence. 'The Crazy Fool' is the 'Alice in Wonderland' of modern American urban life."

The critic of the New York Evening Post said: "'The Crazy Fool' is a mad and merry satire on American civilization."

The critic of the New York Herald-Tribune said, "Mr. Stewart is perhaps the most spontaneous living American humorist. This book is good humor, very good humor."

Stewart, who now is in Europe, has been engaged by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to collaborate on the filming of his story, and is expected at the West Coast Studios not later than October 1.

"Shenandoah," Famous Stage Play, a Preferred Picture

PREPARATORY work on a big film version of the famous Civil War, "Shenandoah," was begun this week by B. P. Schulberg who will present this celebrated story as one of the highlights in his program of Eighteen Preferred Pictures for the coming year.

Following word that work on the script has started, Mr. Schulberg announced that Marcel De Sano, recently signed by his organization, will handle the direction. De Sano is at present filming "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work" as his initial Schulberg release.

According to present plans, camera work on "Shenandoah" is scheduled for the middle of August. The producer looks forward to making it one of the outstanding releases of 1925-26 and promises that it will eclipse his screen version of the "Virginian," listed among the biggest box-office attractions of last season.

A staff of research experts is now busy reconstructing, accurately, details incidental to filming the big battle scenes in "Shenandoah." Tests are being made of several well known players, considered for the leads.

A partial idea of the story's importance can be gained from the fact that, with the exception of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," it has received the widest presentation of any American play ever staged. It has been a stock favorite for thirty-six years and has had five Broadway revivals in New York City.

Christie-Producers Comedy, "Seven Days," Has Great Cast

"SEVEN DAYS," which is Al Christie's chief contribution to Greater Movie Season, has what Scott Sidney, the director, terms a thoroughly competent cast who know comedy when they see it.

"Seven Days," scheduled for release by Producers' Distributing Corporation September 20th, was writen by Mary Roberts Rinehart under the title of "When a Man Marries" and was her first best seller.

Lillian Rich, loaned through courtesy of Cecil B. De Mille, Creighton Hale, Lilyan Tashman, Mabel Julienne Scott, Hallam Cooley, William Austin, Tom Wilson, Rosa Gore, Eddie Gribbon and Charles Clary are the players selected to portray the various characters in Mrs. Rinehart's story, which made a successful stage vehicle through Avery Hopwood's adaptation.

In casting "Seven Days" Director Sidney has discarded the term "all star cast" as having lost its significance through abuse. "A great comedy cast" is the billing on this production, which includes players whose past work guarantee a finished performance both individually and collectively. "The public will eventually term it an all-star cast," is Mr. Sidney's prediction.

Frank Roland prepared the screen version of "Seven Days."

Warner Bros. Finish Four More Pictures

Within the last few days four more Warner Bros. pictures have been added to the list of finished production on 1925-26 program.

Among these is Syd Chaplin's starring vehicle, "The Man on the Box," from Harold McGrath's novel and play, which scored hits both among fiction lovers and followers of the stage. Charles ("Chuck") Reisner directed the production.

In the list also is "Red Hot Tires," in which Monte Blue and Patsy Ruth Miller are supported by a superior cast. The story is by Gregory Rogers, and Earle C. Kenton directed.

In "Three Weeks in Paris," Matt Moore and Dorothy Devore, whose current release, "How Baxter Butted In" is creating a sensation, promise another treat to picture fans. This also is a Gregory Rogers story, with Roy del Ruth handling the megaphone.

Fourth in the array of productions just finished is the picturization of "Ranger of the Big Pines," adapted from Hamlin Garland's thrilling story, "Cavanaugh, Forest Ranger," Kenneth Harlan plays the lead, with Helene Costello in an important role. William Van Dyke was director.

Pathe News Nos. 52 and 53 show first pictures of the fighting in the French war with the Riff tribes in Morocco

Pathe Films French Blow Against Riffs in Morocco

FIRST pictures of the big French offensive against the Riff tribesmen in Morocco are a vivid and thrilling feature of Pathe News No. 52. When the Riffs began their outbreaks, Emanuel Cohen, editor of Pathe News, assigned Andre Glattli of his Paris staff to cover the French-Riff war, and at the risk of his life he has taken his camera into the midst of hostilities and secured sensational scenes of actual warfare.

The following resume of war scenes in this special feature of Pathe News No. 52 presents an idea of the unusual views secured by Cameraman Glattli: Troops advance to launch fierce attack upon Riff tribesmen in Astar village; the French artillery opens up with full force to shell the nest of the Moors; the daring Pathe cameraman risks his life in the midst of the firing, as the bombing of Astar continues; Scores of wounded—some at the cameraman's very side—the Red Cross workers give heroic aid; some of the desperately injured are rushed to ambulances in the rear by airplane; behind the lines at Fez, Marshal Lyautey, in charge of war against the Riffs consults with General Hoecht, his chief of staff.

Other interesting subjects in this Pathe News release are: The Intercollegiate Regatta at Poughkeepsie, which was won by the Navy oarsmen; A "Tank Wedding" of a Buck Private at Golden, Colorado; MacMillan's Polar Expedition bidding farewell to the United States; the placing of the body of the late Sen. La Follette in state at the Capital in Madison, Wisconsin; Von Hindenburg "captured" by cameramen, and several other interesting topical events.

"The Wanderer" Completed

Following months of intensive work on the part of both Raoul Walsh, director, and the featured players, the final scene for "The Wanderer," for the famous Biblical parable of the prodigal son has been filmed in the Paramount Hollywood studio. The picture, it is thought, will set a new record both for its spectacular features and for its beauty of photography. In collaboration with Director Raoul Walsh, Roy Pomeroy, who was responsible for the opening of the Red Sea in "The Ten Commandments," has created a number of even more startling effects.

Joe Brandt Announces New Columbia Policy in Force

JOE BRANDT, President of Columbia Pictures, who is touring the country visiting exchanges and many of the exhibitors in the key cities, believes that an epoch-making event in the history of independent pictures occurred this season when his company, as well as a number of other large independent producers, will have prints in their exchanges to show the exhibitor exactly what he, in turn, might offer to the public.

"The old days when exhibitors were up against a 'cat in the bag' proposition are gone forever," Brandt explained. "Columbia's organization, for example, worked long and faithfully to have a number of each of the Columbia, Waldorf and Perfection series cut, titled, and really ready for distribution before the season opened.

"Today, actually in advance of release dates, we have prints of the first few of each of these series of six in every one of our exchanges.

"This was made possible by the confidence which the exhibitors placed in our product last season, and the fact they have shown an eagerness to book our entire 1925-26 series of eighteen pictures. Of course, with prints in our exchanges now, we expect our bookings to surpass last year's business for the early summer months.

"This season we have worked on the notion of making bigger and better pictures, even though we had to expend much more money. We expect that a fair portion of our pictures will be bigger success than even our 'Midnight Express,' and 'Fighting the Flames,' although these two pictures actually made box office history in a number of important first run houses.

"The Danger Signal," first on the releasing order of our Columbia productions was acclaimed as a worthy successor to the 'Midnight Express' at a private showing for exhibitors which we held in Los Angeles. The same occurred in New York when this picture and the first of the Perfection releases. 'Fighting Youth,' as well as the opener of the Waldorf series, 'Enemy of Man.' The Waldorf series will have a number of powerful stories as vehicles for Dorothy Revier, acclaimed as the most beautiful girl in California."

"The Sporting Chance"

Fast Moving Melodrama of the Turf Is Film That Should Please Majority of Patrons

Reviewed by Tom Waller

Milady's boudoir as the refuge of a prize race horse being sought by the police, and a pony ballet in which beautifully gowned women ride real ponies over heavy rugs amid costly bits of furniture in the reception hall of a huge estate, are two of the unusual scenes in Tiffany's "The Sporting Chance." The story is one of jockeys, two sporting men and a pretty girl. It has punch and pep and the vivacity associated with melodramas based upon the racing turf. As a whole it looks mighty good from the coin angle of any box office.

"The Sporting Chance," from the standpoint of cast, direction, art and continuity, is the type of picture which with all propriety and sincerity he prominently placed in the quality row as an audience attraction.

The atmosphere of the paddock and the race, with thrilling close-ups of neck-to-neck contestants, furnish the big splash. Anyone who has ever visited a race track will appreciate these scenes for their realism. The interest in this film race, however, is particularly suspenseful since upon its outcome hinges the happiness of a loyal Southerner, whose only property is his horse; a beautiful girl, whose winnings will save her father from disgrace, and ruination of a suave bachelor, the treacherous rival of the Southerner for the girl's hand.

The story adheres tenaciously to its theme throughout. Thus an audience should be all keyed for the race when the Southerner "spirits away" his winning stallion from under the sheriff's attachment secured by the bachelor—hides the thoroughbred in the bedroom of his fiance, and again eludes the police when he gains access for the big event by disguising the pacer as a decrepit nag.

Lou Tellegen excellently interprets the bachelor role. Dorothy Phillips as the girl and Theodore Von Eltz as the owner of "Kentucky Boy" are also worthy of especial mention.

Cast

Patricia Winthrop.....Dorothy Phillips
Caleb Winthrop.....George Fawcett
Robert Selby.....Theodore Von Eltz
The Jockey.....Andrew Clarke
Kentucky Boy.....Kentucky Boy

Author, Jack Boyle.
Directed by Oscar Apfel.
Adapted by John P. Bernard.
Length, 6,696 feet.

Story

Thornton, wealthy bachelor sportsman, is turned down by Patricia, society girl. She falls in love with Selby, loyal Southerner, whose only material wealth is his horse, "Kentucky Boy." Thornton gets a sheriff's attachment on the horse, as he defrayed its traveling expenses North. Patricia in order to save her father, agrees to marry Thornton. When Selby informs her that the purse for the race would meet these obligations she works with the Southerner, enabling him to hide his horse in her home until the day of the race. Selby camouflages the stallion so that it looks like a peanut vender's nag and gets by the police at the gate. The horse's victory spells happiness for the couple and Patricia's father, and the ruination of the bachelor.

"The Awful Truth"

Clever and Amusing Sophisticated Light Comedy in Adaptation of Play Starring Agnes Ayres

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Cleverness is the outstanding point of "The Awful Truth" adapted from a Broadway stage success and offered by Producers Distributing Corporation with Agnes Ayres in the title role.

The story is based on a very light foundation and is a domestic comedy drama dealing with the romance of a jealous husband, a flirtatious wife and a typical wealthy rounder. The innocent wife is divorced on purely circumstantial evidence. A wise friend believing they still love each other brings them together and by exercising her woman's wit to the utmost the wife succeeds in winning her husband back.

The plot while quite slight has been smoothly developed and smartly directed by Paul Powell and the players all seem to enter into the spirit of the story, the result is a bright and peppy production that is good for a number of laughs and should appeal more especially to sophisticated patrons. Some of the humor, especially that in the subtitles is rather subtle and all through the picture is evidence of clever craftsmanship which entertains even if it does not seem entirely logical or true to life.

One of the best sequences is almost a travesty on the familiar situation where the villain gets the woman in a hunting lodge and the hero arrives in the nick of time. In this instance, the wife deliberately brings about this situation, taunting the other fellow to make love to her, but she has been careful to play her cards so that her husband will be within reach of her call for help, and she makes this situation bring about the clearing of her name from the suspicion of infidelity.

Every one of the players give good performances. Agnes Ayres is an excellent type for the wife and Warner Baxter shows up well as the gruff, jealous husband. Phillips Smalley is ideal as the other fellow, Winifred Bryson gives a pleasing performance as the helpful friend. In the rather novel role of a youthful mooning sentimental lover Raymond Lowney is delightful and Carrie Clarke Ward is thoroughly amusing as his wealthy but eccentric aunt.

Although considerably stretched out and possible to have been told in materially less footage, "The Awful Truth" should provide pleasing light entertainment especially for the more intelligent class of patrons.

Cast

Lucy Satterley.....Agnes Ayres
Norman Satterley.....Warner Baxter
Kempster.....Phillips Smalley
Danny Leeson.....Raymond Lowney
Josephine.....Winifred Bryson
Mrs. Leeson.....Carrie Clarke Ward

Based on stage play by Arthur Richman.
Directed by Paul Powell.
Length, 5,917 feet.

Story

Lucy is popular with the men and after she is won by the modern cave-man tactics of Norman Satterley she continues her flirtations which arouse the intense jealousy of her husband. He particularly resents the attentions of Kempster, a rounder, who, however makes him a flattering offer to take charge of a mining proposition and he goes to investigate. Lucy, to get away from Kempster, visits her friend Josephine. A fire occurs in the apartment house and Lucy and Kempster, who also lives in the same building, meet on a fire escape in negligee. Norman returns just at this time, and refusing to accept any explanation, divorces Lucy. A year later, at a winter resort, Josephine finally persuades Lucy to accept a silly young millionaire, Danny, who is infatuated with her. His aunt refuses to sanction the match and Josephine sends for Norman, who says Lucy is blameless, and tellls her he lied like a gentleman. Norman and Lucy again become friendly, but he still does not believe her until she engineers a scene with Kempster in a lodge so that Norman comes to her rescue. Finally, Norman admits he has been unhappy and wants her back, and says as there can be no happiness in marriage without trust he has decided to trust her.

"American Pluck"

George Walsh a Peppy Hero in Melodramatic and Amusing Chadwick Picture

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

"American Pluck," starring the athletic George Walsh and directed for I. E. Chadwick by Richard Stanton, is a romantic and exciting story of an irresponsible American youth in a fictitious foreign country. He saves the princess from court intrigue and ultimately ascends to the throne with her.

Only the most imaginative can find realism in the picture because of the very nature of the story. The director realized this at the start, and so he has turned out a feature which smoothly turns from melodrama into good comedy and then back into "meller." Fans who like their action in the raw will like the picture.

Walsh is a goodlooking, virile American youth and he instills a lot of pep into the action. Opposite him is Wanda Hawley as the princess. She gives a satisfactory performance. Frank Leigh is a capable villain, and Tom Wilson, Leo White and Dan Mason have very fine comedy parts. Photographic effects by Lyman Broening and titles by Ralph Spence, who also did the scenario, are worthy of special mention. One of Spence's best titles is, "Father, who is working his son's way through college."

One feature of the picture is a prize-fight with one "Hard Boiled" Perry. Walsh is a realistic scrapper, and with Leo White on the sidelines making comedy, the scene goes over great.

The athletic star's stunts are well done, particularly one dive off a cliff; Broening's camera work put this over to great effect.

"The Bloodhound"

Bob Custer Appears in Dual Role in His Newest for F. B. O. Which Is Story of Mounted Police

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Bob Custer who started his series for F. B. O. as a Texas Ranger has, while preserving the type of role of an enforcer of the law, transferred the locale of the action from Texas to the Canadian Northwest, and in his newest Jesse Goldburg Production "The Bloodhound" appears as a member of the Northwest Mounted Police.

The story follows the usual lines of films of this kind centering in the efforts of the hero to "get his man." The action, however, is a little more complicated than is ordinarily the case, for the star has a dual role appearing also as a trapper suspected of murder. This causes the "Mounty" to be suspected by one of his fellow workers as having been sent out to arrest himself, bringing about a unique situation as this fellow is sent out to arrest the hero.

This situation is really more novel than convincing; the story, however, has the vigorous action and pleasing out-door atmosphere of the Northwestern films with plenty of snow stuff that should prove welcome at this season.

The story is melodramatic and probability is not at all times adhered to but there is good suspense in the climax where the hero locates his man and finds he is his long-lost brother and right on top of this the other "mounted" man appears and the hero gives himself up in his brother's place. The biggest punch comes when the trapper's wife dramatically confesses the truth.

Custer is a good type for a role of this kind and seems perfectly at home and gives a good performance, the others in the cast do satisfactory work, Mary Beth Milford is seen as the heroine.

In houses where outdoor stories dealing with the Mounted Police are popular "The Bloodhound" should prove a satisfactory program attraction.

"Fighting Courage"

Ken Maynard Lively Hero in Actionful Davis Distributing Western

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

The principal object of "Fighting Courage," a Davis Distributing Division picture, quite plainly was to instill as many thrills as possible into the five reels. From the very beginning it starts to "pick on" the nervous system with fast automobile driving and encounters with a bold, bad bandit. Such a speedy opening sometimes presages a sorry sagging of interest in the middle of a picture, but "Fighting Courage" manages an ever-ascending suspense.

Ken Maynard is a newcomer in the ranks of western stars and he should be welcomed by the fans. He has the physique and the good looks, and he gets plenty of pep into his work. Peggy Montgomery is attractive and capable in the role of heroine, and the other players do well. The Hollywood Beauty Sextette is heavily featured in subtitles but is somewhat incidental in the action. The members don't seem to have been discovered on California bathing beaches.

The plot hinges on a similarity in appearance of the hero and the bandit. Both of them are thoroughly chased all over the landscape and have to do some fast riding to escape the bullets of posses. Besides saving the girl from danger, the hero also is commissioned to discover a lost mine and he succeeds after many close shaves and really good fist fights.

Because it teems with action and because Ken Maynard is a lively, likeable youngster, "Fighting Courage" ought to please western audiences despite its sometimes choppy continuity. Tarzan described as "King of All Horses," is featured in the picture. He is a clever white horse.

"Before Midnight"

Henry Ginsberg Offers Fast-Moving and Exciting Crook Melodrama Starring William Russell

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

With the curiosity arousing title "Before Midnight" Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation, a newcomer in the independent market, is offering the first of a series of William Russell productions made for Royal Pictures.

An attempt on the part of the hero to smuggle a valuable jewel into this country and the efforts of a detective agency aided by the heroine to obtain this gem furnishes the basis for exciting melodrama, in which the principals are involved in a series of cleverly developed situations which while highly improbable are decidedly ingenious and hold the interest even if they do not convince.

"Before Midnight" for the most of its footage falls into the category of a crook story as the big secret that the hero is in reality the new owner of the detective agency and the whole thing is a plot to trap the manager who is suspected of crooked work is carefully hidden. The crook angle scores on its own footing and the unexpected twist provides a punch climax and by clearing the hero of suspicion brings about a happy ending.

The entire action of the story which begins in the morning transpires before midnight of the same day, and in keeping with this rapidity of plot development is the speed of the action. One exciting situation dovetails right into another with no time for the interest to lag.

William Russell gives a convincing performance as the supposed crook with Barbara Bedford capably portraying the girl. Brinsley Shaw is effective as the valet who turns out to be a secret service man and Alan Roscoe is well cast as the crooked detective.

The production details are thorougly adequate and "Before Midnight" should please the average patron for its exciting melodrama overbalances its improbabilities.

Paul Bern Makes a Delightful Production for Paramount of Rather Too Foreign a Story

Paul Bern leads an admirable cast through a delightful presentation of a story too foreign in its atmosphere to be thoroughly appealing to American audiences.

The people in this screen version of the play by Guy Bolton from the original of Ernest Vajda, do not act as we would have them, and the result is a play that is thoroughly amusing, but which carries no strong appeal. It may please for the moment, but quickly be forgotten, for the situations are too foreign to be approved by the average American audience.

Florence Vidor is seen to better advantage than usual and Matt Moore is at his best. Harry Myers does so well that one is sorry he is not permitted to keep his newly acquired wife, while Louise Fazenda is capital as the actress, providing the broader comedy. George Andre Beranger deserves a word of praise for his well-planned playing of the aviator and the minor roles are all in careful hands.

It is an unusually good ensemble, and a splendid production both in the direction of the scenes and the choice of interior and exterior locations. But the play itself is caviare to the average American taste.

A pictorial record of explorer Earl Rossman's two years stay among the Eskimos in the most northern part of the American continent is unfolded in "Kivalina of the Ice Lands" which is being offered by B. C. R. Productions, Inc.

Taking its title from the heroine, it is a comprehensive record of Eskimo life today. The story is exceedingly slight, just enough on which to hang the action which shows these people going about their daily life. The dramatic angle is carried largely in the subtitles which at times however hardly seem to be in the language that the Eskimo would use.

Among the striking scenes which distinguish this picture from others of the Arctic are views of the ocean in the process of freezing with the waves as they surge in on the coast apparently masses of small pieces of ice, and shots of the Spring thaw with huge fissures developing and floes breaking away from the main body.

The most outstanding shots, however are those of the aurora borealis filmed in natural color. While obtaining these scenes was a notable feat that is impressive in its effect the result does not measure up to the magnificent spectacle of this natural phenomena of which we have heard such rapturous accounts.

The Eskimos are shown migrating to the sea during the hunting season, driving immense herds of reindeer, building large boats out of skins which are placed over a wooden frame, and there are a number of views of their harpooning seal, an excellent sequence pictures a walrus hunt with the water dotted with scores of these huge creatures and in one instance the capture of a white whale is shown.

The Eskimo children are seen at play enjoying themselves much like other children, tobogganing being their chief sport, and we learn that they are quite expert jugglers. At times vast flocks of wild birds almost darken the horizon and an interesting scene shows the building of a corral out of ice cakes when the time comes to herd and count the reindeer.

There are several impressive views of Arctic storms and the most dramatic sequence shows the hero caught in a blizzard and building an igloo of ice as a shelter. Morning finds it "snowed under" and the reindeer steeds gone. He soon recaptures them and killing one for food and to use its hide as a sled he manages to get back to safety.

The human interest angles are not played up with particular strength nor is there the expected dramatic punches in the actual catching of the seals, walrus, etc. The picture depends mainly for its appeal on its being a true picturization of Eskimo life. Its value is largely instructive and as entertainment it falls into the class of a scenic or travelogue.

The worth of "Kivalina" as an audience attraction will depend largely on whether your patrons have seen other films of this kind and also as to whether a picture of this type will hold their interest for a number of reels as the main feature on the program.

Aguvaluk, a great Eskimo hunter plans to wed Kavalina the belle of the tribe and goes to Nashulik the witch doctor for his consent. Nashulik tells him he must not marry until he has discharged his father's debt and to go out alone and capture forty seals. This he does after a great struggle, resenting the fact that he cannot go with the others who capture a white whale and a number of walruses. Nashulik then informs him that to discharge the interest on the debt he must bring in the rare silver fox. After great privation Aguvaluk finally traps one several hundred miles inland. Returning home he is caught in a fierce storm, and builds himself an ice shelter for the night. In the morning his reindeers have disappeared but he finally captures them knowing they will wander into the teeth of the gale. To satisfy his hunger he kills the smaller, using its hide to make a new sled. Finally reaching home, his father's debt fully discharged, he prepares to marry Kivalina and there is a big wedding feast prepared.

"A Lucky Accident"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

A snappy fast-moving comedy that have a number of amusing situations and with several laughs in the subtitles is this the newest of Universal's single reel comedies featuring fat and jolly Charles Puffy. The idea is slight and familiar and shows Puffy as starting out for a little pleasure, landing in a hospital, falling in love with a nurse and finding out when he returns home that she is the very girl his mother has wished him to meet. It has been given good direction and introduces some laughable situations, especially where Puffy, crawling under an over-turned auto to help its occupants is grabbed by the ambulance crew and rushed to the hospital. It is one of the best of the new Charles Puffy series which have been hitting a pretty good pace. A few more like this one will firmly establish Puffy with the audiences that like fat comedians.—C. S. S.

"Just In Time"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

Wanda Wiley is the featured player in this two-reel Century Comedy distributed by Universal. It is slapstick worked into a highly improbable story of a reporter who ferrets out a gang that have threatened to destroy a newspaper and have kidnapped the son of the editor. Miss Wiley in this role climbs up a drain pipe, gets into the conspirators den, frees the boy and finally leads the gang in a chase that ends in the newspaper office where they are captured. There are some amusing rough and tumble and slapstick scenes that will appeal to fans that like this type of production, but there is very little ingenuity or originality and as a whole it fails to measure up to this star's recent vehicles.—C. S. S.

"Sherlock Sleuth"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

This Hal Roach Star Comedy presents Arthur Stone in the role of a hotel detective with nothing much under his hat. A famous crook robs the guests and the detective himself, then staves off capture temporarily by enlisting the services of a lion. This animal puts the guests to rout, but finally, through a series of lucky happenings, the detective nails the criminal and his female accomplice. The subject is of the familiar slapstick type, consisting largely of chases and far-fetched subtitles. It is well acted by Stone and a cast including Noah Young, Martha Sleeper, Marjorie Whiteis and William Gillespie. Ralph Cedar directed under the supervision of F. Richard Jones.—S. S.

"Film Facts"

(Red Seal—Magazine—One Reel)

Two sections of greater length than usual comprise issue "G" of Film Facts distributed by Red Seal. The first part is a comprehensive review of the activities of the Coast Guard in their protection of life and shipping along the Ocean and Great Lakes. There are scenes showing how they patrol the beach, resuscitate a drowning man and rig up a breeches buoy to haul in survivors from steamers in distress. One of the most interesting and instructive items of this entire series is the section which is of a historical nature, showing the various types of fire engines from the first hand pump right up to the present powerful and speedy automobile fire engine.—C. S. S.

Pathe Review No. 28

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

Of chief interest are scenes of an American Indian wedding. These are contrasted with the typical American wedding in this issue of the "Here Comes the Bride Series." "Wonders in Wax" are really remarkable in showing the making of life-like dummies in Paris. The Pathecolor section reveals "The Gorges of Ardeche" in Southern France.—S. S.

THE PEP OF THE PROGRAM

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

"The White Wing's Bride"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

This is the second Harry Langdon comedy of a series of two made by Principal Pictures Corporation under the direction of Alf Goulding. It varies from the usual Langdon comedy in that it is so full of gags familiar to audiences that Langdon hasn't a chance to be personally funny. In a few scenes he appears as a street cleaner, but most of the time is all dressed up. All he is given an opportunity to do is to run around and grimace. His best humor is of the more subtle and leisurely sort, and this subject rushes him from one disconnected situation to another. The humor is very broad and the subtitles are forced attempts to be funny. Audiences that like burlesque undoubtedly will find much to enjoy in "The White Wing's Bride," but Langdon's ever increasing throng of followers won't consider it typical of his work.—S. S.

"The Ropin' Venus"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

Here is another Universal two-reeler released under the Mustang brand, featuring Josie Sedgwick, who gives a good account of herself in the type of role which usually falls to the lot of a male star. The action concerns a gang of rustlers, who, by a ruse, lure the sheriff's party to one ranch while they make a raid on another. Josie, as the sheriff's daughter, gets on to their plan and follows a suspicious character. They capture and bind her, but she gets free and signals her father with a mirror. They chase her but she captures two of them, but deciding she has had enough excitement agrees to settle down as the husband of one of the posse. Miss Sedgwick again demonstrates that she is a fine horsewoman and acquits herself creditably in the strenuous western stunts. This film is up to the standard of the average western and there is an additional novelty in Miss Sedgwick's role.—C. S. S.

"Below Zero"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

"Below Zero" has plenty of snow but a lot of rambling incidents for the story. The frigidity of the atmosphere should create a longing in the average theatre on a hot afternoon for a cooler clime. Lige Conly, supported by Estelle Bradley, Robert Kortman and others, ploughs through banks of snow and indulges in some by-play with so-called badmen. Spectators should be amused by the antics of a horse on snowshoes and then skiis. A colored valet to Conly also may provide a few laughs. His sled is provided with a kitchen range to which is attached a long stove pipe. As a whole this two-reel Mermaid comedy should provide average amusement for slapstick fans.—T. W.

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

A wedding of the Bowery type, with a taxi driver and a sales girl as the principals, leads off this one-reel comedy. Cliff Bowes, Eddie Nelson, Virginia Vance and Zelma O'Neal are in shoe-throwing, slambang roles. The comedy moves at good slapstick speed, with a taxi running through buildings walls of all sizes and dimensions. It so happens that the girl and her husband commingle with a party of the elite. The affair winds up in a brawl with the husband as the instigator. The film has all of the program qualities of the average comedy.—T. W.

"Waiting"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

The mishaps of a graduate dishwasher and waiter are ludicrously portrayed in the Lloyd Hamilton manner by that comedian in "Waiting." This two-reel comedy should hold many laughs for patrons the country over. It appeals to us as a particularly good conglomeration of most all the tried and proven slapstick stunts. Hamilton wheedles out in his trusty little flivver in search of romance. This time his girl is bumped out into the machine of a rival and Hamilton goes through walls, etc., before he is stalled in the center of a trolley car. The next move he makes is out of the trolley and down a steep trestle when he is forced to hoof it. As a dishwasher and a waiter in a snappy eating place, Hamilton manages to break up all of the china ware before he rescues his girl from "the arms of a villain" in a private dining room.—T. W.

"The Knockout Man"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

With Jack Perrin and Louise Lorraine in the leading roles, Universal is reissuing this two-reel western which has for its theme the romance between a western he-man and the daughter of a minister. Seeking to follow the minister's advice the hero when struck turns his other cheek; the villain takes advantage of this and the hero is acclaimed as a coward. Finally when the villain taunts the hero by taking the girl to a dance hall and taunting the hero to rescue her, he licks the villain and cleans out the place, regaining the respect of the men and clinching the girl's admiration for him. The action, except for the climax, is hardly as snappy and strenuous as the usual western. But on the whole it classes up well with the average picture of its type today.—C. S. S.

"Ough!"

(Pathe-Stereoscopik—One Reel)

The title evidently comes from the stunts performed. Lariats are thrown, guns are fired and swords are slashed at the audience through the medium of the new process. It is all extremely effective as well as extremely trying on the nervous system. Audiences will "escape death" in a number of forms and it ought to create an uproar in the theatre.—S. S.

"Learning How"

(Pathe—Sportlight—One Reel)

This Grantland Rice Sportlight demonstrates that the beginning of all sports is "learning how." Various well known sportsmen and women are shown instructing the young. Considerable footage is given to Helen Jacobs, the West's latest tennis phenomenon, on the courts with William M. Johnston. The sports covered also include lariat throwing, golf, rowing, archery, baseball and football.—S. S.

First National Reports on Activities As Six Months of 1925 Nears Close

FIRST NATIONAL studios, East and West, and production heads, stars and directors, are busy; new productions are starting, and the cutting rooms are busy as the first half of the year 1925 comes nearer a close.

Five productions having been made at the First National Studios in New York since Earl Hudson brought his production units East in October, three pictures are now in work. Eight more are scheduled for production within the coming six months, according to plans outlined by General Manager Richard A. Rowland.

"The Half-Way Girl" and "The Pace That Thrills" are now in production at the studios, while Milton Sills and the company making "The Knockout" on location, on the Beauchene River, Que., will return to the New York Studios within a week for the completion of that picture. Lambert Hillyer is directing it.

"The Half-Way Girl"

"The Half-Way Girl," featuring Doris Kenyon and Lloyd Hughes, will be completed within a few days and go to the cutting room. "The Pace That Thrills," in which Ben Lyon and Mary Astor are featured, will take at least four more weeks. John Francis Dillon is directing "The Half-Wal Girl" and Webster Campbell "The Pace That Thrills."

In "The Half-Way Girl" many difficulties were met. A big U. S. Shipping Board steamer had to be purchased for sea scenes. Thrilling fire-at-sea sequences take place on this vessel. It was taken off Sandy Hook for the filming and the company spent a week aboard her. At the completion of the fire scenes the boat was blown up as one of the big thrills of the picture.

In "The Pace That Thrills," Ben Lyon will be seen as an automobile racer, a bull fighter and a prize fighter. It is a picture packed with action and exciting situations. The Sills picture, "The Knockout," is the story of a prize fighter who goes to the North woods when his arm gives out. There he fights his way through almost insurmountable difficulties. It is a picture such as Sills shines in. In one scene more than a million feet of logs are shown in the largest log jam in the history of lumbering in Quebec, Canada.

"Men of Steel" for Sills

On the list for production within the next six months are two big "specials"—"Men of Steel," in which Sills will be starred, and "Atlantis," which will be produced as a sequel to the screen sensation of the year, "The Lost World." Then there will be "The Savage," "The Unguarded Hour," "Bed and Board," "The Scarlet Saint," "The Boss of Little Arcady" and "Mademoiselle Modiste." "Men of Steel" is an adaptation of R. G. Kirk's Saturday Evening Post story, "United States Flavor." It will be one of the biggest features of the year for First National.

Preparing for "Atlantis"

Earl Hudson has been working for months on the story of "Atlantis" and is nearing the completion of the story. Willis O'Brien, technical director of "The Lost World," has been doing research work since last February for this picture. Hudson plans to make it even a greater picture than "The Lost World."

"The Savage" is an original story for the screen by Ernest Pascal. Ben Lyon will be featured, according to present plans. "The Knockout" is adapted from M. D. C. Crawford's great story, "The Come-Back." "The Unguarded Hour" is adapted from Margaretta Tuttle's Saturday Evening Post serial. It shows the follies and fascinations of the modern American girl. It vindicates her as a delectable combination of virtue and sophistication with a fascination unrivaled by the women of other nations.

Doris Kenyon will be featured in "Bed and Board," a story of a dissatisfied wife, by Lenore Coffee. Mary Astor will be featured in "The Scarlet Saint," adapted from Gerald Beaumont's Red Book story, "The Lady Who Played Fidele." Dorothy Mackaill, who appeared to such advantage in "Chickie" will be featured in "Mademoiselle Modiste." The featured players for "The Boss of Little Arcady" have not been selected.

Both Mr. Rowland and Mr. Hudson feel that the year will have been packed to the limit at First National's Eastern Studios when this schedule is completed by Autumn.

Work Starts on New Films

Production was started last week on four new productions for release by First National. Work was begun on two others a week previously.

The productions started last week include:

"The Dark Angel," a Samuel Goldwyn-George Fitzmaurice production, from the stage play of that title, with Ronald Colman in the lead. Filming began on June 10th.

"The Sea Woman," an Edwin Carewe production from Willard Robinson's play, with Blanche Sweet, Victor McLaglen, Constance Bennett and Robert Frazer. Work started June 10th.

"The Beautiful City"

"The Beautiful City," Inspiration's new starring vehicle for Richard Barthelmess, got under way at the same time, with Dorothy Gish and William H. Powell in the supporting cast. Elmer Clifton is directing.

"Joseph Greer and His Daughter," from Henry Kitchell Webster's new novel. Director George Archainbaud began photography on June 8th with Lewis Stone, Shirley Mason, Barbara Bedford and Hugh Allen in the cast. This production will be released under a new title.

The two productions that went into work the first week in June were Corinne Griffith's "Classified," from Edna Ferber's story, with Director Al Santell taking exteriors in New York ,and "The Pace That Thrills," featuring Ben Lyon and Mary Astor, directed by Webster Campbell.

Four in Cutting Room

First National Pictures at the present time has four forthcoming releases in the cutting room, with a fifth just out. Corinne Griffith's new picture, "The Marriage Whirl," from Hartley Manner's play, "The National Anthem," is the one upon which cutting has just been completed.

Those now in the cutting room are:

"Graustark," the new Norma Talmadge picture, directed by Dmitri Buchowetski, with Eugene O'Brien opposite the star.

"Winds of Chance," the big new Frank Lloyd special from Rex Beach's novel of Alaska, with Anna Q. Nilsson, Ben Lyon, Victor McLaglen, Viola Dana and many other famous screen players in the cast.

"The Lady Who Lied," the new Edwin Carewe production from Robert Hichens' novel, "Snake-Bite," with Lewis Stone, Virginia Valli and Nita Naldi.

"Shore Leave," Inspiration Pictures' new Richard Barthelmess production, shooting on which was completed two weeks ago.

Scenes in "Smooth as Satin," starring Evelyn Brent, based on the stage play, "The Chatterbox," by Bayard Veillier. An F. B. O. production.

Scenes in "Fine Clothes," a First National picture, with a cast that includes Lewis Stone, Percy Marmont, Raymond Griffith, Alma Rubens and Eileen Percy.

Famous Collaborators Sign to Write "Invisible Wounds"

FRESH from the West coast triumphs at Famous Players Lasky Studios, Sada Cowan and Howard Higgin have been engaged by Robert Kane for the adaptation of "Invisible Wounds." It will be the first collaboration by these noted writers, in the East, and Miss Cowan is already at work on the continuity at the Kane offices, 6 West 48th Street, New York City.

Mr. Higgin arrived from Hollywood late this week and immediately went into conference with Mr. Kane and Miss Cowan on the story. The production will probably go into work in mid-July and be completed in time for early Fall release.

Mr. Kane was originally won to Miss Cowan's work by her continuity for "East of Suez." This fine piece of writing was followed by her adaptation of "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," and "Lucretia Lombard." Miss Cowan is also known for her titles for "Brass" and other screen successes, and is considered in the top rank of women writers on the Coast today. Her first script done in collaboration with Mr. Higgin was "Smoldering Fires."

Howard Higgin started as a property boy in Famous Players' West Coast studio, and is proud of the fact. He decided to learn how to write and direct pictures, and wanted to commence at the bottom and learn every phase of production work. Higgin made such rapid progress that three years later he was a production manager and art director. Then he commenced to write scenarios in collaboration with Miss Cowan.

"Invisible Wounds" is Frederick Palmer's "best seller," and opens in the home of William Morrow, a great financier, who is suffering from melancholia. Dr. Freeland, psychiatrist, and a disciple of Freud, is called in. The doctor has made a specialty of curing invisible wounds, the secret sorrows that gnaw at people's hearts and drive them to madness or death, and he sees at once that something of this sort is Morrow's trouble. As he questions him, the doctor looks about Morrow's beautiful library. On the wall is a portrait of Morrow's dead wife, Alice. There are also three portraits of Morrow's son, Billy, whom he worships—as a child, a youth and soldier in the A. E. F.

Dr. Freeland knows something of Morrow's life, and now he tells him he is going to find the woman of the fifth portrait, and that will cure him. He pieces all the broken links in the chain together and finally unfolds the story.

Morrow is a man devoted to money-making and worshipping the god, Power. He is engaged to a beautiful woman, Alice. A few days before the wedding she comes to him and tells him she loves another man, Theodore Karker. She will stick to her promise and go through with the marriage to Morrow, but she cannot marry him with a lie on her soul.

Morrow is determined not to relinquish Alice. So they are married and have a child, Billy. Karker is an occasional visitor to the house. Morrow is never able to win his wife's love, although they live together amicably. Morrow suspects that Billy is not his child, but Karker's. This thought embitters his whole life.

The action of the story deals with Billy, of course. Metropolitan book reviewers have called his romance one of the most unusual that has ever been set down by an author. Mr. Kane believes that the book plot is unusual screen material all the way through, and First National production heads are in agreement with him.

Buster Keaton's Next Picture

A wire from the Coast announces that Buster Keaton's next picture for Metro-Goldwyn will be an original story called "Go West," which he has written in collaboration with Raymond Cannon and Lex Neal. This production, it is predicted, will surpass all previous Keaton pictures in dramatic and comic effectiveness. It is a hilarious story depicting the adventures of a young Easterner who takes with immense earnestness the famous advice of Horace Greeley—"Go West, young man."

Scenes in "Lost—A Wife," the recently completed William DeMille production for Paramount, in which Adolphe Menjou and Greta Nissen are featured. This is a June 8 release.

Jesse L. Lasky, in Hollywood, Supervising Famous Players Biggest Production Boom

IN order personally to supervise one of the biggest production booms in the history of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of that company in charge of production, arrived in Hollywood last week from New York.

"Within the next thirty days," Mr. Lasky announced on his arrival, "we will have ten featured productions starting here; among them some of the greatest pictures we have ever attempted. It is to be in intimate touch with the details of the production plans for these pictures that I have returned to Los Angeles."

Mr. Lasky pointed out that his company now has under contract and ready to start work probably the greatest number of players ever assembled at the West Coast Studio. Despite this tremendous production activity, Mr. Lasky found the huge producing units very largely scattered. The studio is at the peak of its summer production, but not in Hollywood, Paramount producing units are distributed from Oregon in the North to the Mexican border in the South, and from San Francisco in the West to Cheyenne, Wyoming, in the East.

There are seven companies either out of the studio on location, or just preparing to go. Two of the biggest productions of the year by Paramount are just getting under way. Both are scheduled to be taken practically entirely on location.

James Cruze's next historical picture of the west, the story of the pony express, will be taken at Sacramento, California, and Cheyenne, Wyoming. The company, numbering several hundred people, will leave in a few days. A large mechanical and technical staff is already on the ground both in Sacramento, and near Cheyenne. At the latter place more than 100 Indians have been engaged to join the company when it arrives. Cruze's story which features Betty Compson, Ricardo Cortez, Ernest Torrence and Wallace Beery, is scheduled to be one of the banner Paramount pictures of the year. This is the first western picture Cruze has made since "The Covered Wagon."

Another production of equal importance on Mr. Lasky's list is Zane Grey's "The Vanishing American," on which shooting will begin this week. Nearly all of the scenes of the picture are laid in the heart of the Navajo Indian reservation, 160 miles north of Flagstaff, Arizona. The story deals with the struggle of the red men to keep their foothold on the continent, sullenly retreating for more than three centuries along a battle line three thousand miles long, until at last they made their final stand in the mountain fastness of the west against the invasion of the whites. More than 10,000 Indians from the reservation will appear in the picture, which features Richard Dix, Lois Wilson, Noah Beery and Malcolm McGregor. Work of hauling supplies to the reservation for the company has been under way for seven weeks.

Clarence Badger and his company making "The Golden Princess," Betty Bronson's starring picture for Paramount, are on location in Owens Valley, where they will remain for several weeks. Neil Hamilton is playing opposite Miss Bronson. Others featured in the cast are Rockcliffe Fellowes, Phyllis Haver and Joseph Dowling. The story deals with the gold rush days in California.

Director Malcolm St. Clair chose a real vacation location for his company making "The Trouble With Wives" when he took it to Catalina Island for the week. A large number of bathing beauties are with the company. The picture features Florence Vidor, Tom Moore, Esther Ralston and Ford Sterling.

Irvin Willat has taken a portion of his company, which is making "The Ancient Highway," to Oregon, where a number of important logging scenes are being shot. Jack Holt and Florence Vidor are the featured players selected to date.

Paul Bern is en route west to direct the filming of Pola Negri's next starring picture, "Flower of Night," from the original story of Joseph Hergesheimer scenarized by Willis Goldbeck. Miss Negri has just returned to Hollywood from the east. The opening scenes of the picture will be made at the Famous Players-Lasky studio, and then the star and her company will proceed to a location not as yet definitely selected.

Raymond Griffith and his comedy company, under Edward Sutherland's direction, now making "On Dress Parade," are scheduled to go on location shortly. The site has not as yet been picked. Mary Brian, of "Wendy" fame in "Peter Pan," is playing opposite Griffith.

John Russell, well known magazine writer, is hard at work on the script of Joseph Conrad's masterpiece "Lord Jim," which is to be filmed at various sea locations this summer by Director Victor Fleming. The cast has not yet been selected.

Three other companies will start work within a month, according to Mr. Lasky's announcement, but these three will work largely in the studio. Willliam de Mille will return shortly from New York to produce "New Brooms." Adolphe Menjou will start Jully 6, on "The Grand Duchess and the Waiter" under Malcolm St. Clair's direction. On the same date, Raoul Walsh, who has just completed "The Wanderer," will begin work on his next production for Paramount.

Secure Stories of Arthur Roche

A ten strike in stories for the screen was made by Warner Bros. when they closed an important deal with Arthur Somers Roche, famous novelist and short story writer, whereby they secure all of the stories of Mr. Roche and part time services of the author, who has been flirting with the screen for sometime.

By the deal, the Warners come into possession of all the stories written by Mr. Roche in the past and a first call on all of his future work for a long period of time. In addition the contract calls for the author to spend at least two months of each year at the Warner studio where he will give personal supervision to the preparation of his stories for the screen.

Rowland V. Lee (standing in center), director for William Fox, goes over one of the tense moments in "As No Man Has Loved," the Fox superproduction, with Stanhope Wheatcroft, George Billings (Lincoln) and Pauline Starke.

Scenes from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "Confessions of a Queen" with Lewis Stone, John Bowers and Alice Terry

Norman Trevor Signed

Norman Trevor has been added to the cast of Thomas Meighan's latest picture, "The Man Who Found Himself," now in the course of production by Alfred E. Green at the Paramount Long Island studio.

Trevor, well known on the stage where he recently completed a long run in one of the principal parts of "The Goose Hangs High," brings another important theatrical name to the cast which numbers several footlight celebrities. Thomas Meighan, the star of this Booth Tarkington story, and Virginia Valli, his leading woman, are practically the only prominent screen players in the picture. All of the members of the supporting cast were borrowed from the stage. These are Ralph and Frank Morgan, Lynn Fontanne, Julia Hoyt, Hugh Cameron, Charles Stevenson and Victor Moore.

New Type of Play for Talmadge

"Durable Dick" Talmadge, the boy who broke his neck doing a stunt for one of his pictures and who astonished the medical fraternity of Hollywood by leaping right back into very active acting, broken neck and all, within a couple of weeks, will do "The Isle of Hope" as his next production for F. B. O. release. Casting is now being done at the F. B. O. Studios, and shooting will begin this week.

"The Isle of Hope" is a new type of vehicle for the agile star. It is a story of treasure hunting in the South Seas, and will provide Talmadge with thrilling action and plenty of chance for dramatic expression. The script, which has just been finished, is the work of James Bell Smith.

Neilson "Back in the Game"

Rutgers Neilson recently returned to the film business by joining the Pathe Publicity Department, after several years in the publishing field.

Length of "Commandments"

Owing to "The Ten Commandments" having been played as a road show attraction there is a general curiosity about the length of the production as it is now being announced by Paramount for general release. The footage given is 9980 feet.

Next Flynn Picture

"Jack O' Diamonds" will be Maurice Flynn's next comedy drama for Film Booking Offices, according to an announcement by Harry Garson, head of Globe Pictures Corporation, by which the Flynn attractions are being made at F. B. O. "Jack O' Diamonds" is a crook comedy with romance and mystery and a fast finish in which a motor boat race and aquatic carnival are colorful features. Production will start this week. The story is by Rob Wagner and continuity by Dorothy Orr.

Pathe Bookings

"Twinkle-Twinkle," the Grantland Rice "Sportlight," which reveals Gilda Gray, Jack Dempsey, Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Harold Lloyd and other stars of the stage and screen going through the physical training stunts that keep them in trim, has been booked for two weeks at Herbert L. Rothschild's Imperial Theatre in San Francisco in conjunction with the showing of the Paramount feature, "Grass," according to a wire received at the Home Office of Pathe Exchange, Inc., distributors of the sport reel.

Warner Baxter Signed

Warner Baxter, who has played leading roles in several recent Paramount pictures, has signed a long term contract as a member of the Paramount stock company. Mr. Baxter's contract is a result of his work in "Rugged Waters," "Welcome Home," "The Air Mail," "The Garden of Weeds," "The Golden Bed" and "The Female," Paramount pictures in which he has appeared during the last year.

First National Adds Two Dozen Pictures to List of 1925-26 Productions

SINCE the original announcement of its prospective releases for the season of 1925-1926, made in the Spring, First National Pictures and its allied producers have acquired the screen rights to twenty-four additional stories which are listed for release during the forthcoming season. The executives of the company believe that this material can be turned into box-office pictures that will rank with the biggest successes it has produced or released.

One of these releases is a new vehicle for Richard Barthelmess, "The Beautiful City," an original by Edmund Goulding, which Inspiration Pictures has put into work under the direction of Kenneth Webb. Dorothy Gish plays opposite the star and William H. Powell has a leading part.

The identity of the four productions to be made by Robert T. Kane for First National release has now been disclosed. The first is "Invisible Wounds," from Frederick Palmer's novel. Blanche Sweet will play the lead. Production starts in July. Mr. Kane will also produce "Bluebeard's Seven Wives," said to be quite different from anything yet seen on the screen; "Hell's Kitchen," from the story by Robert Stowers, an engrossing tale of New York's most fascinating section; and "Just a Husband," a story of theatrical life by Dana Burnett, one of our younger short story writers and novelists.

In the list are the first two of C. C. Burr's Johnny Hines productions for First National. "The Live Wire," from Richard Washburn Child's story, "The Game of Light," with Mildred Ryan and Barney Sherry in support of the star, will be the first of the Hines' pictures. It will be followed by "Rainbow Riley" from the play by Thompson Buchanan, in which Douglas Fairbanks last starred on the stage, "The Cub." Charles Hines will direct both pictures. The picture with Leon Errol, recently signed by First National for a period of years, will be "Clothes Make the Pirate," from Holman Day's great comedy story. It will be produced by Sam Rork.

Edwin Carewe has already begun production on "The Sea Woman," the play by Willard Robertson in which Margaret Anglin starred on the stage. Blanche Sweet, Dorothy Sebastian and Robert Frazer have the leading roles.

The new newspaper serial sensation, "Joanna," by H. L. Gates, will be made into an unusual picture by First National. It is a tale of a shopgirl who suddenly finds herself in possession of a million dollars.

First National has acquired the motion picture rights to "Mlle. Modiste," one of the most successful American musical comedies ever produced. Fritzi Scheff made her greatest light opera hit in it. Henry M. Blossom, of "Checkers" fame, wrote the story and Victor Herbert the music.

"The Dangerous Mrs. Denham," is the story of a beautiful woman who loses faith in life and sets out "to take all and give nothing." The story was written by V. E. Powell.

"The Savage" is reported to be a most unusual story by Ernest Pascal, soon to go into production at First National's New York studio, under the supervision of Earl Hudson. It tells of a young savage found on a South Sea island and brought to New York to be trained as a social find for the amusement of the social set in that city.

"The Just. Steward," by Richard Dehan, the English novelist, is a dramatic and thrilling story built around the great war.

"The Love Link," by Pearl Doles Bell, is the story of a young girl always in search of a new thrill who keeps the matrimonial barque of the father and mother, whom she adores, from going on the rocks.

"Puppets" will be made into a picture by First National. This is the play by Frances Lightner produced by Brock Pemberton under the title of "Puppets" and also "The Knife in the Wall." It is a powerful drama of New York's Italian quarter.

"Nazareth" is Clarence Budington Kelland's story of a society crook-miracle man which is to appear serially in the Ladies' Home Journal. It will be picturized under the supervision of June Mathis.

First National recently acquired the film rights to "Mismates," the play by Myron C. Fagan, a domestic melodrama that caused something of a sensation when produced on Broadway this season.

"Jail-Birds, Inc.," the new story by W. H. Clifford, bristles with romantic and comic screen material. Some wealthy speeders in jail organize a company to exploit the milking machine which has been invented by an inmate of the prison, and buck the New York milk trust.

P. J. LEAHON, Attorney

7 East 42nd Street New York

Telephone Vanderbilt 2092

"The Golden Mummy" by George W. Sutton, Jr., is a marvelous tale of the South African diamond fields. It is thrilling, fast-moving and has a beautiful love story.

The screen rights have been acquired by First National to Gertrude Atherton's new novel, "The Crystal Cup," serialized in the Pictorial Review. A society drama which pictures the hatred for men of a young girl, based upon the treatment accorded to her mother by men.

"Tarnished Gold" by Frederick Chapin is thought to possess unusually valuable screen material. It is the story of a great wealth amassed by heartless lending methods. The hatred of the community lights upon the daughter of the lender, who follows up his methods, until a love romance comes into her life.

"The Tidal Wave" is a wonderful drama of the sea adapted from Hutcheson Boyd's play. The two sons of a widow in a fishing village on the Maine coast fall in love with the same girl and powerful drama results. June Mathis will supervise this production.

"Isles of Romance" is from a new story by Richard Connell, one of the most brilliant and successful of young American short story writers. A hero-worshipping New York girl is cast upon a desert island with the banker who loves her. There her bubble of romance bursts. They marry, however, only to quarrel until the banker resorts to rough measures.

John M. Stahl's new production for First National release will be an original screen story called "Memory Lane." Further details are lacking at the moment.

Stories previously announced which have been chosen by Frank Lloyd for his forthcoming productions for First National are "Out of the Ruins," by Sir Philip Gibbs, a romance that takes place in France before and after the war. Before beginning work on that picture, however, Mr. Lloyd will film Vingie E. Roe's new novel of California during and after the great gold rush, "The Splendid Road." He has just completed Rex Beach's "Winds of Chance."

Three of the earlier announced stories have been assigned definitely to Colleen Moore, "We Moderns," from Israel Zangwill's most recent play; "Irene," the great musical comedy success, for which June Mathis, who prepared "Sally" for this star, is writing the continuity; and "Clarissa and the Post Road," from the story by Grace Sartwell Mason. June Mathis will have editorial supervision.

Stories assigned to Corinne Griffith are "Classified," from Edna Ferber's short story, which she is now making; "Forever After," from the Owen Davis play; and "Ashes," from the play by Reginald Goode in which Florence Reed starred on the stage.

Four specials are listed by First National for the season of 1925-1926: Frank Lloyd's "Winds of Chance," photography upon which was recently completed; "The Viennese Medley," a June Mathis production from Edith O'Shaughnessy's novel of Vienna, before, during and after the war; "Men of Steel," from R. G. Kirk's story of the steel mills, "United States Flavor," produced under the supervision of Earl Hudson, starring Milton Sills, with Doris Kenyon, playing opposite him, and "The Lost World," the sensationally successful First National-Watterson R. Rothacker picture, made under the supervision of Earl Hudson.

Schulberg Names Directors of Nine Preferred Pictures

DEFINITE assignment of directors to the first nine of the Eighteen Preferred Pictures to be released during the new season, was made this week by B. P. Schulberg who is personally supervising productions. The initial half of the program will be directed by Gasnier, Marcel De Sano and Fred Windemere.

Shooting of the first three has already started with Gasnier making F. Oakley Crawford's novel, "Parisian Love," featuring Clara Bow, Lou Tellegan, Donald Keith, Alyce Mills and James Gordon Russell.

De Sano is at present at work on a screen version of the Gertie D. Wentworth-James story, "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work." Lionel Barrymore, Marguerite De La Motte, Henry B. Walthall, Lilyan Tashman and Forrest Stanley are in the cast.

Director Fred C. Windemere, who heads the third production unit, is busy with a Saturday Evening Post serial by Fanny Heaslip Lea, entitled "With This Ring."

When Gasnier completes "Parisian Love," he will direct "The Other Woman's Story," by Peggy Gaddis, according to Mr. Schulberg's plans. A story by John Goodrich, "Eden's Fruit," will follow this as the third Gasnier production.

Following "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work," Marcel De Sano, B. P. Schulberg's new director "find," will be assigned to two of the most important stories to be released on the forthcoming program. The first of these is "Lew Tyler's Wives" by Wallace Irwin, which, after appearing as a serial in Pictorial Review, immediately became a best-seller as a Putnam novel. When "Lew Tyler's Wives" is finished, De Sano will start on an elaborate picturization of the American stage classic, "Shenandoah," the famous Civil War play by Bronson Howard.

The pictures to be undertaken by Fred C. Windemere include in addition to "With This Ring," two other well know stories. To follow "With This Ring" is Percy Marks' novel, "The Plastic Age," one of the biggest fiction seller of 1924, dealing with the moral development of an American boy in the background of a modern college. When shooting on "The Plastic Age" is completed, the director will give his attention to "Horses and Women," a story of the turf, that promises to be unusual from a production standpoint.

According to the present schedule camera work on all of these nine pictures will be finished by November first.

Pathe All-Comedy Records in San Francisco Theatres

PATHE all-comedy weeks, played simultaneously, broke records at two first-run theatres, the Egyptian and the Aztec, in San Francisco, the week beginning June 20th, according to a wire from Max Graf, Managing Director of the theatres, to Elmer R. Pearson, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

The wire follows:

"Attendance records for past six weeks shattered with Pathe all-comedy programs which opened yesterday in my Egyptian and Aztec Theatres. This is the second time within three months that we have put on all-Pathe-comedy shows successfully in our two theatres simultaneously. The third theatre in our chain of new first run houses is nearing completion and expect to open negotiations with your local office shortly for an all comedy program to be shown once a month day and date in all three theatres."—Max Graf.

Each theatre played the same Pathe bill, which included the following subjects: Harry Langdon in "The White Wing's Bride," a two-reel comedy produced by Principal Pictures Corporation; Ben Turpin in "The Marriage Circus," two-reel Mack Sennett comedy; "Super-Hooper-Dyne-Lizzies," a two-reel Mack Sennett comedy; and "Sheiks of Bagdad," a Hal Roach one-reeler.

Both theatres billed the event in circulars and other advertisements as follows: "National Premiere Pathe All-Comedy Week! A Comedy Circus! Ten Howling and Hilarious Reels of Fast and Furious Fun."

A feature of the "circus circular" was a special coupon children's ticket printed in the lower right hand corner. The coupon and five cents admitted any child to the Aztec or the Egyptian Theatres any day from 10 A. M., to 3 P. M. One hundred thousand of these circulars were distributed.

In keeping with the comedy spirit of the occasion, the lobbies of both theatres were decorated to carry out carnival atmosphere, with jesters as ballyhoo.

"The Viennese Medley"

First National executives have received from Al Rockett, acting Western representative, the cast which will appear in the leading roles of the picturization of Edith O'Shaughnessy's novel of Vienna, before, during and after the war, "The Viennese Medley," which is now ready to go into production. Kurt Rehfeld will direct. The production will be under the supervision of June Mathis, who prepared the continuity.

The cast includes Conway Tearle, Anna Q. Nilsson, May Allison, Ian Keith, Phyllis Haver, Nigel DeBrullier, John Sainpolis, Jean Hersholt and Edward Earle.

New Gibson Film

"Chip of the Flying U," one of the most famous of modern Western novels, is soon to be seen in screen form. It is to be produced by Universal with Hoot Gibson as the star, and Herbert Blache directing, and will be made at Calgary, Canada, where "The Calgary Stampede" will also be made by Blache as a Gibson feature.

"Chip of the Flying U," first appeared in the Popular Magazine some years ago and took the country by storm, and later appeared in book form. It has been one of "the best sellers" for some years. The author is B. M. Bower.

Complete Cast for "Satan In Sables"

Word from Hollywood this week told of the completion of the cast for "Satan in Sables," Lowell Sherman's first starring vehicle for Warner Brothers, by the addition of Helen Dunbar and Francis M Donald. Miss Dunbar, who has had roles in "Rose of the World" and other Warner productions, will play the part of Sophie, former grand duchess, while Mr. McDonald will appear as Emile. He is cast also in "Bobbed Hair."

Others in the cast of "Satan in Sables" already had been announced. Lowell Sherman will impersonate Michael Lyev Yervedoff, and in his support, besides Miss Dunbar and Mr. McDonald, will be June Marlowe, John Harron, Gertrude Astor, Frank Butler and Otto Hoffman.

"Satan in Sables" is from the popular novel by Bradley King. James Flood is to direct.

Charles Ray's New Cast

Strong Support in Chadwick Picture, a Rural Comedy Drama

The latest bulletin from the Chadwick offices announces the complete cast for the next Charles Ray production.

Gertrude Olmstead, one of the screen's most popular leading ladies, will play opposite the star.

Gertrude Short, the comedienne fast winning her way to stellar honors, and the hit of "The Beggar On Horseback" now playing at the Criterion Theatre on Broadway, will interpret the role of a dancer.

Jack Clifford, well known in vaudeville, will also have an important part as brother to the star.

Others in the cast are Ida Lewis, as the mother; J. P. Lockley, in the role of the father; Frank Austin, and Syble Johnson.

The picture will be directed by Jerome Storm under the supervision of Joseph de Grasse.

Lloyd to Do "Splendid Road"

Frank Lloyd has selected Vingie E. Roe's new novel, "The Splendid Road," as his next production for First National Pictures, following "Winds of Chance," from Rex Beach's novel, upon which photography was recently completed.

"The Splendid Road" is a story of California after the first excitement following the discovery of gold had subsided. Work is under way on the continuity, and it is Mr. Lloyd's present intention to put it into production about the middle of July. Anna Q. Nilsson will play the lead.

Returns to California

Mae Busch, popular star of the screen, has completed her starring roles in two Associated Exhibitors' pictures, "The Miracle of Life" and "Camille of the Barbary Coast," and has returned to California to resume work under Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, through whose courtesy she was loaned to the Eastern organization.

"Iron Horse" Closes Hollywood Run

"The Iron Horse," Fox Film Corporation's epic production depicting the construction of the first transcontinental railroad, closed its record-breaking run at Grauman's Egyptian Theatre, Hollywood, in a blaze of glory seldom, if ever, duplicated in the history of the industry.

With prices ranging from fifty cents to $1.65 this theatre, seating 1,800, was sold out at every performance. So great was the demand for tickets that Manager Sid Grauman put on special shows on Monday and Saturday of the final week. The receipts for the closing week totaled $28,370.

During the sixteen weeks the John Ford production ran at the Hollywood Theatre, more than 350,000 persons paid to see it. The last performance on the night of Sunday, June 21, was a gala occasion in celebration of the continued favorable reception this remarkable picture received.

Hoffman With De Mille

One of the Best Known Production Managers on Staff at DeMille Studios

Announcement is made by Cecil B. De Mille and General Manager Fred Kley of the De Mille Studios of the appointment of Milton E. Hoffman as production manager. Mr. Hoffman, one of the best known production executives in the business, will share with Mr. De Mille and Mr. Kley the burdens of the expanded De Mille enterprises. Mr. Hoffman comes to Mr. De Mille with an impressive record of achievement as a motion picture executive.

From a start, years ago, as film salesman for General Film, Mr. Hoffman has been general manager of the World film, manager of the Lasky Studio for four years, manager of the Paramount English studio one year and two years production manager of the Metro studio. The association of Mr. Hoffman and Mr. De Mille is considered by both a renewal of their former long connection at the Lasky studio. Mr. Hoffman recently returned from a long trip to the Orient.

Booking Big Circuits

Contracts were closed on Monday, June 22nd, between the Fox Circuit of Theatres in New York City and First National Pictures, calling for a showing of the latter's Winner Group of releases for the coming season in the Fox theatres in Greater New York. This deal with Fox supplements the contract closed last week with the U. B. O. Circuit and the two deals take care of the Winner Group of pictures in its entirety for the metropolitan territory. The Fox deal was closed by C. Levine for Fox, and by M. Gross and A. W. Smith, Jr., for First National.

Marion Harlan Selected

Marion Harlan is the "O. Henry Girl!" To the captivating daughter of Otis Harlan has fallen the honor of protraying the leading role in each of the series of eight two-reel pictures to be made by Fox Film Corporation this season from the gems of fiction by America's greatest story teller, O. Henry.

"Sunken Silver" Terminates on Pathe Program July 12

THE Pathe short-subject program for the week of July 12th is headed by the last chapter of the Pathe serial "Sunken Silver"; a Hal Roach comedy with Arthur Stone and a Harry Langdon two-reel comedy; a Grantland Rice "Sportlight"; "Aesop Film Fable," "Topics of the Day," Pathe Review and two issues of Pathe News.

"The End of the Trail" is the title of the concluding chapter of "Sunken Silver" the Pathserial adaptation of Albert Payson Terhune's famous story, "Black Caesar's Clan." Allene Ray and Walter Miller in the leading roles have won added laurels by their work in this serial under the direction of Spencer Bennett.

"Sherlock Sleuth," the Hal Roach Star Comedy, is a two-reeler with Arthur Stone heading the cast as the house detective in a hotel. When the detective himself is robbed the fun becomes fast and furious. Players supporting the Hal Roach comedian include Noah Young, Martha Sleeper, Marjorie Whiteis, William Gillespie, Helen Gilmore, and Jack Gavin. Ralph Cedar directed under the supervision of F. Richard Jones.

"The White Wing's Bride" is Harry Langdon's second comedy of a series of two made by Principal Pictures Corporation. Alf Goulding, who directed "Horace Greeley, Jr.", the first of the series, also guided the star in his current vehicle. The role of a "white wing" gives Laugdon full scope for his well recognized talents as one of the screen's premiere comedians.

"Learning How" is one of the most interesting of the Grantland Rice "Sportlights" produced by J. L. Hawkinson. This subject shows that the beginning of all sports is "learning how." Some of the sports covered are lariat throwing, golf, rowing, archery, baseball, football and tennis. The scenes were taken in various parts of the United States where the different sports prevail.

Pathe Review No. 28 presents another installment of the "Here Comes the Bride" series—"The American Bride." Both the Indian maid and her pale face sister—the girl of today—are shown going through the rites of matrimony. "Wonders in Wax" gives a remarkable insight into the making of life-like dummies in Paris, and the Pathecolor section reveals "The Gorges of Ardeche," a picturesque valley of rocks in Southern France.

Two New Comedies for Pathe Completed by Mack Sennett

HARRY LANGDON has completed another two-reeler following his first five-reel feature, "His First Flame," for Mack Sennett. "Lucky Stars" is the title of the new short comedy, which Pathe will release, and Harry appears in it as a quack doctor in a medicine show.

The comedian has particularly enjoyed his work in "Lucky Stars" as many of the humorous incidents of the piece are based upon actual experiences of Langdon when he was traveling with a medcine show as a boy. Harry Edwards directed "Lucky Stars," and Vernon Dent and Natalie Kingston are seen again in support of Langdon.

Alice Day is the featured player in "A Sweet Pickle," a new fun-film just completed. Dainty Alice is a doughnut designer in a pastry shop. Art Rosson directed the picture, and the cast includes Ernest Wood, Alma Bennett, Jack Richardson, and Barney Hellum.

One of the latest Sennett discoveries is Marvin ("Fat") Lobach, who weighs approximately 345 pounds, which proves that the famous comedy producer of Pathecomedies does not confine his discoveries to beautifully girls for the bathing brigade. Sennett says that "Fat" Lobach is one of the funniest and most pleasing stout comedians to come to the screen in many a day. Lobach has appeared in important parts in several Sennett-Ralph Graves Pathe comedies, including "Breaking the Ice," "The Plumber" and "He Who Gets Smacked." One of his most recent appearances is in "Isn't Love Cuckoo?", directed by Lloyd Bacon.

Randolph Bartlett Titling Two New Gotham Pictures

RANDOLPH BARTLETT, well known screen editor and title expert, has been assigned the task of writing the captions and editing two of the new Gotham Productions.

Mr. Bartlett has just completed a revision of titles for "A Little Girl in a Big City" and is now preparing the titles for "The Police Patrol."

Sam Sax, producer of Gotham Productions states in securing Mr. Bartlett for this important work he is merely keeping this end of his new productions on an even plane with the high grade talent used in other branches of production.

Randolph Bartlett has had the distinction of editing and titling some of the best screen production released in recent years and of his recent work, Harriett Underhill, Motion Picture critic of the Herald, said: "It is a rare pleasure to witness a picture in which such perfect English has been used in the titling."

Mr. Bartlett was formerly editor of Photoplay Magazine, scenario editor for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and is at present in wide demand as a free lance title expert and film doctor.

Tom Mix Back to Work Following World Tour

TOM MIX, "The Modern Buffalo Bill," with the irrepressible Tony, the Wonder Horse, after a short rest following their sensational tour over half of the world, are back again hard at work in the West Coast Studios of Fox Film Corporation.

Word has just been received that "The Lucky Horseshoe," the first Tom Mix production for the coming season, has been started under the direction of J. G. Blystone.

The picture is from an original story by Robert Lord, and the scenario by John Stone. Like all Mix pictures to be made for 1925-26, it contains a cast crowded with screen favorites of far-flung fame.

Playing opposite Tom Mix is Billie Dove, the beautiful, who has just completed her work in the Fox supreme attraction, "The Fighting Heart," a George O'Brien starring vehicle. The "heavy" or villain role is filled by Malcolm Waite, who has a pocketful of nefarious tricks to spill until thwarted by the redoubtable Tom. J. Farrell MacDonald is cast in a comedy role that should add immeasurably to his present army of followers.

A novelty of the first water is the introduction to Fox audiences of Ann Pennington, the unrivaled queen of Follies dancers, who has been specially cast in a terpsichorean role. Ann's twinkling feet will scamper through scenes of woodland beauty in that part of the picture which deals with a school of classical dancers.

Others in the cast, which has not been fully completed, are Clarissa Selwynne and J. Gunnis Davis.

"The Lucky Horseshoe" furnished Tom Mix a vehicle of an entirely different nature from anything he has ever been given previously. It concerns the career of a bashful cowboy who is hired by a beautiful girl ranch owner to take care of her business affairs. In order to increase her income so that the ranch can be kept up she starts a school for classical dancers on her property, and soon the ranch is filled with a host of visions of loveliness. All of this is a great shock to the bashful Tom, who is almost overcome by the "sheep's eyes" and blandishments cast at him by the fair pupils.

Finally an accidental kick from a mule hoof on the back of his neck sends him into oblivion. Tom has been reading of Don Juan, the gay Spanish cavalier, and in his unconscious state he imagines himself transported back through the centuries. As Don Juan he goes through a number of thrilling adventures, such as rescuing fair maids from brutal overlords and fighting duels to the death over some fair lady he has chanced to meet.

When he returns to consciousness his character has entirely changed. No longer is he the bashful Tom, but a Twentieth Century Don Juan. So he boldly sails in to capture the girl of his heart, and forever blesses the day that the lucky horseshoe on the hoof of the mule stifled his timidity forever.

Al Christie and Hunt Stromberg are producing feature pictures for the Producers Distributing Corporation. Stromberg is producing the Harry Carey pictures and Christie is making irresistible comedies.

Weiss Brothers Will Soon Open Their Own Exchanges

AFTER a series of conferences extending over the course of several months between Mr. M. H. Hoffman, Vice President and General Manager of Renown Pictures Inc., Louis Weiss, Managing Director of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, announced that his concern has decided on a radical change of policy and a great extension of its activities.

This extension will consist of the direct sale of the Artclass Product in certain territories by the opening of its own exchanges. These exchanges will be located in the offices of the Renown Pictures Inc. at 1540 Broadway, New York City, for the territory of Metropolitan New York and Northern New Jersey; 505 Pearl Street, Buffalo, N. Y., for the State of New York; 806 So. Wabash Ave. for Chicago and Northern Illinois.

Another office will be opened some time during the month of Jully in Indianapolis for the Indiana territory. The exact date of the opening and the address of the office have not yet been determined definitely. Announcement of that office will be made in the near future.

The offices mentioned above will have thirty-two pictures on its program which surely justify special handling being, as they are, all Westerns. They will include the three series of five reel specials for 1925-26 featuring Buddy Roosevelt, Buffalo Bill, Jr. and Wally Wales respectively which will be released under the Artclass Banner. The program will also include the new series of eight five reel westerns featuring Leo Maloney with his horse "Pico" and his dog "Bullets," which will be released under the Clarion Photoplays trade mark.

Louis Weiss believes that his pictures will be greatly boomed by this new policy and also states that the move will give him an opportunity to enter the field in the future with a full and widely varied program of pictures all sold and handled from one exchange in a territory instead of having various types of product split up among several exchanges each covering the same territory and thus effect many economies as well as increasing the returns on the whole program.

First National Pictures That Have Had Record Bookings and Sensational Runs

AN enviable record for pictures that have enjoyed long individual runs and whose gross number of bookings are unsurpassed in the history of the industry has been won by First National Pictures, Inc., during the past two or three years. These records, both in runs and in number of bookings, are the result of the painstaking care of Richard A. Rowland and his production staff in making pictures of a definite box-office attractiveness and of the equitable distribution policies of E. A. Eschmann, successfully carried out by the field force.

First National has a standing second to none in the industry for providing pictures which will make money for the exhibitors showing them, and for fair dealing in its selling arrangements. Its reputation has been built up on the strength of its past performance and the confidence and good will of the exhibitors it has served. Such confidence and good will can only be obtained through product of the first quality of merit at the box office, sold on equitable terms both to itself and to the exhibitors.

This is a story of past performance, of individual productions which have enjoyed long runs at various theatres and of pictures which have played a large number of the motion picture theatres in the United States and Canada. A significant fact in the story is that these pictures are still alive and are being booked in all parts of the country so that their record of bookings is not yet complete.

In the list of First National's established successes is Frank Lloyd's production of "The Sea Hawk" which, in the year that has elapsed since its release has played in excess of 6,000 theatres. So big and instantaneous was the hit of "The Sea Hawk" that it is safe to predict that before its life is ended it will have played more theatres than any other picture that has been released. Its receipts have been so big wherever shown that it has been taken out of service by Mr. Eschmann for the summer months to be released to the industry again in September when the picture business picks up from the summer slump. Bookings on this picture have continued big since the day of its release.

Frank Lloyd devoted six months to the filming of this production, made wholly in this country. It has enjoyed many long prerelease runs at increased admissions. Notable among these runs was one of twelve weeks at the Astor Theatre, New York; eleven weeks at the Criterion in Los Angeles; ten weeks at the Aldine in Philadelphia; six weeks at Symphony Hall, Boston; five weeks at the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago; and four weeks at the Imperial in San Francisco.

Al and Ray Rockett's production of "The Dramatic Life of Abraham Lincoln," is another First National picture, released at about the same time as "The Sea Hawk," whose bookings in the year come within fifty of the record set by "The Sea Hawk" and the volume of whose bookings continues at a rate which will inevitably land it among the four or five most widely distributed pictures in the industry.

"Abraham Lincoln" was more than a year in the making and has had long runs in many big cities and extended engagements in a great number of smaller cities. It ran for ten weeks at the Tremont Temple Theatre, Boston; four weeks at the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago; three weeks at the Criterion in Los Angeles; three weeks at the Imperial, San Francisco and had two weeks in many towns which show even the most successful pictures for only a week.

Norma Talmadge's "Secrets," released by First National as a special at about the same time as "The Sea Hawk" and "Abraham Lincoln," has nearly equalled them in the number of its bookings and continues to be a strong favorite. It also has had many extended engagements.

Other First National releases which have had bookings ranging from 6,000 to 8,000 are "Black Oxen," "Flaming Youth," "Why Men Leave Home," "Twenty-One," "Ponjola," "Painted People," "Her Temporary Husband," "When a Man's a Man," "Boy of Mine," "The Love Master," "Flowing Gold" and "Lilies of the Field." These were not released as specials with long-run pre-release showings, but they leaped into instant popularity, are all strong contenders for booking honors and are still in constant demand.

A comparatively recent First National release which has already had more than 5,000 showings is Richard Barthelmess' "Classmates," a picture that is destined to establish booking honors, as is Colleen Moore's picture, "Sally," released on March 29th, this year, which already has 3,000 bookings to its credit.

Other recent releases by First National which are setting a fast booking pace are "Frivolous Sal," "A Thief in Paradise," "The Lady," "As Man Desires" with Milton Sills, Corinne Griffith's "Declasse," "Chickie," "New Toys," "Soul-Fire," "The Talker" and Colleen Moore's "The Desert Flower."

Two First National specials of this year which have already proved their box-office mettle are "The Lost World," produced in association with Watterson R. Rothacker and under the supervision of Earl Hudson, and a new film version of "Quo Vadis." Both pictures have had a number of long-run engagements at increased admissions and established box-office records. "The Lost World" will be released in September while "Quo Vadis" is now being shown in many important key city points.

"The Lost World" ran for ten weeks at the Astor Theatre, New York; for nine weeks at the Tremont Temple, Boston; for nine weeks at the Aldine, Philadelphia; four weeks at the Roosevelt, Chicago; four weeks at the Wilke's, San Francisco; and has been booked for an extended run at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre, Los Angeles.

"Quo Vadis" has had many extended runs at increased admissions, notably six weeks at the Apollo, New York; five weeks at the Aldine in Philadelphia; four weeks at the Tremont Temple, Boston; three weeks at the Roosevelt, Chicago; and two weeks in many of the large cities. It is now in the second week of an extended engagement at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre, Los Angeles. With their popularity with the public proved in these runs at increased admissions it is inevitable that each will roll up big booking records.

Greta Nissen's Screen Debut Is Acclaimed by Reviewers

JESSE L. LASKY'S judgment in signing Greta Nissen to a long term contract to appear in Paramount pictures was more than justified by the criticism of the Boston and New York reviewers who witnessed the screen debut of the Norwegian actress in William de Mille's production, "Lost—A Wife." Greta Nissen, it will be remembered, was something of a sensation in the stage production of "Beggar on Horseback," in which she performed a pantomime ballet. It was in the latter production that her screen possibilities were recognized by the vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Although Adolphe Menjou is featured in "Lost—A Wife," and comes in for very enthusiastic reviews from the critics of both cities, the producers, confident that Menjou would score, were particularly interested in seeing how Miss Nissen registered. The Boston Post shows a good understanding of the situation in the part of the review which reads, "'Lost—A Wife' introduces a new leading woman to the screen, Greta Nissen, who is very fetching and charming. And she had a rather difficult part for her first pictorial appearance, that ot playing up to the very experienced and able actor, Adolphe Menjou."

The Boston Traveler had a fine review reading, "Adolphe Menjou and Greta Nissen have the leading roles. Miss Nissen is blonde, beautiful, moving with a dancer's grace, wearing the newest styles in clother and bobs with a Parisian chic, and acting with the assurance of an experienced screen player. Moreover, she has charm and distinction beyond the average among movie stars."

In New York several of the reviewers made a point of emphasizing the fact that Greta Nissen had made an excellent debut.

Harriet Underhill wrote in the Herald-Tribune that the work of Greta Nissen was a revelation. Miss Underhill remarked, "Miss Nissen is by all odds the screen's most captivating recent acquisition."

Mordaunt Hall wrote in The Times: "Miss Nissen is a Scandinavian with a Parisian cachet. She is fair, and the dressing of her blonde hair impresses one as having an influence torn between alarm and mischief. Miss Nissen is sure, natural and graceful in her expressions and movements. She times every lengthy scene to perfection and is never awkward or out of character. No matter how frivolous the scene may be she gives a sincere and earnest portrayal, always obtaining excellent results with an originality rarely beheld on the screen."

Production on Mason Novel, "The Winding Stair," Started

"THE WINDING STAIR," from the novel by A. E. W. Mason, one of the world's foremost novelists, has been put into work for the screen by Fox Film Corporation. A special cast of screen luminaries is announced with Edmund Lowe and Alma Rubens in the leading roles.

The production, listed under the general classification of "Supreme Attractions," to be released during the forthcoming season, will be directed by John Griffith Wray, remembered for his directorial work in "Anna Christie," one of the outstanding successes of the screen.

This will be Mr. Wray's first production for Fox since resigning as General Manager of the Thomas Ince Studios after the death of that producer.

Others in the cast, which has not as yet been fully completed, are Mahlon Hamilton, Warner Oland, and Emily Fitzroy.

As "Paul Ravenel," the hero, Edmund Lowe has one of the most romantic roles of his career. Alma Rubens, as "Marguerite Lambert," the girl for whom Ravenel risks his life and honor, has a part admirably fitted for her type and histrionic ability. Warner Oland, is, of course, the villain. This noted actor's ability in "heavy" roles is well known to all film fans as he has been one of the most successful in these characterizations on the screen.

"The Winding Stair" is described as being not only a tremendous story in scope and thrills, but one of the most colorful ever written by this celebrated author. For the main part its scenes are laid in Morocco, where the French and Moors are at odds. Ravenel, to save the life of a dancing girl with whom he has fallen in love, deserts his command in the French army, thereby losing everything including honor. The story, however, has an extremely happy ending in which the girl is mainly responsible for the restoration of her lover's good name.

The story calls for tremendous and picturesque effects in which hundreds of persons are involved. Immense sets have been built to show Moorish cities, such as Fez where most of the conflict takes place. The whole picture is being produced on a gigantic scale.

Buys Rights to "Mlle. Modiste"

Contracts have been closed by First National Pictures for the screen rights to the famous musical comedy, "Mademoiselle Modiste" and that long-continued stage success will soon be translated into a motion picture.

"Mademoiselle Modiste," with Henry M. Blossom's book, was first produced two decades ago by Charles Dillingham. Fritzi Scheff, who had but recently left grand opera, was engaged for the stellar role. No announcement is forthcoming from First National as to who will play Miss Scheff's role on the screen, nor when it will go into production.

Tom Mix, the Fox star, visits F. W. Murnau, the German director who produced "The Last Laugh," for Ufa, starring Emil Jannings. Mr. Fox has contracted with Mr. Murnau to come to America and direct at least one big special for Fox Film Corporation. This picture was taken in Berlin recently.

"The Perfect Clown"

Chadwick's New Larry Semon Comedy. "Luxembourg" Picture Held Back

Owing to the illness of Arthur Gregor, who had been selected by I. E. Chadwick to direct Larry Semon in "The Count of Luxembourg," Mr. Chadwick has decided to postpone production of this Franz Lehar musical comedy.

Semon, however, will start work within another week on "The Perfect Clown," another spectacular comedy which will be produced on an even more elaborate scale than "The Wizard of Oz."

Fred Newmeyer, whose several Harold Lloyd productions, have established him among the leading comedy directors of the industry, will personally direct "The Perfect Clown."

Mr. Chadwick, Newmeyer and Semon are now engaged in selecting the cast which will be announced next week. It is expected that several of the players who appeared with Semon in "The Wizard of Oz" will be engaged for this production.

New American Legion Film

"You Can't Stand There" is the title of a new film which is being presented by the American Legion Film Service, whose national headquarters are in Indianapolis, Ind. It is an official picture built of scenes taken during the war by U. S. Signal Corps photographers and titled in the language of the American doughboy to whom the film is dedicated. It has a comprehensive continuity and tells the story of what happened to the average young American after Woodrow Wilson wrote his last note to the Kaiser. The film will be distributed through local Posts of the Legion.

George Walsh Coming East

Having completed "Blue Blood" his second starring picture for Chadwick Pictures Corporation, George Walsh is expected to return to New York shortly to start work on a third production for that company.

Key City Points Booking First National "Winners"

DURING the past week many contracts for the entire Winner Group of First National Pictures for the coming season were closed in key city points. Some of the outstanding theatres signing up for the group of fifty-two pictures are the Pantheon in Toledo, Ohio; the site in Kokoma, Ind.; the Strand or the Palace in Stamford, Conn.; the Rialto, Empire or Bijou in Fall River, Mass.

In each instance the Winner Group of pictures in its entirety was booked. Exhibitors are buying First National Product early this year, which is a further proof that First National product previously released has made good at the box-office. The Winner Group is being sold on the performance of past product and present releases.

The Winner Group has recently been sold to the following theatres: The Rialto, Ft. Worth, Tex.; the Capitol, Dallas, Tex.; the Schine Circuit in up-State New York; the Sigman in Lima, Ohio; the Rialto in Hamilton, Ohio; the Mystic in Malden, Mass.; the Rilato, in Everett, Mass. The first booking for the entire group of Winners was made by Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, a short time after First National's announcement first appeared in the trade journals.

"Battling Bunyan" Star

Wesley Barry To Retire from Screen to Attend Annapolis

Wesley Barry's announced intention of entering the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis will cut short his screen appearances at the height of his successful career. Barry appears to the best advantage of his career in "Battling Bunyan," an Associated Exhibitors' release, which is replete with comedy as well as drama.

As a kid with a fighting heart, Barry plays a plucky youngster who is employed in a garage and works hard in the hopes of some day becoming a partner in the enterprise. Circumstances bring about a chance for him to earn money via the prize fight ring and give opportunity for many comedy scenes.

In "Battling Bunyan," Barry is supported by Molly Malone, Chester Conklin, Harry Mann, Frank Campeau, Landers Stevens, Johnny Relasco, Al Kaufman, Frankie Fields, and Pat Kemp. Paul Hurst directed from Jefferson Moffit's adaptation of a Saturday Evening Post story by Raymond Leslie Goldman.

BASEBALL

Steps are being taken by baseball enthusiasts in New York film offices to revive the motion picture baseball league, which was in existence several seasons up to a few years ago. Philip Abrahams, manager of the newly-formed Warner Bros. team, expects to call a conference of managers in a few days to discuss the situation and draw up a schedule.

The Warners played their first game at Central Park last week, defeating the Fox team by a score of 15 to 12. The Fox players outhit the Warners by the narrow margin of 17 to 16, but home runs by Punzo, Catterson and Brennan, a triple by Capt. Hummel, and doubles by Hummel and Punzo, all of the Warners, told in the final score. The batting order of the teams follows:

Warners—Brennan, 2b; McEldery, cf-rf; Tate 3b-c; Mirisch 1b; Levitt 1b; Hummel ss; Punzo, lf; Catterson, c-3b; Berg rf-cf; Kingsburg p.

Fox—Ryan cf; D. Ornstein ss; Starr p; J. Ornstein 1b; Holley 2b; Najarian c; Trimarco 3b; Friedman rf; Deyer lf.

Score by innings:

FOX .....0 0 2 3 1 2 2 0 2—12
WARNER .....3 0 0 1 0 6 4 1 x—15

And here we have Colleen Moore in one of the sequences in "The Desert Flower," a First National production.

"Prince of Pilsen" Rights Purchased by Belasco Prod.

"THE Prince of Pilsen" is coming to the screen via Producers Distributing Corporation.

A. H. Sebastian, general manager of Belasco Productions, Inc. has purchased the motion picture rights to this classic of the stage, and the production will be filmed by his organization at the Hollywood Studios in Hollywood. A number of weeks must elapse before the actual start of filming, since the screen version of the play must be written, and a vast amount of preliminary detail completed by the technical staff, as it is planned to make this a big special in every sense of the word.

"The Prince of Pilsen" occupies a firm place in the hearts of American theatregoers. It was one of the most successful musical comedies ever produced in the United States and its songs have long withstood the onslaughts of the newer avalanche of jazz creations. Its "Song of the Stein" better known as "Heidelberg" and "The Message of the Violets" are two of the most popular songs ever written. Frank Pixley, author of the book and lyrics, and Gustav Luders, who composed the music, were literally "made" overnight when this play was given its New York premiere.

It is announced that the film production will cost not less than $350,000, and that it will boast a cast of characters which will be truly all-star. No players have yet been selected, but Mr. Sebastian avers that the casting of the picture will bring together a company of artists that will establish a new criterion in all star casts.

Trixie Friganza appeared in the play when it was originally produced on the stage, and it is probable that she will take part in the film production. Arthur Donaldson was also in the original company, and the play later served to establish Jess Dandy as a favorite comedian.

The purchase of "The Prince of Pilsen" is in line with the policy of Belasco Productions to produce adaptations of stage plays exclusively. Their current release through Producers Distributing Corporation is "Friendly Enemies" starring Weber and Fields.

"Desert Demon" Completed

A wire from the West Coast to Louis Weiss, of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, announces that Lester F. Scott, Jr., has completed the filming of the second of the Buffalo Bill, Jr., series of five-reel thunderbolt thrillers, which will be released under the title of "The Desert Demon." The cast includes Betty Morrisey, Frank Ellis, Harry Todd, Jack O'Brien, Frank Austin, Raye Hampton, Margaret Martin and Charles Colby. The direction was in the hands of Richard Thorpe, the story was written by Alex McLaren, the continuity by Betty Burbridge and the picture produced by Action Pictures, Inc., of which Lester F. Scott, Jr., is President.

Here we may see a beautiful evening gown designed and worn by Gloria Swanson, the Paramount star. It is of crepe georgette in an apricot shade, and has Persian embroidery in silver cords. The lining of the gown is of silver cloth, the hosiery is silver metal, and the slippers silver brocade. With the gown is a cape of the same material, with two panels which wind around the arms and form sleeves.

Star Types Selected for First De Mille Special

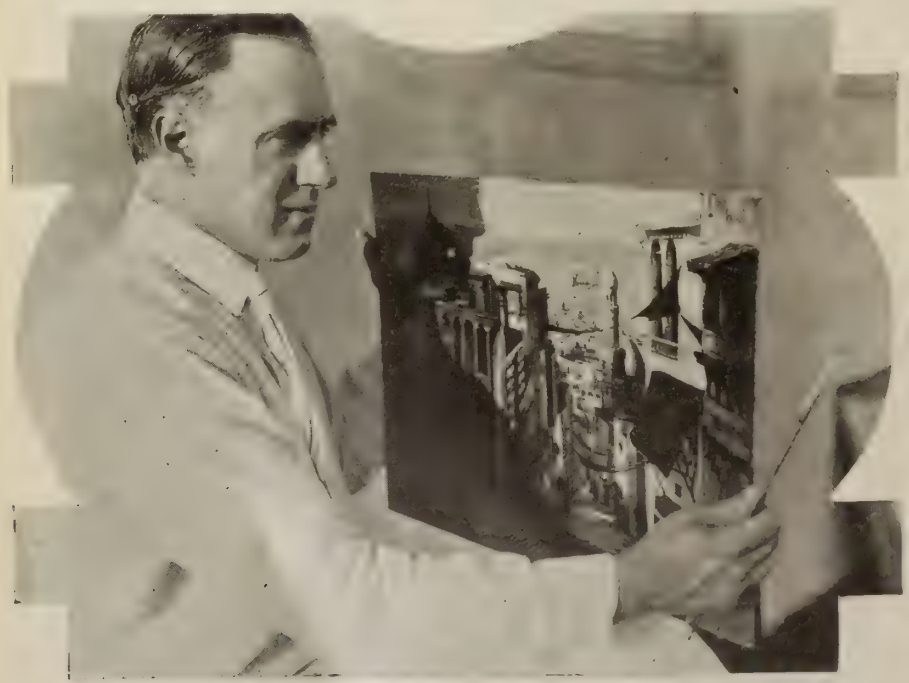
THE latest additions to the cast of players that Cecil B. De Mille is assembling for "The Road to Yesterday," his first personally directed offering through Producers Distributing Corporation, are Theodore Kosloff the world-famous Russian dancer and now an established motion picture favorite, and Louis Natheaux "the suavest heavy in Hollywood."

In selecting his cast, De Mille is following one of the first principles of motion picture casting. He is picking his players with an eye to "types" but confining the selections to big stars and players of established reputations. Kosloff has been selected to play the character of "Gypsy John," a picturesque, nomadic role.

Joseph Schildkraut, Jetta Goudal and Vera Reynolds, the other members of the cast thus far selected, are ideal "types" for the parts they are to play as well as being artists of the highest professional rank.

De Mille declares that the theme of "The Road to Yesterday" is as big and powerful as that of "The Ten Commandments." In parable it shows that a consciously wrong act inevitably reacts upon the one who commits it or upon someone of his blood. The story deals with modern people under modern circumstances then carries them back three hundred years and later brings them forward again to modern times.

The production will be an adaptation from the stage play by Beulah Marie Dix and E. G. Sutherlnd. Jeanie Macpherson and Miss Dix have been working constantly on the script for the last six months, and the minutest details of the production have now been worked out to a point where filming may start as soon as Mr. De Mille completes his cast.



F. P. Earle, the artist, with one of his backgrounds, painted by him for use in "A Lover's Oath," which he directed, with Ramon Novarro featured, and which Astor Pictures will distribute.

Wyndham Standing Signed

Wyndham Standing is the latest addition to the Samuel Goldwyn-George Fitzmaurice production, "The Dark Angel." He will play the part of Gerald Shannon, second lead.

JACKIE IN A NEW ROLE
Joe Kirkwood, greatest trick golfer in the world, regards Jackie as a golfing phenomenon. He has won three junior championships on Hollywood links. Maybe Jackie will play golf in a Metro-Goldwyn picture. His next is "Dirty Hands"

Feist on Coast; to Confer on Big Production Schedule

FELIX FEIST, general sales manager for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, has arrived in Los Angeles to confer with officials at the Culver City studios on the fifty-two productions to be presented by this organization during the coming year starting August 16.

The first of the new pictures to come to the public the coming season will be "The Unholy Three," starring Lon Chaney and recently completed under the direction of Tod Browning, Mr. Feist announced.

"The Merry Widow," one of the most pretentious films ever made by this organization, with John Gilbert and Mae Murray in the leading roles and directed by von Stroheim, will receive its public premiere on September 20, he stated. Other pictures from this studio to be seen in September are Maurice Tourneur's "Never the Twain Shall Meet," a Cosmopolitan production of the story by Peter B. Kyne, adapted to the screen by Eugene Mullins, Edmund Goulding's "Sun-Up," a picturization of the Lula Vollmer play with Pauline Starke, Conrad Nagel and Lucille La Verne, and Tod Browning's "The Mystic," with Aileen Pringle and Conway Tearle.

The initial Erte picturization, for which spectacular sets and clothes have been designed by the famous European artist, will be shown with Pauline Starke and Lew Cody in November, as will "The Tower of Lies," starring Norma Shearer and Lon Chaney. Hobart Henley's production of the Cosmo Hamilton play, "An Exchange of Wives," with Eleanor Boardman and Lew Cody, will also be presented in November.

Another highlight in the releases of this company will be the premiere of the initial Lillian Gish vehicle, "La Boheme," set for November 15. Shooting on this production will be started in the near future.

Among the other big attractions promised by Mr. Feist soon after the middle of August are "The Big Parade," with John Gilbert; "Pretty Ladies," directed by Monta Bell, with a cast of popular players; "Time, the Comedian," with Mae Busch and Lew Cody; Jackie Coogan in his first vehicle under his new contract with M-G-M, and "Mare Nostrum" (Our Sea), Rex Ingram's production of the famous Blasco Ibanez novel with Alice Terry and Antonio Moreno in the leading roles, now being finished in Paris.

Vilma Banky Cast

Vilma Banky, noted Hungarian beauty, makes her American debut in "The Dark Angel," a First National picture and will play opposite Ronald Colman, who has been cast in the leading role.

Metro's "Unholy Three" Breaks Records in San Francisco

A WIRE received by Metro-Goldwyn from A. W. Bowles, general manager of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., indicates that Tod Browning has achieved a sensational success in his "The Unholy Three," which he directed for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer from the C. A. Robbins' story adapted to the screen by Waldemar Young. Lon Chaney, Mae Busch and Matt Moore have the featured roles in this production.

Mr. Bowles wires as follows: "Very happy to advise you that world premiere of 'The Unholy Three' opened at Loew's Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, Saturday, breaking all existing Saturday opening records in the history of the theatre. Picture most enthusiastically received by public and press and we look forward to one of our biggest and most successful engagements. Heartiest congratulations."

In consequence of the furore made by "The Unholy Three" in San Francisco the film has been procured by the West Coast Theatres, Inc., for showing in all of their towns, seven-day showings having been reserved for such towns as Berkeley, Stockton, San Jose, Sacramento and Fresno. Seven-day showings are almost unknown to all of these towns with the exception of Sacramento.

Lon Chaney has contributed a characterization of overwhelming fascination to this production, which is replete with mystery, suspense, murder, romance, horror, pathos and tragedy, and contains in addition, many hilariously comic scenes. Victor McLaglen, a giant; Harry Earles, a dwarf, and a large gorilla play important roles in this unusual production. The supporting cast includes Mathew Betz, Walter Perry, John Merkyl, Charles Wellsley, Percy Williams, Marjorie Morton, Violet Crane, Lou Morrison, Edward Connelly, William Humphreys and A. E. Warren.

Pick Title for De Mille Film

Producers Distributing Corporation announces that the Cecil B. De Mille production adapted from the stage play "Strongheart" by William De Mille will be produced under the title of "Braveheart."

Rod La Rocque will be starred in the title role under the direction of Rupert Julian.

Colleen Moore and Lloyd Hughes in a scene in "The Desert Flower," a First National production starring Colleen, in which the latter is now scoring one of her greatest successes.

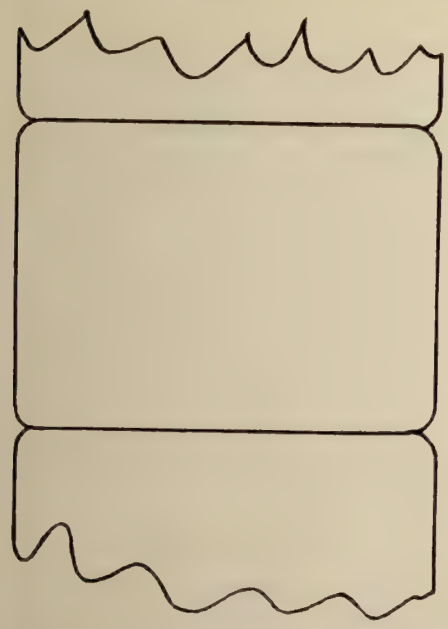
PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Not a Bad Idea

A projectionist in Los Angeles, California, says:

Concerning the two samples of film attached hereto, if all film were slightly indented at the sides at the frame line as per one of the samples, there would be no excuse for mis-frames at fade-ins and fade-outs, and much time, trouble and inconvenience would be saved to all concerned.



What this projectionist refers to is the little indentation you find in some films —in the printing I mean—at the frame line, as per the drawing. Seems to me the idea is not a bad one. With such an indentation the frame line could be determined in fade-ins and fade-outs, as Ballou says, and mis-frames be avoided by the careless, while those who do their work right would be saved the annoyance incident to finding the correct point for a splice in such places. Not a bad idea, it seems to me.

Operator to Projectionist

A Pennsylvania man says:

I take great pride in saying to you that while I was a machine operator for about eight years, but for the past year I have been studying your great Bluebook of projection, with result that I now feel myself to be something more than a machine operator—in fact I feel justified in calling myself a motion picture projectionist. Your book certainly has helped projection in every way in this small town of five hundred.

My manager is a lady. I am sorry to have to say that with the exception of one projector the equipment is in very poor condition. We have one Power 6A and one Power 6. The management will not even buy repairs for the projectors, and I don't feel like buying them myself. I spend lots of time on them and the gasoline engine which drives a 40.4 ampere D. C. generator. Lately there has been a new floor rug purchased; also other things, but not one cent for projection.

Only the other day the engine gave out, and there will be no show until June first. Now what would YOU do in such a case. I hate to give up the projection work, as I like it, and since studying the Bluebook it has really come to mean a lot to me.

The manageress runs good pictures too, and takes a lot of pride in the looks of the building. I am married and have a family. What would YOU do if you were in my place?

What Shall I Say?

Now what am I to say to this man? I don't know what to advise YOU, but I do know that I'd tell that particular manager who takes pride in everything EXCEPT the thing she sells to the public to go boil a radish. I'd tell her to add a ten-year-old schoolboy to her junk projection apparatus and butcher things up RIGHT.

However, you probably cannot afford to do that, and might not be able to get a job as projectionist elsewhere, so I dunno. It is too bad that those in control of theatres—a few of them anyhow—use such perfectly terrible judgment. The one thing she ought to use every endeavor to keep in first class condition, because upon it she must perforce depend for the excellence of the way those films she gets are placed before her audiences, she just lets go plumb to the devil. Oh well, there is no accounting for the vagaries of some theatre "managers." One consolation is that they lose heavily through their misguided policy, and that they will discover that fact provided they live long enough. Your "lady" imagines she is a theatre manager, but there is a "mis" before the "manager," even though she doesn't know it.

I really don't know anything to say to you in the way of advice. Do what YOU think best. That probably is all there is to do. Incidentally, there is no such thing as an "A. C." and a "D. C." lamphouse. What did you mean by that?

Bluebook School

Question No. 321—In many problems we are told to "square the diameter." What does it mean? What is meant by the radius of a circle? Knowing the diameter of a circle, how would you find its circumference? Its area?

Question No. 322—What is a kilowatt? A kilowatt hour? What amount of power does a kilowatt hour represent?

Question No. 323—As applied to motors and generators, etc., what is meant by the term efficiency? And how is it measured?

Question No. 324—Which has the highest efficiency, a motor generator, rheostat, mercury arc rectifier or transformer? Don't merely give us the rated efficiency, but discuss relative results, thus: A transformer has a high rate of efficiency as to operation, but —well, in projection we don't call it efficient just the same, since with it we have A C at the arc.

Question No. 325—Have YOU any suggestions to offer for the improvement of the Bluebook school?

First National Adds Two Dozen Pictures to List of 1925-26 Productions

Objectionable

Marvin H. Thoreau and Locksley Clark, Vancouver, B. C., voice some very proper objections to a sticker placed on First National films received by them. The sticker is illustrated herewith. They say:

Enclosed find our replies to Bluebook School questions No. 286—290. You may well ask the meaning of the sticker we have affixed to this page. We regard it as being pretty near the peak of insult. We had thought the various elements of the motion picture business were being brought into a better understanding, and were coming closer together day by day, but when producers like First National put out such a THING as this, or permit it to be put out in connection with their product—well it would seem we are getting further apart, instead of closer together. (Are you sure First National had anything to do with it? I think probably it is the work of some square head exchange manager.—Ed.)

An Affront

They seek to brand men who handle their product, and who place it before the public, as merely "operators of a mechanism." Such an affront will, in our opinion, set up resentment, and make men who take pride in their work and who try to get all there is in a production out, not care much what happens to it when it is accompanied by that sort of an INSULT.

Then, too, it requires nerve for a producer to ask us to take care of his productions, even though he ask decently, when all too often they take next to no care of it in their own exchanges.

Next week we are to run a nine reel feature. When we received the production we found a fade-out within one hundred feet of the end of every reel, but NOT ONE OF THEM ACTUALLY AT THE END. Needless to say we did the work of the exchange (free of cost, of course) and put those fade-outs at the end of the reels, where they belong.

"Projection By So and So"

Not long ago we saw in the Department where a projectionist was using a "Projection by So and So" title. We remove everything but the title and cast. If the projectionist wishes to and can convince the manager that good projection really sells seats by being consistently good, and it is desired to advise the public of the name of the projectionist then have his name inserted in the theatre program, with such prominence as is usually accorded to the name of the musical director; also let it appear in the newspaper advertisements of the show, where the name of the musical director usually appears, but for goodness' sake don't plaster the screen with such things. If it is worth while bringing it to the notice of the public, then the newspapers and program are the place for it.

We hope we do not tire you with our ideas. They are submitted with all sincerity, and your comments are always welcomed, whether they be in praise or criticism.

Agree and Disagree

I thoroughly agree and very thoroughly disagree with you. By that I mean that I agree with your criticisms of the use of the word "Operator" in such a sticker. Call a producer a "picture maker" and he would not like it. Well "Operator" is ten times as bad, because it means, in effect, that the man who uses it considers the motion picture projectionist as nothing more than a machine attendant, which is, under the circumstances, as you have said, little less than an insult, no matter whether it was meant that way or not.

Also the sticker is rather foolishly worded. It is unintelligent and probably was made by some one who knew little or nothing about practical motion picture projection.

Had it read: "PROJECTIONISTS ATTENTION. This is a fresh print, hence the emulsion is relatively soft. Be sure the aperture tension of your projectors is as light as practicable, and thus avoid unnecessary injury to the print," there would have been no objection to it. As the sticker is worded, however, the "Operator" is requested to "l osen tension spring," regardless of how loose it may already be.

As to the "Projection by So and So," I thoroughly disagree with you on that. It is, in my opinion, the one thing which would go very far in making men very careful in their work. It stands to reason that the man who has projected his name to the screen, and thus informed the audience then and there present that HE is the one responsible for any balks in the work, IS GOING TO BE PRETTY GOSH ALL HEMLOCKED CAREFUL THAT THERE ARE NONE. Newspaper and program publicity is all well and good, but in my opinion far greater results will be had by screen publicity.

Names a Nuisance

I agree with you that the present great multiplicity of names on the screen is nothing short of a nuisance. Who in)(?!*: cares who "cut" the film, or did any one of half a dozen other things? I make bold to say nobody. But the audience witnessing a projection certainly won't object to being told who the man is who is right there with them, if for no other reason than that they may roast the tar out of him if he gets careless and don't give them their money's worth.

As to tiring me—it can't be done, so long as you send in IDEAS. That's what helps to make YOUR department interesting. If they are no good, they pass right through my fingers into the waste paper basket. If they are—well, they get themselves placed before many hundreds of readers, and very often great good is accomplished by that, even when there is little apparent effect. I have many times been astonished to be told, long after a publication, by some man that he had been benefited by it, though until then no one knew that but himself.

Mirror Screens

John Griffith says:

Up to date there have been three creditable answers to the mirror screen question, namely: First, P. E. Thomas, Creston, Iowa, in March 28 issue; second, C. M. Swabb, Oilton, Oklahoma, May 2 issue, and third, Richard Keuster, Brooklyn, New York, in May 9 issue.

Thomas and Kuester worked on theory only, and overlooked one important item, viz.: that there is no such thing as a perfect reflector. Swabb actually tried to get a visible picture on a plain mirror, and—got one. The reason he did so was that in addition to reflecting the rays, as per Keuster's drawing, each point of the silver backing of the mirror diffuses a small fraction of the light rays falling upon it.

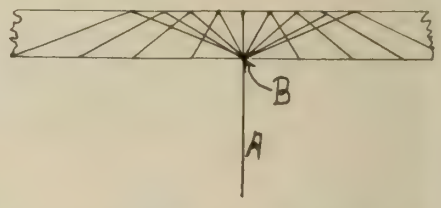
For this reason the eye receives rays from every point of the surface of a mirror, the same as it does from a plain screen, only they are far less in amount, and we do actually see a picture when it is projected on a plain mirror.

To make certain that my reasoning in this was not at fault I propected a stereopticon slide through the motion picture projector aperture, which, as you know, will give an image just in front of the projection lens. I found it was possible to pick up a perfectly formed image with a plain mirror surface.

Not Practical

Of course it is not a practical proposition, because the mirror would reflect more than merely the picture. I figure it would reflect, first, the picture. Second, that portion of the auditorium which is illuminated with or by the direct beam of light as shown in Keuster's drawing. Third, the bright spot of light from the lens, plus any other high light which happened to exist.

But a plain mirror could be made very practicable by covering its surface with cloth, varying from muslin for a long, narrow house, to heavy bleached sheeting for the wide house. I think such a screen would have the plain screen beaten by a mile, especially in the wide, deep house. The sheeting would take care of the side seats, and the reflector back of the cloth would reflect more light than a plain, white screen could.



If you will examine the departments about six or seven years ago, John, you will find that this cloth-covered mirror plan was suggested to Frank Rembusch by the editor, but with the suggestion that I was not so sure about it because of two things, viz.: Examining the accompanying drawing, which is the section of a glass mirror, somewhat exaggerated as to thickness in order to better illustrate that part of my meaning, light ray A incident upon point B of a screen covered with such an excellent diffusing material as cloth, which passed through the cloth would be scattered as indicated, and would be reflected back as shown—angle of incidence being equal to angle of reflection where a perfect (the term "perfect" used in the general acceptance of that term. As Griffith says, there is no such surface known to science) reflection surface is encountered by light rays.

Results Not Certain

Under this condition we would certainly have the blacks of the whites illuminated by relative dark rays, and the blacks illuminated by relatively white rays. Just what the net result might be I am not so certain, but it would seem to me such a plan might be used successfully if some method were found of making and handling such a large sheet of thin glass—say not to exceed ⅛ inch in thickness—and getting it silver coated and bedded in some practicable way.

I don't think, however, that such a thing is feasible. It might be done—yes, but it would, I am quite certain, be costly and the resultant screen very heavy and bulky. The diffusion described would not pass so widely afield as it would were the glass ¼ to ⅜ inch thick.

That is my own views as regards the possibility of such a screen, and those ideas were formed years ago, too. My view as to the thick glass mirror coated with a diffusing surface, which might be white paint, I think, or a heavy white water color wash, is that you would get added brilliancy in plenty, BUT that the toning of the pictures as to photographic shadows would be either badly damaged or pretty nearly entirely ruined.

As to getting a visible image on a plain mirror—well, if it can be done I did not know it. Possibly, as Griffiths says (And by that I don't mean to cast doubt on what he has said, though it might sound that way) a visible image can be had from the slight diffusion he describes, but even so it seems to me it would have to be strong enough to overpower and kill the image reflected naturally by the mirror, plus the reflection of the bright spot, and that at least seems impossible. However, both Griffith and Swabb have succeeded in doing it, so I guess that's that.

Simplex Patent

F. B. Bloomer, Projectionist, Galesburg, Illinois, says:

Recently another "old timer" and myself held lengthy discussion as to who holds the patent on the Simplex intermittent movement—i. e. the original patent—and whether or no it has expired.

He claims that Mr. Bell, of Bell and Howell, either holds it or did hold it, and that he received a royalty of five dollars for each projector turned out. He also claims that the first Simplex was made in 1919 or before. Is he right or wrong?

The Simplex projector was first crudely designed by Frank Cannock on the back of a beer check while seated, together with Mike Berkowitz, in the back room of O'Keefe's saloon at Forty Second street and Madison Avenue, New York City. This was in the year 1911 or 1912, I think. Mr. Cannock's idea was to build a more substantial projector; also one which might be more readily placed and its position changed so as to relocate the picture on the screen without trouble.

When I say it was "crudely designed" I mean that rough sketches were made by Mr. Cannock, who discussed them with Mr. Berkowitz over their mugs of ale, and that the general design (pedestal) of the projector came from these sketches.

The Intermittent

As to the intermittent, if you mean the star and cam, why that was used years and years before motion pictures were ever even thought of—in their present form at least. If you mean the intermittent as a whole, I cannot answer your question, but very seriously doubt the statement that Mr. Bell or any one else except the Precision Machine Company holds a patent on it, or that any royalty, five dollars or other sum, is paid any one.

Of course if a patent on the movement assemblage was taken out by Mr. Cannock along about that time it has not yet expired; also it may be renewed when it does. If it was patented by some one else, whether it has expired or not would, of course, depend upon when the patent was obtained.

Frank Cannock

And right here permit me to pay a deserved tribute to Frank Cannock, who was projectionist at the Eden Musee, West 23rd street near Sixth Avenue, New York City, beginning in 1900 and continuing with some breaks for nearly ten years.

It was Cannock who designed and built the "Edengraph," a very finely constructed projector mechanism, but too lightly built, which was taken over by George Kleine and finally abandoned. It was Cannock who designed and built the Simplex—the first pedestal type projector. I well remember the gossip and speculation when we first heard of what he was working on—a projector which "could be pointed like a cannon," and how curious we all were to see it. That was as nearly as I can remember, in 1912, or maybe 1913. I am not certain as to exact dates, and have not my records at hand.

Cannock was a nervous "cranky" sort of chap, but a fine fellow nevertheless, and a really splendid mechanic. I would call him an artist in metal working. When Frank Cannock made it it certainly was well made, and you could bank on that.

His Death a Loss

He "passed over" along about 1916 (My date quotations are entirely from memory, and when one peers back into the years there is always a fog which makes things indistinct). His death was a distinct loss to the motion picture industry. The refinement and perfection of the splendid projector Cannock had evolved was ably carried on by Edwin S. Porter, who had become affiliated with Cannock as President of the Precision Machine Company, in which position he remained until last year, when he finally retired.

I wish Frank, as we who knew and loved him liked to call him, might look upon the beautiful projector he worked so hard to perfect as it stands today, all enameled in battleship gray and with a high intensity lamp in its gizzard. Gosh! I'll bet he would have wet eyes from pure joy.

But he can't, poor boy! And soon you and I and we all will be swallowed up in the maw of time, and others may look upon the perfection of the work WE began, and strove hard to perfect, and will, we hope, understand OUR hopes, our aims and our aspirations, and will maybe speak kindly of US, and try to remember just what year it was when WE passed over.

Oh well, men, let us build our works as best we may, while the building is good, and worry not about what will happen when we are gone, only try so to live that kindly words WILL be said about us in the days when we are, even as the loved ones gone on before, only a memory.

There, darn you, do you see what your old question led me to? Well, I'm not one bit sorry, for I think it is well to pause once in a while and spend a moment, with bared head and heart, and speak in loving remembrance of those who labored with and before us.

A Hot One

C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa, arises to hand the A. P. S. this dig, which is perhaps not altogether undeserved:

By the way, F. H., how does it come that the members of the American Projection Society, whom you have repeatedly held up to our admiring gaze, have such a very small representation in the Bluebook School. Unless Keuster is a member, there is not a man of them all in New York City who has even tried to answer the questions; also the same applies to Pittsburgh and Washington, where I understand there are branches of the Society.

Do these exalted ones think the questions are too simple for them to bother with, or that they know so much they don't need to trouble answering questions—or do they fear they might help some of we poor "bushers" to rise to their high level.

Of course I don't know any of these men personally, but I'll bet two sticks of chewing gum to ten dollars that there are a number of them who might really have to scratch their heads quite a bit to propound correct answers to some of the questions asked up to this time. And anyhow if the A. P. S. members hold themselves as high class men, then they ought to join in and help in such a work or real merit as the Bluebook School.

A Bump

Quite a bump, all right, but as I said, not altogether undeserved. What Hanover says is RIGHT. I don't know whether Kuester is a member or not, and even he has "back slid" during the past few weeks. I'm sorry about that too, for Kuester was a darned good "scholar." Outside of possibly himself, not one single A. P. S. man in all Greater New York, Pittsburgh and Washington has jointed in the work of the Bluebook School to the extent of answering even so much as one question, except that Griffith and Gray are non-resident members of the New York City A. P. S., and Gray, at least, has been pretty regular, though due to heavy work he has missed class some of the time. Griffith has helped some too, though intermittently.

Hanover is right when he says or infers that members of an organization such as the A. P. S. ought to take themselves a bit more seriously, and give their active assistance to any effort which is made to uplift the profession of projection. HERE IS THE A. P. S. FAULT. The organization is mostly composed of what we may call the "cream" of the profession in the various localities where branches exist. These men are committing this BLUNDER. They have an idea that they have got about as far as they can go—that there is no ladder above for them to climb, so they fall more or less into a rut, and REST ON THEIR LAURELS, just aiming to "keep up" with the procession and on more.

"No Such Animal"

BUT there "ain't no such animal." One don't stand still in this old world. One goes ahead or slips BACK. One progresses up the hill or SLIPS DOWN. Possibly the slip is so gradual that it is not noticed—so slow that the slippee would indignantly deny that he IS slipping. But by and by he gets a JOLT when he finds some one else securing the new big job, and himself being gradually relegated to second place.

The A. P. S. is a good organization. Its members are mostly high class men, but they, or most of them, have that one BIG fault. Better wake up, boys, and keep busily busy in such matters as the Bluebook School and other educational movements. IF YOU DON'T, THEN JUST YOU WATCH WHAT HAPPENS TO YOU DURING THE NEXT FIVE YEARS, and at the end of that period look back and remember what I told you.

Bluebook Answers—291-295

Note: F. H. Moore, Taunton, Mass., made very good replies to the last set of questions, but they either came too late or were overlooked—I don't know which. Also H. J. Robinson, Collinsville, Texas, made correct reply to Question 289, but omitted the rest. Why not try answering them all, Collins? If you go wrong I only will know it; if you are right it will be fine.

In either event you will certainly be the gainer. Also the silence in Toronto is quite some silence. How come?

Question No. 291—Tell us, in your own words, how work is accomplished by electricity.

A. L. Fell, Collingswood, New Jersey, Thoreau and Clark, Vancouver, B. C.; Wm. A. Burnett, Newton, Iowa; Glenn G. Wallace, Muskegon, Michigan; W. C. Whitt, Red Bluff, California; G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, So. Dakota; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; Chas. H. Colby, Santa Fe, New Mexico; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois, and F. H. Moore, Taunton, Massachusetts "got by" on this one.

The answer of Fell is excellent. It reads:

Work—When a force acts upon a body in such manner that resistance is overcome and motion produced, work is said to have been performed. The measure of the work performed is the product of the force by the distance moved. Work is done when a body is lifted against the force of gravity, or when a body is caused to overcome the resistance offered by friction.

If electricity is to transmit or convey energy along an electrical circuit, and be capable of performing work at any point of its length, then energy in the form of electrical pressure must be imparted to it from or by some external source. That is to say, before electricity can perform work it must be set into motion against more or less resistance, which means that a force (in this case electrical pressure, or voltage) must be applied, and to obtain this pressure, energy must be expended from some source outside the relm of dormant electricity, which exists everywhere.

Dormant electricity is not energy, but electricity under electrical pressure is a form of energy, just as still water in a lake is not energy, but the same water in a pipe under pressure is a form of energy, the pressure representing the energy, and the water the agent it acts through.

In the case of energy transmitted through electricity, the electricity itself is merely the agent through which the energy stored therein in the form of pressure produced by the application of steam or other power, is transmitted.

In the course of such transmission work is performed in the overcoming of resistance, in the turning of motor armatures, in the application of heat to the incandescent lamp filament, and in other ways.

To enter into a discussion of all the details of the action of current in turning the motor armature and in doing the various other things was not, I think, intended by the question, since that would require a great deal of space.

There, I've dressed it up a little and amplified its phraseology some, but without, I think, altering or adding to the meaning of Brother Fell, and I'll say that is a mighty good answer to the question.

Doe says:

Scientists tell us that electricity exists everywhere and in everything. We are taught that when the generator armature revolves or the battery acts, electricity is not generated, but merely "gathered," and pressure applied to it, much the same as the fire imparts pressure to a boiler by generating steam.

Frankly I have never been quite able to accept that theory in toto. I cannot see how a battery, at least, "gathers" electricity in the form of electrons, or in any other form, out of the atmosphere, but be that as it may it is certain that when a dynamo or a battery operates, a force is generated which may be transmitted upon or through certain substances, notably copper, to distant points, and there applied to the turning of wheels and the heating and lighting of rooms.

Electrical power or force is stored up by the application of some outside force, such as a water wheel (usually merely an application of the force of gravity), or a steam, gas or other kind of engine.

The force or power thus stored up, when applied to the performance of work is a always equal to the product of its pressure (voltage) and its flow as measured in amperes. We do not know what "amperage" is, or what "voltage" is, but we do know that voltage and amperage in their operating application resemble and seem to act exactly the same as do pounds pressure and cubic inches of steam.

Whether or not scientists would pick holes in that last statement I do not know, but at any rate it is exactly true enough for my purpose, and I know of no better language to use in making the comparison.

Electricity therefore performs work through and by the application of the electrical pressure stored in it, acting through the volume of some thing of unknown composition called "electricity."

Water performs work through the application of the weight of its volume, or by reason of the application of pressure stored up in the pipes or other conveyors in which it is contained.

The air does work by blowing against the vanes of a windmill, which is the application of momentum and weight.

Steam does work through the application of power stored up in it through compression.

Electricity does work through the application of something which corresponds to pressure in water or steam, acting through something we call "electricity," which latter no one has yet, to my mind, been able to describe in a way the average mind can assimilate, understand or accept.

Again I have taken the liberty of 'dressing up' this answer, but I have not in any degree changed or added to brother Doe's apparent meaning.

Permit me to say, gentlemen, that I have seen a lot of attempts to answer the question asked in years gone by, but up to this time I have yet to see one that I considered even as good as either of these presented. My compliments to Brothers Fell and Doe. Good stuff, boys, what?

Question No. 292—In electrical calculations, what do the letters E, C and R stand for.

Everyone agrees on this one but Guimond puts it very well. He says:

When stating electrical formulas it is a waste of unnecessary energy to always write out long names; also in printing them much space would be required, and the whole thing would be somewhat confusing. The practice therefore is to substitute letters named for certain names, or things, thus:

E stands for Electromotive Force, or Voltage. When used in an electrical formula it should be read, and mentally is read "E. M. F." or "Voltage."

C stands for current flow as represented by amperage. Hence it stands for amperage, or the number of amperes flowing. The letter "I" also is used for the same purpose, and when so used means the same thing.

R stands for and means resistance in ohms.

In the formula voltage divided by amperes equals resistance, instead of having

$$\frac{\text{Electromotive force}}{\text{Amperes}} = \text{Resistance in ohms,}$$

we have $\frac{E}{C} = R$, or $\frac{E}{I} = R$

Question No. 293—For what various reasons is it not only advisable and desirable, but also necessary that the motion picture projectionist understand electrical wiring and the problems connected therewith?

Bennewitz says:

With the present up-to-date projection room equipment, the projectionist has in his charge electrical energy delivering and consuming devices, the operation of which depends upon the wires attached to the device for the current supplied, or delivered to the device.

The projectionist must be able to properly connect these devices to different wiring systems or vice versa. He must be able to determine the proper size wire to carry the current with the minimum loss.

Some may think that due to the fact that the local home rule prohibits the projectionist from doing electrical wiring, that it is not necessary to understand wiring and wiring colculations. But the fact remains that it is the duty of the projectionist to inspect and check all wiring that is connected directly to the projection room and its equipment. To do this efficiently he must understand wiring and wiring calculations.

Wallace says:

In the early days of motion picture projection, all the "operator" had to know was how to set the carbons so as to get at least some light, thread the projector, take some sort of care of the films, stick up "paper" and do a few other things which others have now taken charge of.

Of late years, however, projection has reached a stage where in up-to-date theatres it is necessary that the projectionist have a pretty thorough technical knowledge, in addition to his practical experience, if he is to get far with the modern expensive projection equipment placed in his charge. In order that best results in efficiency be obtained such installations must have their wiring figured out very accurately. No longer is it a matter of one or two dinky little projectors, with a maximum of fifty amperes when both lamps are going, but of expensive, complicated machinery, with a possible maximum of nearly 300 amperes when both motion picture projector lamps and the dissolver or spot are all, for a moment, in operation.

Also it is often the case of old equipment being torn out and new installed. In any case the projection room feed circuit and its subsidiary circuits must be calculated, and if the projectionist cannot do this intelligently, then he is at the absolute mercy of some electrician, who usually is more interested in how much time he can put in than in the efficiency of the plant he is installing, or of some electrical contractor who will "save money" for himself if he can "get by" with No. 6 where No. 5 or No. 4 should have been installed.

My own observation has been that where the electrician or the architect or contractor are unchecked in such matters, the results are almost invariably disastrous to efficiency of future operation.

The projectionist should be and if he is going to check up on the electrician or contractor, must be able to figure what wire sizes will be necessary in the projection room circuits in order to confine the "drop" to a figure within the range of reasonable efficiency. Of course it is not to be expected that the motion picture projectionist will understand all the many details of electrical wiring, which are mutitudinous, but he should and must, if he is to fulfil his full duty to his employer, understand all things which have to do with projection room wiring.

Excellent, brother Wallace! Excellent! I have also changed your words some, but in no case your apparent meaning.

Whitt puts it in a rather amusing form, but correctly just the same. He says:

If the projectionist does not understand electric wiring problems and wire systems, when trouble bobs up he would be in about the position of a darned good steam shovel engineer trying to repair his wife's wrist watch. Maybe he would, but it's a good-many-to-one shot that something even worse than its present trouble would happen to

A Tip to the Wise

TO YOU theatre men who know that good projection is as important as good pictures—who know that a good light source in a good machine will draw patronage to any theatre regardless of its size or location—to you who want to improve your projection, we recommend a new high intensity arc—the "HC" lamp.

The "HC" lamp is the Sperry high intensity arc lamp, used for high powered searchlights, redesigned and adapted to motion picture projection service.

The Sperry lamp was chosen by government experts for army and navy searchlights because of its brilliancy, whiteness and steadiness. These most desirable characteristics are outstanding features of the "HC" lamp.

Twice the Light From Current Consumed

The "HC" lamp shoots a snow white beam of searchlight intensity on the screen. It brings out all the beauty of a picture. It presents pictures in a manner that patrons appreciate and enjoy. It justifies the fine arts of picture making. It is a vast improvement over an ordinary arc—gives more than twice as much light on the screen, yet consumes no more current.

Simple to Operate

The mechanism of the "HC" lamp is so simple and the parts so accessible that any Projectionist can operate and care for it without preliminary instructions.

There are no coils, magnets or third electrodes used with the automatic feeding mechanism.

The rate of feeding of either carbon can be regulated independently of the others and these adjustments are so graduated as to give an infinite number of rates of speed.

The lamp is equipped with an arc controller that need not be hand fed, during the running of an entire double reel.

An Ideal Set Up

The "HC" lamp is a light source that merits use in the best projection machines. That's why it is endorsed by the builders of Simplex.

A Simplex projector, equipped with an "HC" arc, ensures high quality projection —better patronage—greater profits.

You are interested in new developments and improvements. Mail the coupon and get full information on the "HC" lamp.

the poor li'l watch. A plain "ground" would have him "buffaloed." When he is hired to act as projectionist in a new theatre in course of construction, and the electrical contractor asks him if a No. 6 circuit won't be too large, where it really should, as the contractor well knows, be No. 4, he looks wise and says: "Nope. You'd better make it six. I'd rather have it a bit too big anyhow"—and the boss is the unconscious goat every time he pays the juice bill forever after.

Were the don't-understand-wires-and-wiring projectionist ever obliged to really install, or superintend the installation of a projection room wire system, there sure would be one fine mess of I-guess-that's-about-right circuits when he got through. Naturally, unless the Goddess of chance perched squarely on his brow, he would have things balled up RIGHT.

Possibly such men can get by for a time without serious trouble, but just wait! Eventually something will come up that will have him up in the air and no wings to fly with. It therefore follows that the projectionist of today should be pretty sure he knows his "groceries" in the matter of wires and wiring.

Right, Brother Whitt! If he doesn't he is liable to be a cabbage head ham, and with a can (empty vegetable one) tied to his coat tails by friend boss who, if he is wise, prefers uptodate, fresh groceries to the last year, wilted sort, even though they be cheap.

Question No. 294—What is a "Mil"? A "Circular Mil"?

Burnett says:

A "Mil" is one one thousandth of an inch. It is a unit of length. A "Circular Mil" is a circle one one thousandth of an inch in diameter. The square of the diameter of any circle, in mils, is equal to its area in circular mils.

Which is correct, though Wallace says:

A "Mil" is 1/1000 of an inch, measuring lengthwise of a wire. For the purpose of calculations it is expressed decimally thus: .001 which simplifies calculations. A "Circular Mil" is a circle 1/000, or .001 of an inch in diameter. It is used in calculating the area of cross section of run wires.

Bennewitz describes it thus:

A "Mil" is a unit of length equal to 1/100th of an inch. It is used especially in the measurement of the diameters of wires. A "Circular Mil" is a circle 1/1000 of an inch in diameter, the unit with which to calculate or measure the cross section of round wires. The square of the diameter of a wire, in mils, is its area of cross section in circular mils.

Question No. 293—Explain what is meant by a "degree" as applied to a circle.

Burnett says:

A degree, as applied to a circle, is equal to the circumference divided by 360. It is 1/360th of the diameter of a circle of any diameter, hence a degree may have any dimension as to its width. The "width" of a degree as of a circle one inch in diameter would be a very small fraction of an inch. The width of one degree as of a circle a hundred miles in diameter would be pretty close to one mile.

Wallace says:

Every circle, no matter whether it be one inch or a thousand feet in circumference, is divided geometrically into three hundred and sixty (360) degrees, commonly expressed as 360°. The circumference of the circle is of course what is expressed in degrees, and any part of such circumference may be expressed in degrees if desired.

Bennewitz tells it this way:

The circumference of every circle is supposed to be divided into 360 equal parts, called degrees. Thus, a degree is 1/360th of the circumference of any circle. A degree is divided into 60 parts called minutes, expressed by (′), and each minute is divided into 60 seconds, expressed by (″), so that the circumference of any circle contains 21,600 minutes or 1,296,000 seconds.

Australian Equipment Dealers Visit Power's Projector Plant

JOHN HARRINGTON who with his wife and son, J. E. Harrington, left their home in Australia last March, arriving in California sixteen days later, reached New York several weeks ago and will leave in a few days for England on a world tour which they believe will bring them home about Christmas of this year.

Mr. Harrington is founder and managing director of the firm of Harringtons, Ltd., Australia and New Zealand. The company carries on an extensive business in both wholesaling and retailing in every state of the commonwealth of Australia and the dominion of New Zealand, is the largest picture theatre supply house in that part of the world and distributes Power's Projectors. The company also does a large business in merchandising photographic, cinematographic, radio and X-ray supplies, while a subsidiary company, Harringtons Metallurgists, Ltd., are easily the largest metallurgists, analysts and assayers of precious metals in that locality.

Harringtons, Ltd., has large and up-to-date warehouses in Sydney, Melbourne, Brisbane, Adelaide, Katoomba, Auckland, N. Z. and Wellington, N. Z. The company has been 36 years building up a dealer clientele which is the most extensive and unique in Australia.

It is 18 years since Mr. Harrington last visited this country and of course noticed marked changes and improvements when visiting picture studios in California. He was greatly impressed with the splendid advances made in equipment methods and acting. Mr. Harrington states that motion pictures are becoming more and more popular in Australia and New Zealand; in fact it is now the usual thing for many families to attend the movies at least two or three times a week.

Mr. Harrington speaks very favorably of American projectors and says that they have a wonderful reputation in Australia and New Zealand for wearing qualities. Although higher in price than foreign makes they are popular among those who want the best. Mr. Harrington makes the interesting note in connection with the above statement that the Commonwealth Film Censors have used the same two Power's 6B projectors for many years and every film which has entered the great Australian continent from the United States has passed through those two projectors at more than usual speed and they are both in excellent condition.

RICHARD DIX in "The Lucky Devil"

ONE OF THE GREATER 40

By Byron Morgan

Screen play by Townsend Martin

A FRANK TUTTLE PRODUCTION

DIX is a big box-office draw today. "Too Many Kisses" and "The Shock Punch" jumped him up among the top-notchers. Now comes "The Lucky Devil"—by far his best to date. The result is capacity business at the Rivoli, New York, in the sultriest week of the summer. And clean-ups everywhere!

"The best picture Richard Dix has ever made. Richard is absolutely delightful. Esther Ralston is beautiful."—N. Y. Herald Tribune.

"Don't miss 'The Lucky Devil.' It's Dix's best. The story is exceptionally good. No better auto racing scenes have ever been filmed."
—N. Y. Graphic.

"Brains went into this picture. It's good entertainment."—N. Y. Times.

"Dix is excellent and Esther Ralston is pleasant and sympathetic."—N. Y. Eve. Post.

"There's many a chuckle in 'The Lucky Devil.' One of the most thrilling automobile races in many a day."—Eve. World.

"Light and amusing. Decidedly enjoyable. Even better than 'Paths to Paradise.'"—N. Y. Sun.

"A happy picture."—N. Y. News.

A great dramatic story that grew greater in the making.

A story so big in showmanship possibilities that Hunt Stromberg was literally compelled to produce it on a more lavish scale than was originally planned. Characters that demand the superlative in histrionic ability—with a cast that meets these requirements.

These considerations have made it necessary to adjust the sales quota to meet the increased new negative cost—an increase more than justified by the amplification of original production plans.

The thousands of exhibitors who have already booked the picture are in the fortunate position of being able to profit by this enhancement of production plans, and clean up many extra dollars at the original contract price.

THIS IS AN ENRICHMENT IN PRODUCTION PLANS THAT MEANS MORE DOLLARS TO EXHIBITORS.

"Evelyn Brent IN "Smooth as Satin"

Story by Bayard Veiller

READ WHAT THE CRITICS SAID

New York Evening Graphic—SMOOTH AS SATIN starring Evelyn Brent at the Capitol has "Alias Jimmy Valentine" backed off the boards for thrills and fascination . . . it is the best crook story we've ever seen in pictures . . . in fact one of the best films we've seen on Broadway in months . . . Miss Brent's characterization of Gertie Jones is one of the best performances we've ever seen . . . the action moves fast and furious, thrill follows thrill, surprise follows surprise . . . all we can say is DON'T MISS IT.

New York Daily Mirror—Yes sir—SMOOTH AS SATIN is ace high entertainment with Evelyn Brent contributing a crackerjack characterization.

New York Evening Post—Evelyn Brent in SMOOTH AS SATIN is a corking crook story . . . don't miss it . . . at the Capitol this week.

New York American—SMOOTH AS SATIN starring Evelyn Brent is far above the average crook play.

New York Evening Telegram—SMOOTH AS SATIN at the Capitol is excellent . . . the faces of the good people who looked at the Capitol's first showing were positively gripped with fascination.

New York Evening World—There is a fast moving melodrama at the Capitol this week with plenty of thrills in it . . . it is SMOOTH AS SATIN starring Evelyn Brent . . . the story is enthralling . . . Evelyn Brent plays the lead in the picture and puts it over in great shape.

A Great New Comedy Box-Office Bet

LUPINO LANE

The newest addition to Educational's great line-up of comedy stars is a master of pantomime second to none. He has a record of unbroken successes on the stage in both Europe and America. His appearance in pictures, both Short Subjects and features, met with instant public approval. Even such a conservative newspaper as the New York Evening Post showed the greatest enthusiasm in discussing his work in "Isn't Life Wonderful?" You can bank on a real box-office bet when the Post talks this way:

> "We wish to rise and state that Mr. Lane's work . . . touches a high mark in comedy which no screen actor save Chaplin has ever reached. . . .
> "We consider that Lupino Lane's work in 'Isn't Life Wonderful?' puts this comedian in a class by himself, and that, given the proper stories, he has it in him to become one of our best makers of sincere laughter."

Here's a great new box-office bet that means additional profit for every theatre that books and boosts his pictures.

So you'd better sign up now for the six two-reel

WORLD
Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

The Editor's Views

WITH all the mergers, deals, and what-not of these hectic Summer days in a boiling industry it is inspiring to come across a bit of constructive work so well planned as the Paramount Theater Managers School. It is encouraging to feel that the organization concerned in the greatest number of "deals" is still able to give the time and effort to a move of this sort.

We have just concluded a reading of the prospectus of the Theater Managers School. It is well worth the time of any theater owner.

There is a serious, practical note to the course that is outlined; there is a vision of service held forth to prospective pupils. All in all, it broadens one's view of what the ultimate in theater management and community service will be.

It is our understanding that the sessions of the school will be open to the trade press. We shall watch them with interest; observe with keen hope the type of men that will be attracted to the school and the vocation that it promises.

This is more than a transient industrial move. There is an underlying thought that may play a large part in the future development of the industry.

COLLEGE men, we are told in the prospectus, will be given the preference in selecting the pupils. A tuition fee of three hundred dollars is charged. Aside from exceptionally promising cases, pupils must plan to give their whole time to the school, with no opportunity to earn a living during the course.

This calls for an exceptional grade of applicants.

Those of us who count our years in the show business by the dozen have held tightly to the theory that only the School of Experience could graduate capable theater men.

The School of Experience has graduated capable men, has in fact numbered many of genius among its alumni, but it must be admitted that the School holds no glory for turning out an "average" of high quality graduates. Good, bad, and indifferent have been the grades.

Now it remains to be seen whether it is possible for a process of selection, followed by an intensive training along pedagogical lines, to surpass the tried and true School of Experience.

We are pretty well sold that it can—after reading a prospectus that is a work of intelligence, clear thinking, and sincerity.

Our best wishes to Adolph Zukor, Sidney Kent, and Harold Franklin in an undertaking of real significance.

WE have just enjoyed a real treat. And with it, come upon what strikes us as the outstanding novelty for presentation as part of Greater Movie Season.

With the cooperation of those pioneers, Thomas A. Edison and E. S. Porter, "The Great Train Robbery" and a number of still earlier releases have been combined in a single reel novelty that is certain to arouse no end of discussion during the industry's jubilee celebration.

Here is ready-made ad. copy. "The first word—and the last word in motion pictures"—a linking up of the short reel novelty to the current feature. Here is certain copy for photoplay editors.

And, aside from business thoughts, for picture men here is a treat that you don't want to miss. It will bring back many happy memories, give you many a chuckle.

Speaking Freely

Wotta week! Wotta week! Chasing that elusive will-o-the-wisp, "Big Deal." Dodging here, there, everywhere. "On again, off agin, Finnegan." All the hop, skip, and jump phrases you can think of, and then some.

Monday morning—"Fox has West Coast Theaters—almost." Tuesday morning—"Fox has West Coast Theaters—practically." Wednesday morning—"The deal is all off. They are all going to be good boys and play in First National's yard." Thursday morning—A series of long sighs and the rendition by the chorus of "After the Ball Was Over."

Wotta week!

There is no doubt that Fox's near-capture of West Coast Theaters constituted the biggest single theater deal that the industry had ever seen—and, had it gone through, the biggest deal it ever could see involving strictly PICTURE theaters. The only chance of a deal exceeding it in magnitude would be one involving one of the big nation-wide vaudeville circuits. And if anyone wants a mark to shoot at to pass Bill Fox's attempt there it is.

Don't be surprised if someone does take a crack at such a deal. Mighty soon. These are days when almost anything might happen. It's a wise newspaperman who will just create his own set of rumors each week and then trust to the Fates to pull them through.

He probably won't go wrong once in ten times.

Maybe We'll Try It

Watson, pass the needle, and perhaps we'll take a hand at cooking up a few prophecies.

Well, let's see, Joe Schenck and United Artists. Now that he has Sam Goldwyn who will the next one be? H'm'm! Let's see. Well, it might not be going far astray to say that Joe is casting longing eyes at Harold Lloyd. And, who knows, but what after the one Lloyd-Paramount we might find Harold under the United banner.

Wotta line-up for United! Heh?

Balaban and Katz. There can't be a week without a Balaban and Katz rumor. We could give you a BIG ONE, but instead will just hand out a little minnow. Supposing some one said that B. & K. were negotiating to buy the Butterfield circuit. Of course there is many a slip between the negotiations and the dotted line, but—really, it is not so much the heat as it is the humidity, isn't it?

Poli ought to be good for a rumor. They have been selling the circuit to Famous for some six months in the rumor columns and finally Sylvester came out with a flat denial. That apparently clinches matters. But then, new deals can always start up the day after old denials. And wouldn't it be a good idea for Nick Schenck to get in this theater-buying scramble? Sure, that's it. Let's have a deal on between Loew and Poli.

Famous? Shucks, write your own ticket. Jot down the wildest things your imagination can conceive—and ten to one they come true.

The battle of the giants is on. It's at the "crooshial" stage. Pull up close to the ringside!

Who Said "Big Three?"

Who said "Big Three? Make it "Big Four"—and give Bill Fox a seat right in the middle.

This West Coast deal is just one sample of what Bill Fox is after. That it slipped through his hands was no fault of his. He was ready with CASH and the ability to act quickly. Some tall Robert Lieber diplomacy and persuasiveness—a strong share of "loyalty to the gang" on the part of Lesser, et al, are all that can be blamed.

But Bill Fox isn't stopping there. He still has those unlimited financial resources, he still has the imagination that will conceive wholesale deals of the scope of the West Coast proposition.

Consign to the waste-basket one phrase—"Big Three." Worn out, obsolete. Make it "Big Four" if you want to, but whatever you do, keep Bill Fox right up there with the biggest of the big.

Odds and Ends

Somewhere or other we read a story that Famous may sell the Rialto. Sounds fishy, and foolish. Here is the greatest amusement corner in the world. The greatest continuously flowing transient draw that can be conceived.

If a mere editor had anything to say about the matter he'd get a super-vacuum cleaner, overhaul the old shack, refurnish, repaint, redecorate inside and out, and present a show shop worthy of the money-making possibilities of a house at the hub of the universe.

That's what we'd do. But then, who cares?

Those New Jersey boys certainly showed visiting trade paper editors and other guests how to conduct a convention. How to hitch business and pleasure in double harness and get somewhere.

And then capped the Ashbury Park affair with a banquet climax that stands out among similar affairs. When you get Senator Edwards, Governor Silzer, and Nathan Burkan at a single dais you are presenting red meat. Not to omit mention of National President Woodhull and Ray Lewis.

Fred Elliott stuck to the finish. And put over some good work for the independents. Ably assisted by Lin Bonner.

Frank Conklin deserved a vote of thanks that was overlooked in the rush for his able work in putting over the Water Sports carnival. A big job well handled.

Saw P. A. McGuire of the Nicholas Power Company on the job. Getting in some good propaganda. Projector manufacturers seem to have been neglecting such affairs in recent years. A good sign to see them waking up.

With aides like Leon Rosenblatt, of Bayonne, Charley Hildinger, Sydney Samuelson, Bill Keegan, and a score of others it is no wonder that Joe Seider gets results. And what loyalty they show him!

Putting Over Serials

By Tom Waller

"FIFTY per cent. of the cities and towns where Southern Enterprises' houses are located are today successfully playing serials."

That was the statement Lem Stewart, advertising manager for that corporation's theatre department, made to the writer just the other day. Not only that but two of the Enterprise theatres, both of the Class A and first run type, are now giving serials an important placement on their programs. They are the Newman, Kansas City and the Missouri in St. Louis.

Stewart's factful comment, casually introduced in the course of a general conversation, inspired this delving into the present day status of the film story with the many episodes. It naturally would with the sudden knowledge that this powerful circuit, operating 175 theatres and more throughout the country, was devoting such attention to the serial subject. This again, in view of the talk about quality features and million-dollar production budgets.

Because of the bigness of the circuit and the fact that it is handling serials so successfully, this story is confined mainly to the current methods used by the Southern Enterprises chain in putting over the episodic film. Again, that corporation's system is practically the same as would be advantageously used by any other circuit or individual theatre, so that the perspective reached is just as broad as though the World had combined the opinions of half a dozen managerial heads.

A perusal of the programs in some of the Southern Enterprises theatres, which are no longer confined to the South but now are spreading to all points of the compass, shows that serials by all producers, providing they are passed as meritorious in the home office, are given a "good break."

What is a good serial? Southern Enterprises' executives determine this point in the projection room. When they okay it, the stamp means that such serial is devoid of racial prejudice, exaggerated sensationalism or any other ingredient which might tend to be obnoxious in any degree to the public.

A very important phase which they always bear in mind when previewing a serial is not to be satisfied with the first few introductory reels and those which terminate the story. The rotundity or heart of the episodic film must possess a pleasing continuity as well. If the center lags and is inclined to be boresome, even though the introduction and finish may be splurged with color, then the entire material is rejected.

Why? Because Southern Enterprises realizes that while a serial may create big money in many of its houses it may do something far worse in the opposite extreme.

Take, for instance, as an illustration, a serial that opens up in a good size house. Say also that during its run there it is programmed for Fridays and Saturdays. No matter how much money has been spent in the newspapers, or how clever the exploitation stunts, the success not only of that serial but of the rest of the Friday and Saturday programs as long as it runs depends upon word by mouth advertising.

Thus it is easily seen, and has been the experience of many showmen, that if the serial goes over the crowds pack in no matter what else may be on the screen during that showing.

But—if it spreads about town that the serial is "dead" then the exhibitors experience has been that the crowds stay away even though there may be some widely publicized picture as the feature of the bill.

When the home office of this particular chain books a serial, after putting it through this acid test of exactitude and psychology, it calls attention to the fact to all managers of Enterprises theatres for which it is scheduled. This is done through a small house organ entitled the "Close-Up" but chiefly through an exchange of ideas broadcasted by the home office advertising department.

The managers are instructed to give the serial the same amount of newspaper advertising and publicity space they would the feature picture. Literally, a campaign is conducted for the two weeks preceding the showing of the first episode. This advertising is based mainly on the angle of arousing public curiosity—whetting the edge of fan expectancy for surprises, getting them to gamble as to how the hero and heroine will be placed in the final episode. After this campaign there is practically little or nothing to be done. Then the showman who has booked the serial is dependent upon the wildfire spread of public opinion.

Southern Enterprises leans towards serials based upon historical subjects, providing they are adapted to the screen as authentically as possible. A serial in this respect that holds itself forth as being the correct interpretation of something which may be in every child's text book has to be especially watched. Should it deviate from the version of recognized historians then it not only meets with the condemnation of the faculty but of the student fans as well.

On the contrary, if it sincerely follows its title it affords one of the best screen mediums for co-operative publicity.

With such subjects, Enterprises affects tie-ups with faculties, parent-teachers associations, chambers of commerce and numerous historical societies and welfare organizations. This better class of serial proves itself in many instances to be a big factor in building up a worthwhile patronage.

Southern Enterprises has booked every good serial made during the past seven years, Lem Stewart reveals. In his opinion, and as the records of his corporation show, the popularity of worthwhile serials is the same now as it was during the industry's actual infancy. Noted recent box office successes in the serial field, as determined by the Enterprises, were of the type of the Yale University Press historical series and the "Into the Net" story by Police Commissioner Enright of New York City, both of which were released through Pathe.

More real technique and art are required to produce a good serial then the average feature, Stewart believes. It has been his experience that children are the mainstay of serials, thus Southern Enterprises theatres booking them arrange their programs so that the episode will be on the screen on Friday and Saturday, two days found to be most convenient for the school kiddie to attend the evening show the first day or the matinee on Saturday when the late hour or the afternoon will not interfere with [illegible] lessons.

France Alarmed Over Foreign Films

By W. Stephen Bush

THE French organization which is a sort of film parliament and represents the interests of the industry as a whole is known as the "Chambre Syndicale Française de la Cinematographie." This powerful and well directed society was recently petitioned by some of its own members to find ways and means of "stopping the dangers to the French motion picture industry arising from the steady growth of foreign films and the continued acquisition of French motion picture houses by foreign film companies." The word American was not mentioned but everybody knows that when Europeans speak of foreign films they invariably mean the American kind. The conversion of an old and well-known Parisian legitimate theatre into a first class motion picture house to be conducted on the American plan was the primary cause of the alarm and protest. The high brow critics of some of the big dailies simply have been tearing their hair over what they were pleased to call the desecration of "this historic temple of French art."

The Chambre Syndicale held a meeting recently to consider the questions brought up by the protest against the foreign invasion. This meeting it seems developed some mighty interesting facts. Though it was held behind closed doors enough has leaked out to get an idea of what happened. First of all it was quickly discovered that the interests within the organization depending directly or indirectly on American films and their import were really in the ascendant.

Some plain if unpalatable truths were handed out during the discussion as frequently happens when no reporters are around. Thus one of the speakers pointed out that the real danger to the French film industry was overtaxation as much as the present predominance of the foreign film. Another speaker freely criticized the shortcomings of the native productions. He was the owner of several theatres and apt to know just what the French public wanted. "We make too many weeping films in France," he said, "we indulge too much sickly sentimentality. Our people may like the sentimental but they cannot be expected to do nothing but cry for a couple of hours. We must provoke not only tears but laughter as well. For this reason I for one declare that the American comedies are necessary to the French theatre owner if he wants the people to come to his theatre."

There were speakers on the other side, however, who were quite sure that something must be done about the foreign competition and they mentioned not only American but German films. At the end of the discussion nobody was really satisfied and the not unusual course of appointing a committee was finally thought to be the best way out. It is most unlikely that this committee, which was duly and solemnly appointed, will ever be heard from again. Similar symptoms of Yankeephobia must be reported from other European countries.

The little group of Italian producers who dream away the sunny days of spring, met at Turin and passed a resolution asking the Italian government to double the tariff on all foreign films and to exempt all native productions from any taxation whatever "in order to build up the home industry."

The attitude of Germany toward American films is notoriously hostile and the government is constantly tinkering with the tariff and inventing all sorts of regulations and restrictions to hinder the import of our films. If they were not afraid of reprisals and if the native output of quantity at least were within 30 per cent of supplying the domestic needs the Germans would in all likelihood bar our films absolutely.

Poor Austria always on the point of breathing its last comes along with a proposal made by a small coterie of producers to levy a tax of $300 on every foreign film, regardless of every thing. Really one may stay in Europe for years without ever being able to discover the curious workings of the European mind. The folks here evidently cannot grasp the patent fact that no government can create films of better quality and that no legislation will in the long run keep out foreign films of merit. The only way to create entertainment values with an international drawing power is to use the right directors, the right stories, the right stars, the right technical equipments. All other recipes are futile just as futile as the constantly recurring effort to belittle American success by attributing it to "luck" or to superior financial resuorces.

Europe has money enough, but is either afraid to spend it on films or spends it foolishly as has been the case in Italy with disastrous results.

British capital under the guidance of Frank Tilley has formed a business allliance with a German firm for producing and distributing films of international range and value. The first film made under this arrangement has just been completed. It is based on a story by Sir Philip Gibbs. The scenes have been taken partly in Germany and partly in Italy. The cast was recruited from the U. S. A., the British Isles, France, Austria and Germany. The American names in the cast do not sound very familiar.

The same German firm also in connection with British interests has sent an expedition into India to make a film there to be known as "The Life of Buddha." According to reports now coming in from this expedition good progress is being made. All the principal points of India where atmosphere for the film can be obtained are being visited. The costumes are said to have been made by native talent, ancient and authentic patterns being used and insuring in this regard at least a maximum of historical accuracy. Only natives will be permitted to take part in the actual representations. The film will not be finished until fall when the expedition will return to Europe by way of Bombay.

In many of the great dailies of Paris and Berlin a large sized advertisement has appeared and continues to appear at irregular intervals which is exciting considerable interest in film circles. The "ad" says there are "one hundred rich cash buyers who want to purchase motion picture theatres." "We will buy," the text goes on to say, "motion picture houses anywhere, big ones or little ones. We will also pay cash for options on good sites. Will consider purchase of houses that have been forced to close or houses that for lack of capital were never finished." There is something distinctly American about the style of the "ad." It is signed by well-known and responsible brokers, but the principals can only be guessed at.

Coming and Going

Carl Laemmle and his son and daughter sailed for Europe on July 8.

Colleen Moore, First National star, paused six days in New York on her return from six weeks in Europe. She arrived from abroad on July 3.

Henry Ginsberg of the Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation will arrive in New York later in July from the West Coast, after visiting some of the key cities.

Jackie and Robert Coogan and Mrs. Coogan arrived in Los Angeles this week after seven weeks in New York. Jackie's next will be "Old Clothes," a sequel to "The Rag Man," and he will begin work on it shortly.

E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of Famous Players, has sailed for Europe. He expects to return about Septembre 1.

Harry Rathner, president of Astor Distributing Corporation, left New York last week for Milwaukee, St. Louis and Los Angeles.

Edgar B. Hatrick, general manager of International Newsreel and vice-president of Cosmopolitan Productions, returned this week from a six weeks' trip to Europe.

Greta Garbo, Swedish player, and Mauritz Stiller, director, have arrived in New York to join Metro-Goldwyn. They will go to the West Coast in about two weeks.

W. J. Morgan, sales manager of Producers' Distributing Corporation, is in Chicago and will visit other western exchange cities.

Bebe Daniels, Harrison Ford and company under the direction of Frank Tuttle have gone to Bermuda to film exteriors on "Lovers in Quarantine."

Charles Beahan of the Producers' Distributing Corporation scenario department has gone to the West Coast to study production.

Buffalo Zone Turns Down Movie Season

Members of the Buffalo Zone, M. P. T. O., of N. Y., following the refusal of local exchanges to defray one-third of the cost of putting over the Greater Movie Season project, have turned down the plan, so that the organization will not be behind the Movie Season. At the recent meeting of the zone it was decided to get behind the plan if the distributors will come through with a third of the costs and a communication was sent to the exchanges asking if they would be willing to do this. The exchanges refused.

However most of the leading downtown exhibitors held a meeting and decided to go ahead with the campaign themselves. Al Beckerich, manager of the Loew State, was named chairman. The following are among the exhibitors and houses which signed up at the meeting: Walter Hays, Victoria; Vincent R. McFaul, Shea's Hippodrome; M. Slotkin and Fred M. Shafer, Lafayette Square; Jake Rappaport, Lovejoy; William Dillemuth, Broadway Lyceum; J. H. Michael, Regent; F. Nowak, Lincoln; Barney Pohwinkle, Oriole and N. Vassiliadis, Clinton-Strand. These exhibitors subscribed liberally to the fund.

Greater Movie Season Gets N. Y. Support Hays Reports

Fifty thousand dollars for the New York Greater Movie Season campaign.

Marcus Loew elected chairman of the executive committee, with Joseph Plunkett, managing-director of the Mark-Strand Theatre, and Charles O'Reilly, president of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, as his principal aides.

Wells Hawks appointed general manager in charge of local activities.

These were the salient results of the final meeting between nationally important figures in the exhibiting field and Will H. Hays, president of Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., who inaugurated the August drive.

The Fabian circuit in New Jersey stands aligned with the national plan, A. M. Fabian has informed Hays.

"Greater Movie Season is a wonderful idea," stated Fabian. "Our entire circuit will be behind the movement. We have already instructed our publicity department to lay plans for the greatest movie season New Jersey has ever known."

A complete survey, according to the Hays statement, of the field shows that 73 cooperative campaigns are in active operation with 2,745 theatres cooperating.

Warner Bros. Take Over Orpheum in Chicago

The second official announcement concerning the theatre activities of Warner Bros., came this week in a statement that they have closed a contract for the taking over of the Orpheum, in Chicago

The final arrangements were perfected between Sam E. Morris, general manager in charge of distribution for Warner Bros., and Aaron Jones, of Jones, Linick & Shaefer, owners of the theatre, when Mr. Morris was in Chicago recently.

Suspension!

Enforcement of the new film tax and censorship law in Connecticut, which was to have begun on July 8, has been suspended pending determination of its constitutionality, as raised by the two test cases, details of which appear elsewhere in this issue.

Fitzpatrick-McElroy Get All Mich. City, Ind., Theatres

Fitzpatrick & McElroy of Chicago, have purchased the controlling interest in the property, business and operation of all motion picture theatres in Michigan City, Indiana.

By the deal which has just been completed with Wallerstein Brothers, Fitzpatrick & McElroy have further extended the holdings of their circuit by adding Indiana to the other three states in which they are so well represented—Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. At the same time four new theatres, are added to the chain and the total seating capacity increased 3,500.

On July first this circuit took over the operation of the Tivoli, a combination vaudeville and picture house, and the Starland, Dreamland and Willard devoted to motion pictures exclusively.

Associated with them in the Michigan City transaction are local banking and property interests represented by Dr. Lebetter, M. O. Cushman, and Harry Katz, brother of Sam Katz, president of the Balaban & Katz interests.

BERINSTEIN APPOINTED

B. N. Berinstein of Los Angeles has been designated a member of the Executive Committee at Large of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. Mr. Berinstein was for several years a member of the official family of the national organization.

Famous Gets Five Rothchild Houses; West Coast Deal Off

The five Market Street theatres controlled by the Herbert Rothchild Entertainment have been acquired by Famous Players-Lasky and the management will pass over to the producing organization as soon as the necessary papers can be drawn up and signed.

The houses included in the deal, one of the most important of its kind ever made in San Francisco, include the California, Granada, Imperial, Strand and New Portola, a chain that has been developed from the success of the old Portola Theatre.

The producing organization first attempted to secure control of West Coast Theatres, Inc., whose leading local house is Loew's Warfield Theatre, but these negotiations were not consummated.

No changes are planned at present in the management, Ed Baron remaining in direct charge of the five houses. It is expected, however, that Sam Denbow, who has been purchasing film for the chain, will be transferred to New York.

The Strand Theatre property was purchased outright by the Rothchild interests some time ago and has since been transferred to the new owners. This house has been closed for remodeling and will be re-opened as the St. Francis Theatre as soon as the work is completed.

Hays Heads Fight to Enjoin Conn. From Enforcing New Tax-Censor Law

M. P. P. D. A. Establishes Bureau for All Exhibitor Statistics—Pettijohn and Dept. of Justice Sound Showmen on Status of Film Boards of Trade

By Tom Waller

HOW a battle will be waged to restrain the State of Connecticut from enforcing its new law on taxation and censorship, on the ground that the infant statute is unconstitutional.

The birth of a new bureau in the Hays organization defined as an ABC in exhibitor statistics.

The collaboration of a Department of Justice Agent and Attorney John Pettijohn in compiling a letter to determine national exhibitor sentiment on the status of Film Boards of Trade, resultant in the Hays office hearing from about 90 per cent of those showmen queried in the thirty-two trade zones.

These were the subjects made known and discussed at a conference early this week among executives of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association of America and members of the trade press. Courtlandt Smith, Will Hays' assistant, then revealed that this is the first of a series of such confabs when "cards will be laid on the table" and the trade papers will be able to get a "low down" in unison on things as viewed in the M. P. P. D. A. camp.

Connecticut Test Cases

Cases to test the validity of the new Connecticut statute, favorable decisions for which would mean the literal shelving of this law, will soon be tried in the United States District Court. Gabriel Hess, of the Hays legal staff, stated that complaints in this respect have already been filed. Of the plaintiffs in these actions the William Fox Film Corporation and the American Feature Film Company of Boston, are two. The defendants named include the following Connecticut officials: Governor John H. Trumbull, Tax Commissioner Blodgett, Deputy Tax Commissioner John J. Splain, Commissioners of Police Robbins B. Stoeckel, Frederick W. Salmon and Ernest L. Isbel; Superintendant of Police Robert T. Hurley.

The plaintiffs mentioned will typify to the court the different conditions under which pictures are distributed in the Nutmeg state, Hess said, since the first is a member of the M. P. P. D. A. and subject to its methods while the second is not, consequently working under another system.

Primarily the battle against the enforcement of the new law will be based upon the ground that it is unconstitutional. Since the statute with the Governor's approval was placed upon the state ledger and cannot be eradicated unless such action is taken by the legislature, the aggressive forces will seek what will amount to a permanent injunction. Should this be secured it will provide all the relief that would accompany a direct repeal.

Of the many points of contention which will be introduced in the course of a clash of legal talent, a most brilliant array of which will be headed by George W. Wickersham for the showmen, an outstanding one will be that shipments are an interstate transaction and are therefore not subject to taxation. As to the relegating of censorship to the police, plaintiff counsel will maintain, Hess said, that the determining of whether or not a picture is offensive is not within the judicial province of guardians of the law.

The first round in court will be staged in New Haven on July 10 before Judges Rogers, Gavin and Thatcher. Wickersham, noted New York lawyer who has been retained by the Hays organization, will be aided in his argument by Benedict M. Holden of Hartford. They will oppose the State's Attorney General and his battery of counsel.

Smith said that he had the assurance of the M. P. P. D. A.'s special attorneys that the film men should meet with victory. He was not aprehensive over the outcome from the present perspective of things. Should the court decree the law to be successfully effective, then, Hays' assistant stated, the outcome might prove fatal in its reflective action, nationally.

In this connection it was brought out by Hess that at least twenty prominent newspapers in the state have come out with editorial emphasis against the law. He said that Connecticut represents about two per cent of the entire intake from the film industry.

Should the law become effective the penalty is $100 or sixty days or both for a violation of any of its clauses.

Exhibitor Statistics Bureau

The Department of Exhibitor Statistical Information is the latest leaf to be added to the Hays organization booklet. This new bureau is presided over by Bert New, a man who has been prominent in many affairs having a national bearing. Everything relative to the film showmen, from their number to the seating capacity of their houses, will be corraled by Mr. New. This information will be on file in the Hays office ready for public inspection at any time.

Figures and facts will be its motto, according to Attorney Pettijohn. The status, politically, of a town and state will also comprise a place on its file cards. The goal of this innovation is to provide any exhibitor anywhere with a perfect defense.

Already New, it was announced, has compiled the correct names and addresses of 14,000 exhibitors. He expects that this list will run over 16,000.

In order to keep the list up to the minute in accuracy secretaries of Film Boards of Trade have been instructed to check-up on the showmen in their zone every thirty days. The check-up will then be compared to the original files in the Hays office when any necessary changes will be made.

Thus, if John Jones runs a first run house out in Tucson, Ariz., with 1,000 seats, pays $50 tax, has open Sunday and possesses so many playdates, all this is scheduled to be made known in the Hays bureau.

The bureau, if carried out according to present plans, is promised not only to be a boon to every one in the film industry, but also as a particularly good aid to matters up for legislation. Smith stressed this point in declaring that the bureau was created as a help to exhibitors.

Film Board Opinions

With the $300,000 action filed recently by an Ohio exhibitor developed the news that Department of Justice agents were investigating Film Boards of Trade. Pettijohn con-

How Conn. Tax Will Be Imposed

Describing the method of collecting the new Connecticut tax, Deputy Commissioner Splaine said: "Each film dealer will be required to obtain state seals at my office. All film packages brought into the state must have one of these seals attached, showing that tax has been paid. Shipments that do not bear these seals will be direct violations of the law and in all such instances penalties as provided for in the law will be applied."

Commissioner Blodgett, in a statement said that all applications for registration of films must be presented at his office in the State Capitol in Hartford or to Deputy Commissioner Splaine, whose office is in Poli's Palace Theatre Building, New Haven, at least seven days before the delivery of a subject for exhibition.

Each application must be accompanied by payment of the amount of the tax due the state. At the time of registration there will be assigned to each film a serial number and it is to be placed on the reels' container. The number also is to be filmed and attached to the first reel immediately after the opening title.

Eighty Letters on Film Boards' Status

firmed the report of this investigation saying that the boards had afforded the agents every means of co-operation.

One agent, the Hays attorney said, called at the M. P. P. D. A. headquarters. After going over the books he questioned Pettijohn, the lawyer stated, as to what the national sentiment was regarding the Film Boards of Trade.

The lawyer said he replied that ninety-five per cent of exhibitors throughout the country approved the trade units.

Pettijohn quoted himself as suggesting that a letter be sent out to substantiate his percentage. The agent is credited with having agreed and having aided Pettijohn in the compiling of this note.

Copies of this letter were then mailed to the presidents of the Film Boards of Trade in their prospective zones, thirty-two in all, throughout the country. The secretaries of each board were instructed to request three representative exhibitors in a zone to express their opinions in a letter to the Hays organization.

Within thirty days after the mailing of the letter requesting these opinions, or this week, Pettijohn stated he is in receipt of about 80 of the total 96.

These replies were on the table before the trade press representative at the conference. Of those which he read the writer found only a few which were unalterably opposed to the board system.

The most important excerpts from the majority of these replies, excluding through courtesy the names of the authors, are as follows:

I will say that I don't think a hell of a lot of it. It seems to me, from my personal observation, that it is becoming an enforcement, as well as a collective agency.

Where a man is oversold on price or quantity, the Arbitration Board should have the privilege of adjusting prices and scaling the number of pictures down to what is reasonable and fair.

Oral testimony should be permitted before the Board, even if it is only the word of the exhibitor against that of the salesman. It would be up to the Board of Trade to determine the truth and act accordingly.

However, with all of its disadvantages toward the exhibitor, I feel that the Board of Arbitration has proved a good thing for the industry as a whole, for in the rigid enforcement of contracts, exhibitors have been taught that they can't go out and tie up most of the pictures in the market, to the disadvantage of his competitor, never intending to play them at all.

I have only had one experience with the Board, but the treatment I received from them was certainly all that anyone could ask, and I am sure that I should like to see it continue as at present.

Having been a member, as an exhibitor, of the arbitration board, I feel that I am qualified and able to say that I consider the Arbitration Plan, adopted by the Exhibitors and Distributors, as the only fair way to settle disputes and protect both the distributors and exhibitors.

In all the cases that were taken up before the Board while I was a member, while 95 per cent. of the cases were decided in favor of the distributor, I feel that the exhibitors were also very fair in deciding these cases impartially. There are so many angles to our business and so many controversies that come up from time to time between exhibitor and distributor that this is the only known method that I know of, where these matters can be taken care of.

1. How has it affected the exchanges? It has put their work upon a definite basis which enables them to count upon the playing of all pictures for which they have the proper contracts with the exhibitors. It has led to the prompt playing of pictures bought for the reason that exhibitors have felt that they must live up to their agreements. It has given the exchanges a force which can be applied to the unfair exhibitors in that a great many exhibitors do not desire the publicity of being brought before their brother exhibitors for unfair methods and breaches of contract. It has also called to the attention of exchange managers, the unethical and sometimes dishonest method used by salesmen with the result that there is a better class of salesmen in this territory than before the coming of the Board.

2. How has it affected the exhibitors? The greatest benefit I have noted is that it has ended the practice of so many exhibitors of overbuying either through ignorance or the desire to "sew up the product" in a particular town. It has also led to more businesslike methods upon the part of exhibitors in keeping to their obligations and responsibilities. It has enabled the small exhibitor, who formerly had little redress against a large producer or distributor, to have his complaints heard and adjusted as the equities and justice of the case required. In the past this would have meant expensive and long-delayed legal action for him.

New Film Boards

Canada will have four Film Boards of Trade since the Dominion now possesses six distributing depots, the M. P. P. D. A. made known this week.

Arrangements are now being made, it was also revealed, for the establishment of a board in Mexico City

Charleston, West Va., has just been made the seat of a trade board. This was done for the convenience of the exhibitors in that territory and upon their own request, Attorney Pettijohn stated.

3. How has it affected the industry as a whole in this territory? I believe that it has been of great good in smoothing out all sorts of difficulties and in the promotion of better feeling between exhibitors and exchanges. As I see it, it has been a good thing from many angles and I favor its continuance.

I do not hesitate to give my unqualified approval to the work that has been and is being done by our efficient organization. I am sure that this medium of solving the exhibitors' and distributors' problems is the only feasible and fair method of arbitration.

It is my opinion that the Arbitration Board of this Film Board is just this—judge and jury—settling all cases to their own satisfaction. It is an illegal combine in restraint of trade and should be handled as any other violation of the law, both criminally and civilly.

Personally I think it is a God-send to the Film Industry and the light is gradually breaking in on those who yet have to realize that times have changed, and that fairness in the Film business is coming into its own through the medium of the Arbitration Boards.

The members of the Joint Boards of Arbitration have been very fair-minded and have been a real help in adjusting what otherwise might have proved to be a serious situation.

It is a real pleasure for me to reply to your letter and assure you that my experience with the above mentioned Board has absolutely convinced me that they are acting without ANY partiality between exhibitor and film exchanges, and with an absence of any political influence to govern their services in any way.

On Arbitration in this zone, will say that I believe that it has been for some time past, and is now being carried out fairly, impartially and successfully and functioning to the best interests of the majority.

It has been the opinion of the Kunsky organization ever since these boards were established that they had filled a long felt want, and had brought about a feeling of friendliness and good will between the exhibitor and the distributor, which was sadly lacking for many years.

From what I hear from the other exhibitors who have attended the board meetings it is my impression that the board functions with great success locally at least.

I believe that the Arbitration Board in this district has been working for the good of both the exhibitors and exchanges, and that the work of this board has saved money for both interests.

This idea is based on my knowledge that litigation in court is very expensive and very tedious, and practically all of the troubles in our trade have been and can be settled before the Board of Arbitration.

Arbitration is in my opinion one of the great steps in the advancement of the moving picture industry.

It is my opinion that the Oklahoma Joint Board of Arbitration is doing some real, constructive work in the industry in this State and from my experience and observation it is my opinion that all representatives on this Board have been conscientious and fair in their decisions on claims.

As you know, I have been a member of the Arbitration Board since its birth, and I can truthfully say that every case has been handled in an honest and just manner by the arbitrators. This Board has its drawbacks, but with the co-operation of the Film Board of Trade I am sure that these difficulties can be ironed out to everyone's satisfaction.

You will no doubt recall your requesting my opinion as to what I think of the functioning of the Oklahoma City Film Board of Trade and the Oklahoma Joint Board of Arbitration.

Both of these organizations have been a great help in alleviating some very trying situations which the writer had thought were due to remain with the film business forever, inasmuch as all previous attempts to put matters on a business-like basis had failed.

The spirit of co-operation and a desire to do some real, constructive work for both the exchanges and the theatre owners, I am happy to say, seems to be the controlling factor in both of the above organizations.

The Joint Board of Arbitration has been functioning very effectively and satisfactorily and is doing a great work in adjusting the difficulties between distributors and exhibitors at a tremendous financial saving in avoiding the law courts as well as effecting more amicable settlements of disputes between the distributors and exhibitors.

It has been my experience, and I have served on the Arbitration Board occasion-

Seider Hurls Defy at Hays Lawyer's Claim of Film Boards' Efficiency

Milwaukee Demonstrated True Sentiment of U. S. Exhibitors Declares M. P. T. O. A. Executive—Calls 80 Letters "Nullity"—Bares Burkan-Hess Contract Talk

By TOM WALLER

DECLARING that Film Boards of Trade and Boards of Arbitration cannot function satisfactorily and successfully until an equitable contract, approved by exhibitors as well as producers and distributors, is established, Joseph M. Seider, chairman of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America's committee on contract and arbitration, puts himself on record as stamping the eighty letters received by the Hays' organization as a nullity in true significance.

Seider's opinion was sought by the writer after Attorney Pettijohn had made the statement to the trade press early this week, the story of which appears elsewhere in this issue, that he had told a Department of Justice agent that fully 95 per cent of exhibitors throughout the country favor Film Boards of Trade.

In a lengthy interview with Moving Picture World the chairman of the National committee on contract and arbitration laid bare an alleged conference between Attorney Gabriel Hess, of the Hays organization and Lawyer Nathan Burkan on the latter's contract. Hess is credited with having objected strenuously to its clause, providing for the designation of playdates and contending that the exhibitor, to use the words of Seider, "has no right to dictate or request particular clauses in a contract."

In the course of the interview Seider quoted at length the clause referred to. Incidentally, this is the first time any verbatim account of the widely discussed Burkan project has been obtained for publication. So that there may be no possible misconstruence of Seider's viewpoint on this subject we submit his answer to us directly to you as follows:

"The present contract speaks for itself. Time and again we have pointed out what was wrong with it and we have admitted what was good in it. The same goes for arbitration.

"The demonstration against the present contract and system of arbitration at the Milwaukee convention during the discussion of these matters shows clearly the inaccuracy of the statement by Mr Pettijohn to the Department of Justice agent that 95 per cent. of the theatre owners of the country are satisfied with the present Film Boards of Trade and their method of arbitration.

"Why does not the Hays organization show wherein we are wrong, instead of submitting eighty letters?

"We can obtain and submit hundreds of letters showing the opposite view. We do not say that those who speak in the affirmative for the present arbitration system are entirely wrong. Because, based on the old method of arbitration and the '57 varieties of contract' as expressed by Charles O'Reilly, the improvement is tremendous. Naturally, instead of only exchangemen sitting and judging the theatre owner and deciding what they want to do with him, it is very helpful to have an equal number of exhibitors with an equal number of exchangemen do this. But yet the present system is very bad for the theatre owner.

"First—The Film Boards of Trade control the arbitration system and the Film Boards of Trade are controlled by the Hays organization. The Hays organization denies this—yet Mr. Pettijohn is general counsel and Mr. Hess is general attorney. It cannot be disputed that both of these gentlemen are connected with the Hays organization.

"Second—To this not only theatre owners have objection but many independent producers, as is manifested by the withdrawal of Mr. Bromberg in Atlanta.

"Third—The exhibitor has not the right to select his own arbitrators. They are appointed for him.

"Fourth—When a judgment is rendered against the theatre owner the judgment is not carried out through the due process of law. The theatre owner is practically deprived of his property through all the exchanges, members of the Film Boards of Trade refusing to sell or deliver him pictures until the award is carried out.

"Fifth—The producer, it is contended, punished when he fails to carry out the award of the arbitration board through further arbitration being denied him. This tends to prove emphatically that the Film Boards of Trade and arbitration boards as now constituted are purely collection agencies for the distributors.

"Sixth—The contract itself is inequitable. It has been characterized by a New Jersey judge as a 'one way street' favoring the distributors.

"Seventh—Arbitration as constituted today is litigation—not arbitration. It defeats the very purpose of arbitration. Instead of the arbitrators attempting to mediate or adjust or decide the dispute for the disputing parties, they constitute themselves a court and rule on questions of law and give judicial verdicts.

"Eighth—An inheritance from the old system of motion picture arbitration is the so-called Part One of the present arbitration method. Here a judgment is rendered against an exhibitor who does not appear or refuses to arbitrate, and film is refused him in accordance with the terms of this biased contract.

"The law is very clear on this last subject. When a man agrees in his contract to arbitrate an order can be obtained compelling arbitration. Of course the contract containing this arbitration agreement must be fair and equitable or the court should not uphold any clause in such a contract.

"Perhaps this is what the distributor is afraid of and this is the reason for this Part One proceeding which amounts, in the opinion of many theatre owners, to their being coerced into paying for peace and the pursuit of their business endeavors.

"These are not all our objections. They will serve, I think, to indicate some of our major contentions.

"Just recently I had an interesting talk with Mr. Burkan. He told me that he had submitted his contract to the Hays organization and that Mr. Hess claimed that the exhibitors and the Hays organization at their recent conferences on the re-drafting of the uniform contract had agreed upon the major points in the dispute.

"This is not so. We did not agree and our negotiations were not concluded. At the very outset of my report rendered at the Milwaukee convention I emphatically stated this fact.

"Mr. Burkan tells me that Mr. Hess' main objection was to the clause that covers the designation of playdates. I also went fully into this subject in my national convention report.

"It cannot be disputed that this is a very vexatious problem—one which must be solved. What better solution can there be for this particular and very important phase than this clause in the Burkan contract which is as follows:

Elliott Pledge

At the meeting this week of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America Managing Director Frederick Elliott announced the appointment of a committee to confer with the M. P. T. O. A.'s committee on an equitable contract. This is Elliott's first move to fulfill his pledge made last week at the New Jersey convention. The committee appointed, composed of three members, will be made known next week.

Challenges Hays to Meet Contentions

FOURTH—The exhibition date of each such photoplay, which has not otherwise herein been specified, shall be fixed as follows:

(a) For all purposes under this contract, the release date of such photoplay shall be construed to be the date when such photoplay shall have been exhibited for the first time in a first-run theatre in the key city in the district in which the theatre herein is located.

Prompt notice of such exhibition date and the date of the expiration of the protection period of said first-run theatre shall be given to the exhibitor.

From and after the date of the expiration of such protection period (not to exceed —— days) such photoplay shall forthwith become available to the exhibitor for exhibition under this contract.

(b) If the exhibitor is entitled to a first-run of such photoplay, the exhibitor shall fix an exhibition date, such date to be within a period not exceeding three (3) weeks following the expiration of the protection period aforementioned. If the date of exhibition so fixed by the exhibitor shall not be available because of insufficiency of positive prints, the distributor shall so notify the exhibitor and the exhibitor thereupon shall have an additional period of seven (7) days within which to fix such exhibition date. The notice of the exhibitor, fixing the exhibition date as aforementioned, shall be given to the distributor at least two (2) weeks prior to such exhibition date.

If the exhibitor shall fail to fix such exhibition date in the manner above provided, the distributor shall, promptly after the expiration of three (3) weeks following the protection period, fix such exhibition date such date to be within two weeks following such three (3) week period, and in such case the date so fixed by the distributor shall, for all purposes hereunder, be deemed the exhibition date of such photoplay.

(c) In case the exhibitor shall have a run subsequent to a first-run, then the exhibitor's exhibition date of such photoplay shall be fixed in like manner as hereinabove provided for the exhibition with respect to a first-run, except that all periods shall run from the date of the expiration of the protection period of the exhibitor having a run immediately prior to that of the exhibitor named in this contract.

(d) In the event any of such photoplays shall not be exhibited in a first-run theatre in the key city in the territory embracing the theatre herein, within a reasonable time after its production, and within such period no definite booking therefor shall have been fixed by any such first-run theatre, then the distributor obligates itself to fix a general release date which shall be within a reasonable time after the completion of the production of such photoplay and such release date so fixed shall be deemed to be the release date for all purposes under this article. Said photoplay shall thereupon forthwith after such date become available for exhibition under this contract, with the same force and effect as if such release date were the date of expiration of the protection period hereinabove in the preceding subdivision referred to.

(e) In case this contract shall embrace a series of feature photoplays five reels or more in length and featuring a particular star or director, the exhibitor shall not be required hereunder to exhibit more than one photoplay of such series every five (5) weeks.

(f) So far as the same may be feasible, the distributor agrees to release the photoplays embraced hereunder at equal intervals apart, to the end that the exhibitor shall be enabled to exhibit such photoplays so far as practicable, over the entire term of this contract, at approximately equal intervals.

"Mr. Burkan tells me in this never-to-be-forgotten talk we had during the banquet in Asbury Park last week that Mr. Hess argued that the exhibitor has no right to dictate or request particular clauses in a contract. Mr. Hess contended that in every other line of business the seller makes his contract and the buyer either buys under its terms or not.

"How can you apply this argument to this business of ours? In this business all the distributors got together and decided to use one procedure under which the exhibitor must buy—or he cannot buy at all. Thus the exhibitor has no chance of buying from the man who gives him a squarer deal. Every distributor uses the same selling methods and the exhibitor has no alternative. He must take it or leave it.

"All the eighty letters which the Hays organization has obtained cannot measure up to the statement of one man—Sol Raives. He has given up all of his time to arbitration. He is a true exponent of the principle of arbitration and has been tied up with it for the past four years.

"Raives tells us that the reason there is not a greater realization of the seriousness of this situation—of this one-sided contract, the bad rules governing arbitration—is because arbitrators work so hard and exert super-human efforts to obtain a square deal for the theatre owner before the arbitration board in spite of the one-sided contract on arbitration rules.

"He holds out to us the promise of so much better arbitration if we establish an equitable contract and fair system of arbitration.

"Mr. Burkan's contract is a masterpiece. I said that before and I say it again. However, I do not consider it a solution because he has not gone far enough.

"This comment may appear laughable in view of the attitude taken by Mr. Hess in his action in rejecting Mr. Burkan's contract.

"But, bear this in mind. We cannot go half way on this proposition. We must bridge all our differences with a single sweep. A concession and the giving to us of half our rights would temporarily appease. This, however, would only throw further into the future the solution of this problem which is so necessary for the safeguarding of our investments.

"Just as getting exhibitor participation in arbitration without correcting the fundamental wrongs, only tended to give apparent legal sanction to an illegality and further delaying a solution, just so would our accepting a compromise without getting down to the solution protract safety, a square deal and the buying and selling on a mutual basis of confidence.

"Why do the distributors fear so much the establishment of a fair and equitable contract?

"It cannot be that they do not want fair dealing. I am inclined to believe that they judge the theatre owner not as he is today, but as he was in 1910.

"It now takes real money to even lease a small house. The theatre owner is now financially responsible. He has 'graduated from the store front type of 'movie.' He has a big investment at stake.

"The exhibitor ranks of today are filled with men from all walks of life and while the exhibitor end of the business has grown the opinion of the distributor for the theatre owner has not kept pace. We find distributors applying the 1910 customs to the 1925 exhibitors.

"The distributor can well afford to give up the advantage held by him over the exhibitor through the control of a contract and arbitration.

"The theatre owner is an appreciative sort, so hungry for the respect to which he is entitled that I have often seen a showman buy from a salesman only because he has addressed him as 'Mister.'

"We even have exhibitors praising the present arbitration system because it is such an improvement over its predecessor.

"The establishment of a fair contract and arbitration will go further than is now apparent. Strip both the exhibitor and the distributor from the fear which they now have for each other. Then the natural course of evolution will do the rest. By this I mean that the barterings in the buying and selling of pictures will be eliminated.

"Both parties will sooner come to the point and a fair rental price will be sooner agreed upon under a live and let live policy. Unlike, as illustrated in the Gleichman case where neither party would give and take, according to the trial justice—let us have a give and take method of doing business."

Saw 61,027 Posters

During the first six months of 1925, Martin Singher of Montreal, theatre poster censor of that city, examined 61,027 posters and other display signs for use in theatre lobbies and stands and of this number 54,465 pieces were accepted, 6,562 posters being rejected. The report for the period ending June 30 issued by Mr. Singher thus reveals that more than 10 per cent. of theatre posters were banned by him.

Receipts for the examination of all posters during the six months totaled $1,743. The report gives figures for each of the six months and it is shown that June was the record month, no less than 12,777 posters being examined in that month, of which 899 were refused the official stamp of approval. The total number of posters examined month by month makes enlightening data: January, 9,769; February, 9,000; March, 9,597; April, 9,630; May, 10,253; June, 12,777.

The friends and associates of Louis Rosenbluh, executive of New York Exchange of Fox Film Corporation, gathered recently at the Hotel Astor at a farewell dinner tendered in his honor prior to his departure for Europe, for a much deserved rest.

Among those present were Harry Thomas, vice-president and general manager of Merit Film Corporation; Abe Blumstein, general manager of Commonwealth Film Corporation; Al Marstyn, prominent New York exhibitor; Ben Levine, general manager of Oxford Exchange; Dave Gross, of First National; Leo Juskowitz, Joseph J. Felder, Frank Walsh, Adolph Weiss, Nat Furst, Jack Meyers and Moe Sanders.

Louis Phillips, attorney and executive secretary of the F. I. L. M. Club, acted as toastmaster.

Colby Harriman Astounds N. J. Convention With Presentations

World's Specialist Stages Greatest Entertainment Program Asbury Ever Witnessed—His Motto: "Everything for Nothing"

TO Colby Harriman goes the credit for making the entertainment program enjoyed by New Jersey exhibitors last week in Asbury Park one of the most successful ever staged at any convention.

Not only the good songs and shapely dancers and other things which go to make up Harriman's presentations, but the author-composer-manager's exemplary and factful address on "Bringing Broadway to Main Street," wherein were tips on how the small exhibitor could save $400 out of $500, made Moving Picture World's Presentation Editor a big factor for the New Jerseyites.

Harriman did everything for nothing and got practically everything for nothing. The show he staged would have set a vaudeville agency back a few "grands." How to squeeze a dollar and get all the benefit of the untouched fruit was the essence of Colby's address. Below are some of the meaty excerpts:

There are only two streets in the great land of show business—Broadway and Main Street. Both are equal in importance, in prestige. Unfortunately, there has been a wide difference in the tonal quality of the product which carries the brand of the particular street.

We may attribute this difference to a well defined production scheme on one hand, and a fear of one's limitations and under-estimated capabilities on the other. Broadway has had excellent press agents, while many an artistic presentation has bloomed, unseen, unsung, because of a certain timidity on the part of the producer,—in plain words—he has been afraid to place his work in proportionate comparison with that of his Broadway cousin.

Main Street has a right to the best in presentations and there is no logical reason why Broadway should have a monopoly on this newer art. Patrons are patrons no matter where they are, they are just as capable of appreciating the artistic, the better things in program features as the patrons in the metropolis, and in these days of progression in programs it has developed to a point where there is an insistent demand on the theatre manager to incorporate these features in his program surrounding the picture.

But many have attempted to bring the Broadway idea to the Main Street house and have failed. This may be attributed to the lack of attention to the basic principles underlying the inauguration of such ideas. A man who attempts to transplant a full grown tree to a small box, may enjoy the verdure and beauty of the thing for a time, but inevitably it will wither and die, because in transplanting it he thought only of the immediate effect and not of its future growth and flourishing.

I could cite many instances where smaller theatres have tried to present the better things without fixing the foundation. But, when these have been tested and the limitations noted, the type of producion particularly applicable to the theatre can be devised or secured and success accorded its production.

This brings us to the keynote of our argument. It is possible to bring a truly Broadway type of presentation to a smaller theatre or a Main Street house if a proper basic plan is inaugrated. When this transpires the added features will not only be welcomed with an increasing interest but will attract at the box-office.

Presentations, Prologues and Epilogues, and kindred forms of artistic expression in the motion picture theatre have been and are being developed to a degree where it is possible for us to talk standardization, not only in the matter of artistry, but in costs as well. There have been a few persisent producers who have given colossal effort to the work of development, until today, it is possible, after months of testing, trying, eliminating, and adjusting, to be able to present this particular form of production in all theatres.

The cost—which is the most vital element in the whole scheme of things—has now come within the range of common sense. The custom used to be—produce and then figure. Today it is reversed. With basic materials at prices and in such forms as are within the reach of all, the scenic and lighting investiture is comparatively simple. Attractions (artists) offer such a wide range and selection, that these can be secured at prices commensurate with the financial requirements of house overhead.

Presentations pay when properly introduced. There is no reason why they should show a loss and be a millstone around the theatre owner's neck, because with a proper exploitation, tying them up to the program like a short subject, giving them equal attention in the billing, ballyhooing them occasionally, they can be made attractive at the box office, and that means money.

This presentation business is a large one full of problems, and no exhibitor should plunge into it unless he has tied up in some way to a producer or an operating theatre who will set him right in the highway towards the goal.

"Yes," some of you are saying, "that's just it. How can we afford to invest in a production department?" True, that a capable production department costs, but based on personal observation, it has been my good fortune to see the effect of the co-operative arrangement between theatres, whereby a group have arranged with an established production department and either booked the presentation or secured the basic settings for the action which they in turn arranged for locally.

That is one of the sure ways you will be able to bring Broadway to Main Street. There must be a definite basis of operation under the guidance of an experienced producer or a man who has been trained in the rudiments of this new art, who will make the necessary adjustments to permit a proper production of the presentation on stages of limited capacity.

During the past few years, a limited number of us have been experimenting on this very idea, as the presentation has outgrown the locale of Broadway and the larger cities, and how to present these necessary program features in theatres with small stages or crossovers, at a very low cost, and still maintain the artistic quality of the feature, has not only been an interesting study, but has rewarded us by developing into a practical and possible fact.

However, talk will not get the results that actual demonstration can prove. If the the atre owner will only be certain at the outset that he has started on the right foot, the rest of the journey wil be profitable.

Keeping down costs, keeping the quality of the presentation high, watch the quantity, eliminate the danger of over-loading. These are the high-spots.

Report B. & K. Get Big Lynch Chain

The big event of the past week in Chicago movie circles was the reported purchase of the Lynch circuit by Balaban and Katz. The houses reported in the deal are the Tiffin, the Manor Theatre, the Crystal, the Apollo, the Karlov, the Avon, the Milford, the Famous, the Alvin, the York, the Rid, the Plaisance Parkt, the Lucille, the Savoy, the Oakwyn and the Fifth Avenue Theatre in Maywood.

At the Balaban and Katz offices, no one in authority would make a statement regarding the new acquisition.

CHICAGO PLANS $500,000 MOVIE SEASON CAMPAIGN

Mayor William E. Dever and Governor Len Small will be asked by a committee of Chicago motion picture exhibitors, business men, ministers, civic and welfare leaders, to proclaim the month of August, "Greater Movie Season Month," to help bring before the public the value of the screen as an instrument of uplift and education, as well as its worth as an agency of building business in general.

More than $500,000, it is said, will be spent in a unified advertising campaign in Chicago alone. The Chicago exhibitors have raised $50,000 to spend in newspaper advertising, not so much to bring Chicagoans into the theatres, as to clear up any misconceptions that might exist concerning the film industry, and to point out just what the exhibitor of motion pictures means to every community.

ally, that every facility is offered for fair adjustment of disputes between distributors and exhibitors, and that in cases in which exhibitors complained against appearing in person the board's value is incalculable in bettering the relationship between the contending parties.

I believe that the Arbitration Boards of the Film Board of Trade, from my personal experience and observation during the time it has been functioning in this territory, has done wonders in bringing the distributor and exhibitor closer together and settling many grievances without going to court and saving considerable expense to all parties concerned.

The functioning of the Board of Arbitration in this territory is an absolute necessity. Conserving time, expense, good will, with its findings generally promptly accepted, and not to my knowledge has there been an appeal to a Court of Law in the past year.

The Film Board of Arbitration is now in step with like practice in other big business.

It has been a pleasure indeed to have sacrificed from business whatever time has been necessary at these joint meetings and it has been the source of considerable information as well. If there has been any adverse criticism of the actions or decisions of the local board, I feel quite safe in saying that it has been made by those who are misinformed.

In reply to your request for my opinion of the Film Board of Arbitration, I wish to state that I believe it is fulfilling a good purpose.

I believe that exchangemen as well as exhibitors serving on this Board, have given fair and impartial decisions on all questions brought before them.

Permit me to congratulate the Arbitration Board in the theatre work that they are doing by bringing together a more pleasant as well as a businesslike feeling between exhibitor and exchange man.

From casual observation, it appears to me that the Film Board of New Orleans, as well as those in other parts of the country, are operating on a businesslike basis and undoubtedly have gone a long way toward reconciling little differences between exhibitors and exchanges.

As having served for four years as the representative of the Maryland district, I am pleased to say that my associates on the Arbitration Board were fair, capable and conscientious in the decisions rendered to both exhibitor and exchange.

The exchange men, in my opinion, have been more than fair in giving the exhibitors a square deal. As a whole, the Arbitration Board is constructive and an evolution and step for higher business ethics and better understanding and relationship between the exhibitors, producers and exchange men, independent or otherwise.

The cost of the Board is paid by the exchanges voluntarily with none asked from the exhibitor. Exchanges push creation of these boards. Therefore they figure it will benefit them and be worth the cost. Few, very few, of the exhibitor complaints, many just and right, ever come before the boards, as the distance and trouble and the natural peaceable inclination prevent this. Exchanges do not use the Board as much as they do the "bluff" of getting an exhibitor on the carpet and it is an expense to have to go before them. Therefore the exhibitor usually comes across in fine shape and the Board never hears of it.

My candid judgment is that the whole matter is a farce, and ought to be abolished, letting each man fight his own battles in Mississippi. If we had a State organization it might be otherwise. I have never been "up" or threatened, and so my opinion is unbiased. I have every respect for you and your associates, but I cannot see the real need for your board.

First, I believe that it is a poor man's court, an exhibitors' court, where justice is done between the parties in which each is equally represented.

Second, it is the most inexpensive way of settling disputes of which I know and has saved the exhibitor many hundreds of dollars when considered from the standpoint of what it might have cost him to take these matters to court and to have them decided in any other manner.

Third, it has never been necessary to call in a seventh arbitrator although both sides are equally represented.

Fourth, at no time has an unfair advantage been taken of either party with reference to the matter in dispute, they having submitted their sides in a manner at which they can set forth all of the facts without employing outside assistance such as attorneys or others.

I have been in the exhibiting end of the moving picture business for a period covering over nine years and have seen it in all of its stages, and I can truthfully state, from a private capacity, and also as exhibitor member of the Board of Arbitration that it has been a means of salvation for both.

ShowmenShouldSupply Arguments Against Postal Raise

Exhibitors using parcel post service in the shipment of films have been mailed a copy of a letter written George H. Moses, chairman of the Special Committee of the United States Senate, by President R. F. Woodhull of the M. P. T. O. A. This committee is designated to consider the Postal Increase Bill.

Mr. Woodhull's letter says that "thousands of theatre owners throughout the country use the parcel post service exclusively in the delivery and shipment of films. They pay the fee and have complained to us that it is a considerable increase in the cost of operating their theatres, and they want this increase taken off."

The letter to Senator Moses requests that a hearing be arranged. Theatre owners should write President Woodhull their objections to the bill, so that he can compile evidence for presentation before the Senate committee, and also write their senators and congressmen.

Chicago Golf Victors

The film men and exhibitors who took part in the golf tournament at the Olympia Fields, Chicago, had plenty of fun with their golf and 86 players teed off for the annual classic.

Lewis Newhafer of the Ascher circuit had the lowest net score for the 36 holes and took home the loving cup which he must win two times more to "own" it. He also captured a fine diamond studied wrist watch for his efforts.

Harry Balaban took first prize for low gross score on 36 holes and his trophy was a leather golf bag.

R. C. Seery came away with a silver service set.

Aaron Jones of Jones Linick and Schaefer circuit won the champion putting contest with 31 putts in 18 holes and took the loving cup home for that event.

1924 Record

In 1924 not a single exhibitor resigned from an arbitration board, Attorney John Pettijohn of the Hays organization told representatives of the trade press at a conference this week.

During that year there were fifty distributor vacancies caused mostly by transfers, deaths and etc., the lawyer stated.

Work on Chicago's New Theatres Is Progressing

The Orpheum Circuit, Chicago, has a large program of openings for the early fall months and preparations are being made now for the opening next month of the new Diversey Theatre at Diversey Parkway and Clark street. Louis Judah assistant manager of the State Lake theatre has been advanced to manager of the new house and George Burdick formerly with Jones Linick and Schaefer circuit has succeeded him at the State Lake theatre.

The new Diversey theatre will play both pictures and vaudeville and has a very large stage with a pit for a good sized orchestra.

On September 1st, the Orpheum Circuit is scheduled to take over the Riveria theatre from the Balaban and Katz organization, who expect to have the huge new Uptown theatre ready for opening by that date. The stage at the Riveria theatre will be enlarged and several other changes are expected to be made in the house, as the Orpheum policy of big time vaudeville acts and a feature photoplay will no doubt prevail under their management.

Work is also progressing rapidly on the new loop house that is going up for the circuit on Randolph street between LaSalle and Wells streets and the steel work is already up to the fourth floor for this big house.

Find Body of Pugh, Missing Exchange Manager

The body of the late W. C. Pugh who up to the time of his disappearance early in April was the Manager of the Associated Exhibitors' Office in Portland, Oregon, has been found according to a telegram received by John S. Woody, President of the organization.

The wire, under date of June 29, stated that the body of W. C. Pugh was found that day in the Williamette River at Portland. The identification, it is stated, is positive and complete. It is understood that the conditions under which the body was found made it quite apparent that the deceased exchange manager had been a victim of foul play.

It will be recalled that Mr. Pugh was last seen alive on Friday April 3 about 11.30 P. M. driving an auto from Ninth and Davis Streets, toward Broadway Bridge in Portland.

At the time of his reported disappearance neither his wife nor any of Pugh's fellow members of the Elks could shed any light on the matter.

Kansas City Blast Yields 3 Bodies

With the recovery of only three bodies from the ruins of the Gillis Theatre, Kansas City, which was wrecked by an explosion last week, it is believed now that the total loss of life will be four, including a fireman who was killed in attempting to rescue others. Had the explosion occurred an hour later, when the midnight show would have been started, the loss of life would have run into the hundreds.

Various theories are being investigated as to the cause of the explosion, one being that recent blasting on "Hobo" Hill near the theatre might have weakened the gas mains which entered the house. It has been rumored that gas was smelled in an adjoining restaurant basement on the afternoon of the explosion that night. Labor trouble also was advanced as a possible cause, but nothing logical has yet been run to earth.

Confide in Fans and Win Independence, Says Senator

By Tom Waller

UNITED STATES SENATOR EDWARDS, in the few minutes he addressed the New Jersey conventionees at Asbury Park last week, gave a bit of advice that should serve as a major part of the solution of the so-called fight for indepedence.

In the estimation of the Senator and those who heard him, his remedy—that of enlisting the public aid—is the most logical and the most inexpensive.

If I owned a theatre I would not stop until I had personally told every one of my patrons that I was fighting for independence; that I was not using certain pictures because they would not aid me in my fight and because using them would aid their producers in taking from me my theatre. Such was the substance of Senator Edward's expression on this point.

Viewed from this angle, the fight for exhibitor independence should not be a thing of complexity. It should not engender any high financing. It would mean nothing more than a series of heart-to-heart talks with the fans.

Again the speaker called the attention of his banquet audience to the fact that such matters as industrial fights are not confined to the film world. He cited the recent radio agitation—how the power of so-called trusts was soon reduced to a meagre minimum when smaller radio units laid bare the facts to the public and the public arose in its might and immediately brought about a condition with which everyone is familiar.

Governor Silzer may have had a good speech in mind but if that were so he discarded it due to his apparent misinterpretation of the use of the word "politics" by his predecessor, Attorney Nathan Burkan.

Burkan's talk was strictly from the trade angle. As such it was particularly appreciated by the audience at large, composed mostly of theatre owners. But it was obvious from frowns which occasionally furrowed the brow of the Governor that he was not especially familiar with the language of the industry.

Burkan stated that he was a Tammany Hall district leader, but that he never mixed business with politics. He declared that the two could not be successfully merged in the film industry and that the situation within its walls could not be clarified until this condition was appreciated. He asserted that it was the duty of Governors and Senators to see to it that one organization did not gain control of the film world.

Governor Silzer immediately rejoined that both government and business were based upon politics. He stated that the trouble with some people was that they were too lazy to interest themselves in the political sphere. Without politics, the Governor stated he could not see how the film industry or any other industry could succeed.

He, like Senator Edwards, maintained that the troubles in filmdom were not original; that there was a simple and decisive way to combat them, the same as that used and being used many times by other industries. As to "gouging" and "monopoly" he referred to the coal situation. The price per ton is something which most of us agrees is exorbitant, he said. As long as we sit by and pay the price we will continue to pay it, he asserted. That situation, in his opinion, is one where an exertion of political forces would reach a satisfactory conclusion.

Toastmaster Robert E. Welsh, editor of Moving Picture World, quickly rallied to the support of Burkan. He explained to the Governor that Burkan did not mean politics in the sense of governmental usage. The politics this lawyer referred to, Welsh stated, were those of a "grabbing" variety peculiarly indigenous to the film game.

Burkan's nod and the Governor's smile showed that Welsh had broken up a situation which had been increasing in tensity.

National President R. F. Woodhull of the M. P. T. O. A. paid high tribute to the New Jersey M. P. T. O. and its chairman, Joseph M. Seider. He indulged in light puns which proved a welcome diversion.

Ray Lewis, editor of the "Spotlight," gave an interesting talk on conditions in England and how American product had started things moving in the competitive field overseas. She read a prayer which she had composed for the benefit of Independence. This recitation was decidedly impressive.

President Seider terminated the banquet by declaring that exhibitors need such cooperation as was manifested in his own organization rather than a generalissimo.

The New Jersey chieftain sounded something which was interpreted by many as a warning when he declared:

"Milwaukee was talked of and harmony was stressed. We paid a big price for harmony. It is my prayer and hope that the title to unity, the home of harmony, shall not be defective."

Scott Sidney Gives Close-up Of Unique, Oldtime Theatre

SCOTT SIDNEY, Al Christie's star director who is now preparing to film "Madame Lucy" as a successor to "Charley's Aunt," tells an interesting story of the early days in motion picture exhibitions when he was manager of a theatre than ran seventy complete shows a day, using 300 feet of film.

Sidney's theatre was run in connection with the Nashville Exposition of 1897. The show was owned by Henry Roltaire, the illusionist, of whom Sidney was at that time a protege, and was called Edison's Mirage.

Occupying a huge, square hall, Edison's Mirage consisted of four sectors for audiences much after the fashion of a four-part apple pie, while in the center of the hall our projectors were mounted on a revolving circular platform. The audience entered one sector and was seated while the platform moved to the second sector where moving pictures were projected from the center of the "pie" to the outside wall. One hundred feet of film showing a train coming down a railroad track was projected. Then the platform moved again, the audience remaining seated in its original position to see one hundred feet of a fire engine coming down the street while in the third sector the audience was being treated to the moving train film. In the fourth sector May Irwin and John Rice grimacing and kissing each other was the show.

In other words, the three projectors in the center of the pie were continually working and three audiences were looking at pictures while in the fourth sector a fresh audience was coming in and being seated.

The attraction was a big hit, according to Sidney, because like all good exposition shows it was short and novel. People could see the entire performance and get out in about ten minutes. However, it was very wearing on the film, which, by the way, was about three times the size of the moving picture film projected nowadays and had only two sprocket holes on each frame of action.

It is interesting to compare this early show of Scott Sidney's with "Seven Days," the production he has just completed at the Al Christie Studio. "Seven Days" is 7,000 feet. It will run one hour and ten minutes on the screen, and according to conservative estimate will be seen by ten thousand times as many people as saw the unique movie of 1897.

PAUL CAZENEUVE DEAD

Paul Cazeneuve, well-known character actor of the films, died at his home in Montreal, Quebec, on Thursday, July 2, after a lingering illness. He had been living a retired life during the past year because of persistent illness but previous to that he had filled many important roles in both California and New York.

Letters to the Editor

Robert Welsh, Editor,
Moving Picture World.

I notice that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey have decided not to join in the Greaater Movie Season Campaign because they objected to "paying one per cent of August profits to the Hays office for expense."

Evidently the New Jersey exhibitors do not understand the Greater Movie Season plan.

No money is paid to the Hays office. An explanation service is given free to those exhibitors who want to use it. It is a plan that has proved that it will increase August business from ten to fifty per cent and its effect is felt in increased business throughout the following months.

Exhibitors decide what they want to spend on their campaign and spend it. An exhibitor in a small town can put on a Greater Movie Season Campaign for a dollar, by buying ten one-sheets, some slides and a few pennants. In larger cities the exhibitors get together, name a committee of their own to collect whatever they want to spend, and that committee spends it.

As to the date of starting—there is nothing to prevent exhibitors from opening their Greater Movie Season campaign on September 1, or on Christmas Day if they choose.

But unless they join in the national celebration, which is during August, they lose the advantage of the many national tie-ups that will cause the whole country to be talking and thinking about going to see motion pictures during August.

Last year in the hottest August California has had in a long time, the Greater Movie Season Campaign gave the West Coast Theatres an increase of 20% in profit over the previous August, and the business kept on building. Which would tend to prove that the public was satisfied with the pictures that they saw in second run, as well as first run theatres.

There can be no "War" on the Greater Movie Season Campaign. It is an exploitation idea offered to exhibitors. Several thousand theatres already have accepted the idea. We naturally have never expected all exhibitors to adopt it the first year.

A number of exhibitors in California did not join in the campaign last year. This year they are all in, because they know now that the idea is sound.

If a distributor offers an exhibitor a press book on a production, and exploitation service that has proved efficient in making that prodution bring business at the box office, and the exhibitor says he doesn't want that service, that hardly is a declaration of War.

In offering this practical idea to exhibitors, in making National Tie-ups of great value to all exhibitors, in preparing advertising material and arranging for it to be sold at cost, in furnishing a service so complete that the smallest exhibitor can take advantage of it as well as the largest, we feel that our obligation is ended.

If a few exhibitors reject it, we can only accept their decision with regret in the knowledge that they are the ones who would profit by it and that certainly the loss is theirs.

Sincerely,

Jerome Beatty,

Director, Greater Movie Season Campaign.

Mr. Jerome Beatty misunderstands the action taken by this organization in relation to the Greater Movie Season as proposed by the Hays organization.

We are not opposed to the Greater Movie Season idea. We maintain, however, that it would be inadvisable for the theatre owner to participate in the plan as proposed and at the present time.

In order to have a Greater Movie Season we must have the goods. The pictures must meet the expectations of the public.

We feel that a movement such as this, involving the patronage of the movie-going public, should be handled, from its inception, by the Theatre Owner—the retailer—the man in contact with the patron.

To first run theatres only the good pictures of next year's release will be available and yet the theatre must take all the financial risk. He will pay big picture prices with only a depleted population to draw from. It cannot be disputed that a good portion of a city's population migrate in the summer to cooler climes.

We do understand that the theatre owner is not expected to pay one per cent of his receipts in the month of August direct to the Hays organization. The proposition as presented to us involved our joining a group for a concerted effort in promoting this movement. We were to individually underwrite the expense involved, to be met by our contributing one per cent of our receipts during the month of August. The money thus raised to pay for posters, slides, newspaper advertising, publicity stunts and the publicity staff engaged by the Hays organization.

Since we have to pay the freight New Jersey has decided to carry out the Greater Movie Season Idea in its own way—in zones—and in seasons best suited for the zones. The theatre owner is fundamentally a showman, exploitation is the business of the exhibitor. Greater Movie Season is nothing more than an exploitation idea, to be carried by the theatre owner to the public. The producer advertises and publicizes. The exhibitor exploits. The theatre is best qualified to promote this movement, with the assistance of all distributors and their publicity staffs so as to obtain the desired result for all concerned, The public—The producer and distributor—The theatre owner.

It is to be regretted that Mr. Beatty did not attend our convention. Had he done so he would have been afforded the opportunity to address us. He would have heard, first hand, our objections.

A vote was taken only after every theatre owner in the Convention Hall spoke on the subject, and when the vote was taken the roll was called and each member voted yes, no, or passed. The vote was unanimous in rejecting the Greater Movie Season plan as submitted.

Joseph M. Seider,

President, M. P. T. O. of New Jersey.

HEADS METRO ON COAST

David Bershon, one of the foremost exchange men in the West, has been appointed district manager for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer of the Pacific Coast, succeeding Harry Lustig, who has just resigned.

Mr. Bershon comes to M-G-M following two years of managing his own chain of theatres in California. Prior to this he was Los Angeles manager of the First National Exchange and was later in entire charge of bookings for the West Coast chain of theatres.

Copyright Amendments To Be Urged in Washington

National President R. F. Woodhull and Sydney S. Cohen, chairman of the Board of Directors, represented the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at the conference of the General Committee on the Copyright Revision Bill held July 8 at the Bar Association Building, New York City, and arranged to file with the Sub-Committee of the Patents Committee of the House of Representatives at Washington, recommendations to be incorporated into the new copyright bill which will be presented to the next Congress when it convenes in December, 1925.

Two of the amendments to be urged follow:

"That when any author or composer or his or her adminstrator, executor, or assigns shall publish or cause to be published for sale to the public copies of any copyrighted musical composition or song, the sale of any such copy shall free the same from further contribution by the holder thereof, to the author or composer or his or her administrators, executors or assigns in case of public performances for profit." Also an amendment that will prevent the pooling of copyrights or performing rights as is the practice" now.

Other amendments and recommendations are being prepared at this time and will be included in those filed with the committee.

Theatre owners in all parts of the country are urged to get in touch with their Congressmen and United States Senators. Many of their representatives are now at home and exhibitors should approach them as their constituents, presenting the facts to them and asking that relief be afforded them.

MORE CANADIAN PRODUCTION

Ray Peck, director of the Canadian Government Motion Picture Bureau, Ottawa, Ontario, who recently spoke before the Society of Motion Picture Advertisers at New York, has been busily engaged with the direction of the bureau's activities in the Maritime Provinces of Canada for the summer film production. A program of production was drawn up with the assistance and co-operation of the Canadian National Railways, a series of pictures being made in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

M. H. HOFFMAN

The genial general manager of Tiffany Productions, Inc., is in the 1925-26 "Battle for Play Dates" with offerings that seem tempting enough for every theatre owner to consider deeply before going elsewhere, as the Truart publicity expert expresses the situation.

Tiffany Twelve and Truart Pictures Sold to Glucksmann

M. H. HOFFMAN, general manager of the Tiffany-Truart productions, announces that the entire production output of the Tiffany Big Twelve and the Truart productions for 1925-26 has been sold to Max Glucksmann of Buenos Aires, Argentine Republic, for all the South American countries, including Argentine Republic, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chili, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador. This contract was made through Jacobo Glucksmann, general representative in the United States for Max Glucksmann.

This is considered one of the largest independent foreign deals so far consummated for 1925-26, Glucksmann getting the entire output after spirited bids from other foreign representatives for the Tiffany-Truart pictures.

The deal as closed by Glucksmann for South American countries includes the Tiffany Big Twelve and the Truart productions. In the Tiffany Big Twelve are "The Sporting Chance," "Souls For Sables," "Lightnin'," "Morals For Men," "Morganson's Finish," "The Travis Coup," "Tale of a Vanishing People," The Wrong Coat," "The Dumb Head," "The Life of a Woman" and one other to be announced, all based on the stories and books by famous authors.

In the Truart program the South American distributors will have the Six Blue Ribbon Series consisting of "Dollar Down," "The Hurricane," "Salvage," "Where the Worst Begins," "Age of Indiscretion," and "Marrying Money;" Four Novelty pictures, "Three In Exile," "The Silent Witness," "Pals" and "The Wild Girl," featuring Louise Lorraine, Rex, the wonder dog and Black Beauty, the marvelous horse, and four Cinemelodrama productions. In addition to these, Mr. Glucksmann also bought the South American rights to the Truart Special production, "Romance Road," featuring Raymond McKee.

Mr. Glucksmann expressed himself as highly elated in being able to consummate this deal and is preparing one of the greatest exploitation campaigns ever attempted for the South American market.

JACOBO GLUCKSMANN

Representing his brother, Max, Jacobo has taken the T. T. R. product for several South American countries.

M. H. Hoffman Goes West To Supervise Productions

M. H. HOFFMAN, general manager of Tiffany Productions, Inc., and the Truart Film Corporation, left for Los Angeles last week to personally supervise the productions on the Big Twelve schedule for 1925-1926. The first of these, "The Sporting Chance," had a pre-release showing at the B. S. Moss Colony Theatre on Broadway, New York, the week of June 21 and was unanimously hailed by newspaper and trade paper critics as one of the best productions of its kind that has been shown on New York's main street.

Mr. Hoffman before leaving for the West Coast said that it was the intention of his organizations to produce the foremost quality productions and that no expense is to be spared to make them compare with the very best of pictures to be released for this year.

The second of the Tiffany Big Twelve, "Souls For Sables," based on the book "Garland & Co.," by David Graham Phillips, is in the course of production in the Hollywood studios. The cast includes Claire Windsor, Eugene O'Brien, Ethel Clayton, Anders Randolph, George Fawcett and Taylor Holmes.

Further details of new Tiffany pictures will be made shortly.

During Mr. Hoffman's absence on the West Coast, A. Carlos, who has just been elected secretary of the Tiffany-Truart organizations, will have complete charge of all affairs in New York.

"The Girl Who Wouldn't Work" is the first of a series which this noted director is making for B. P. Schulberg's Preferred Pictures program.

Signs Lilyan Tashman

Actress Will Be Featured in Schulberg's New Preferred Picture

B. P. Schulberg announced the signing of another well known player this week to a long-term contract when he added Lilyan Tashman to his stock company of players. Miss Tashman was well known on the legitimate stage before entering pictures, having been featured in many Broadway productions including "The Gold Diggers" and "Lillies of the Field." She was at one time a member of Florenz Ziegfield's famous array of American beauties.

The new Schulberg player will be given her first Preferred Pictures role in Gertie D. Wentworth-James' novel, "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work," now being made by Marcel De Sano. Subsequently she will be featured in a number of the most important stories to be filmed by B. P. Schulberg during the coming season.

"The Perfect Clown"

"The Perfect Clown," directed by Fred Newmeyer, former director of Harold Lloyd comedies, will be Larry Semon's second offering on the Chadwick 1925-26 Program.

Experts Directing Destinies of B. P. Schulberg Productions

THE direction of B. P. Schulberg's eighteen Preferred Pictures for the new season has been entrusted to men of experience. The first nine will be directed by Gasnier, Marcel De Sano and Fred C. Windemere.

Gasnier has been directing successful motion pictures for the past twenty years. His work for B. P. Schulberg during the last three seasons has produced such outstanding box-office attractions as "Rich Men's Wives," "Mothers-in-Laws," "Poor Men's Wives," "Maytime," "Poisoned Paradise," "The Boomerang," "Faint Perfume" and others.

Marcel De Sano is announced by Mr. Schulberg as one of the most important directorial "finds" ever brought forward. He is a Roumanian with a decided continental viewpoint and has served an invaluable apprenticeship as script writer for many important productions.

Fred C. Windemere has directed innumerable box-office hits having made this season "The Verdict" and "Soiled."

The assignment of stories is as follows: Gasnier—"Parisian Love" by F. Oakley Crawford, "The Other Woman's Story" by Peggy Gaddis, "Eden's Fruit" by John Goodrich.

Marcel De Sano—"The Girl Who Wouldn't Work" by Gertie D. Wentworth-James, "Lew Tyler's Wives" by Wallace Irwin and "Shenandoah," the celebrated stage play.

Clara Bow, another player discovered and developed by Mr. Schulberg and now a big box-office name, heads the "Parisian Love" cast. Others featured are Lou Tellegen, Lillian Leighton, Jean de Briac and Otto Mathieson.

Scenes from "Free to Love," a B. P. Schulberg production co-featuring Clara Bow and Donald Keith, soon to be released.

Arrow Has Fine Array of Pictures for Next Season

ARROW PICTURES CORPORATION wishes to go on record definitely in stating that it expects the forthcoming year to be not only the most important in its own history, but one which will mark a great step forward for the Independents as a whole.

Arrow Pictures Corporation will contribute twenty-four first run pictures—known and classified as "The Golden Arrow Franchise." These will be made by prominent production executives and directors, working with stories by well-known authors and with stars whose names are known all over.

Among those who will contribute to the Arrow program is Whitman Bennett. He will sponsor four productions, the first of which, "Children of the Whirlwind," is now completed. This is a melodrama of society and those who prey upon it, written by LeRoy F. Scott. It appeared originally in Hearst's "International Magazine," and was later published in novel form by Houghton Mifflin & Company, when it quickly attained "best-seller" prominence. The cast is headed by Lionel Barrymore, Johnnie Walker and Marguerite De la Motte.

Mr. Bennett's second production will be "Scandal Street." It is now completed, and is in the course of editing and titling. "Scandal Street," a fast-moving story of motion picture life today was written by Frank R. Adams, and published originally in Hearst's "Cosmopolitan Magazine." The cast is headed by Madge Kennedy and Niles Welch. Others are Coit Albertson, Edwin August and Louise Carter.

Mr. Bennett will also sponsor "The Cleaner Flame," and "The Great City," two striking screen originals, the first of which was written by Clara Beranger and Forrest Halsey. Dorothy Farnham is the author of "The Great City," a dramatic story of New York society life.

There will be four Wilfred Noy productions released beneath the Arrow banner, the first of which will be "The Substitute Wife," starring Jane Novak. Niles Welch will appear in Miss Novak's support. Miss Novak will also be the star of the other three productions, one of which is to be "Led Astray," as screen adaptation of Alphonse Daudet's world-known novel "The Little Parish Church." Miss Novak's other two vehicles are thus far undecided, but it can be safely said that they will be on the same plane of excellence as those already announced. All four of the productions will be society meodramas of a high type.

Whitman Bennett will also supervise and direct two Dr. W. E. Shallenberger special attractions. Never before has Dr. Shallenberger, the president and executive head of the Arrow Pictures Corporation given his name to a production.

Dallas M. Fitzgerald, associated for a long time with the Metro organization, will contribute a series of four productions, which he himself will direct. His first production—camera work has just been begun—is being made under the workin gtitle of "Tessie." This is the screen adaptation of Sewell Ford's Saturday Evening Post story, "Tessie and the Little Sap," which will star May McAvoy. Miss McAvoy's supporting cast includes Myrtle Stedman, Bobby Agnew and Lee Moran.

There will be, too, four Arthur F. Beck productions. Mr. Beck offers as his first production "The Primrose Path," a society melodrama from the pen of E. Lanning Masters. Harry O. Hoyt is translating it to the screen with a cast which is headed by Clara Bow, and which also includes Wallace MacDonald, Tom Santschi, Stuart Holmes, Arline Pretty, Lydia Knott, Master Pat Moore, Templar Saxe and George Irving.

Mr. Beck's second production, "The Unknown Woman," Charles E. Blaney's stage success, will boast a cast headed by Katherine MacDonald, Herbert Rawlinson, Myrtle Stedman and Wanda Hawley.

Major Maurice Campbell will also make four productions for release on the Golden Arrow Franchise. Major Campbell will specialize in stories of the society drama type, the first of which has already been selected. It is "Wandering Fires," from the pen of Warner Fabian.

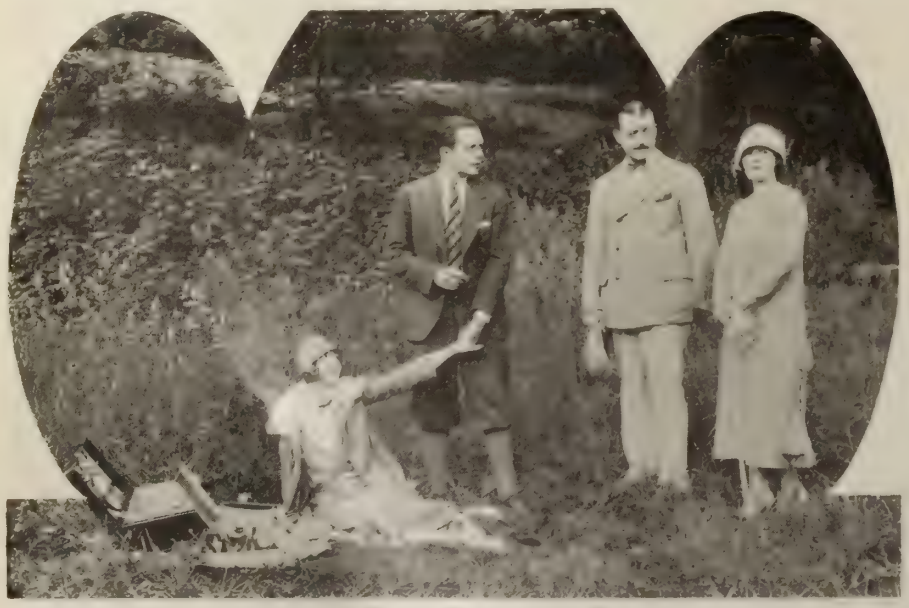
I. E. Chadwick will be responsible for the productions of two of the twenty-four first run pictures. These will be melodramas made from well-known stage successes. Present plans indicate that the first one of these will be "Driven from Home," a play which has been presented in every city, town and hamlet in the United States, and which, translated into different foreign languages, has circled the globe.

This is the line-up of quality product with which Arrow is preparing to meet the demand for excellence. Sam Zierler of New York, president of Commonwealth Film Corporation, was among the first to affix his name to an arrow contract. Another who has signed up is Oscar Neufeld of Philadelphia, head of the De Luxe Film Company. Frank Zambreno of Chicago is another. His company,—Progress Pictures—will distribute the Arrow pictures throughout Northern Illinois, Southern Missouri and the State of Indiana.

On the West Coast, Arrow productions will be marketed by Gene Emmick and W. O. Edmunds. John F. Taylor, well and favorably known on the Continent, is marketing the Arrow pictures abroad. So, too, is Max Glucksmann, prominent in film activities in Buenos Aires and other important South American cities.

W. E. SHALLENBERGER

The president of Arrow has turned his publicity expert loose on as choice a list of feature photoplays as a theatre owner, anywhere, could wish to ponder. Arrow is definitely in the 1925-26 struggle to turn out "the best pictures."



The expression of displeasure on Madge Kennedy's face is occasioned by the fact that she has just caught Friend Husband (Niles Welch) with the goods—"the goods" in this particular instance being represented by lovely Louise Carter. A tense moment from "Scandal Street," a W. E. Shallenberger Special Attraction, directed by Whitman Bennett from Frank R. Adams' Cosmopolitan Magazine story. An Arrow release.

JOHNNY WALKER

One of the outstanding screen stars of 1925-26, "Johnny" has a leading role in "Children of the Whirlwind," the Whitman Bennett production for Arrow release. A star cast interprets the LeRoy Scott story of the underworld.

Praise for "Blue Blood"

Critics and Public Approve the Newest George Walsh-Chadwick Picture

Following out the new policy of giving productions pre-release showings as part of regular program in New York theatres, the Chadwick picture "Blue Blood," starring George Walsh, was shown to a capacity audience at one of the theatres regularly playing Chadwick pictures.

The star so impressed the audience that after the show the enthusiastic praises of the patrons gave evidence of the picture's high calibre entertainment. The story revolves around the character of a young scientist, played by Walsh, and the situations which provide him with the opportunities to display his thrilling stunts are the most plausible yet seen in this type of entertainment.

A brilliant supporting cast surrounds the star including Cecille Evans, Philo McCullough, Joan Meredith, Harvey Clark, Robert Boulder, G. Howe Black and Eugene Borden.

An announcement from the office of the Chadwick Picture Corporation makes known the purchase of a new story for Walsh. This production will be of the athletic type which brought Walsh fame, and for which there is a tremendous demand.

Fine Cast Assembled

There is a splendid cast assembled for the making of "The Bashful Buccaneer," produced by Harry J. Brown and released through Rayart Pictures. Reed Howes is the star. Dorothy Dwan, who played the feminine lead in "The Wizard of Oz," will play opposite Mr. Howes. Others having important roles are Bull Montana, Sheldon Lewis, Jack Herrick, George French and Sam Allen.

"The Bashful Buccaneer" is the third of the second series of Harry J. Brown comedy dramas starring Reed Howes and released through Rayart.

First Bernarr Macfadden Film for Release Aug. 5

"THE WRONGDOERS," the first Bernarr Macfadden True Story Film Company production will be released August 5th, it was announced this week by Harry Rathner, president of Astor Distributing Corporation.

At the same time it was announced that the Bernarr Macfadden True Story Film Company would operate on a policy of continuous production until the eight pictures are completed, thus eliminating a lapse of time between productions.

Studio space has been leased in the Cosmopolitan studio in New York, which is an assurance that all of the Bernarr Macfadden film activities, will be, for the time at least confined to the east. There had been some talk of casting and producing the pictures in Hollywood.

Production will begin with two units as soon as Lewis Allen Browne completes continuities on "Rogue's Riches" and "False Pride." These are true-story dramatic narratives founded on the experience of the person who wrote the story.

In their order, the productions will be made as follows: "False Pride," "Rogues' Riches," "The Harem Girl," "The Danger Line," "Wives at Auction," "Bad Habits," and "Broken Homes."

"The Wrongdoers," just completed under the direction of Hugh Dierker and starring Lionel Barrymore, with Anne Cornwall and Henry Hull as featured players is receiving its final editing. It is a story of Robin Hood sentiment and laid in New York, with scenes in Fifth Avenue homes, Greenwich Village and elsewhere. Barrymore plays the part of a socialistic philanthropist, and those who saw the first edited run of the picture say he gave a very fine portrayal.

Owen Moore and Constance Bennett have been placed under contract for starring roles in the forthcoming Macfadden True Story productions and negotiations are on with other feminine and masculine stars of assured box office value.

There will be four releases from Astor Distributing Corporation for August. They will be: "A Lover's Oath," a Ferdinand Pinney Earle production starring Ramon Novarro; "The Wrongdoers," a Bernarr Macfadden True Story production starring Lionel Barrymore, directed by Hugh Dierker and with Anne Cornwall and Henry Hull in featured roles; "The Shining Adventure," a Madeline Brandeis production directed by Hugo Ballin, starring Percy Marmont, with Mabel Ballin and Ben Alexander prominently cast; "The Business of Love," a Jesse Robbins production starring Edward Everett Horton and Madge Bellamy.

On the fifth of each month beginning with August, Astor will release one production a month together with an Astor "Aristocrat" special, "Child Wives" scheduled for release in the fall.

Weiss-Steiner Release

Louis Weiss, Managing Director of Clarion Photoplays, Inc. announces that he has consummated a deal with William Steiner under the terms of which he will distribute the new 1926 series of five-reel action dramas of the west which will feature the popular riding star Leo Maloney. Appearing with Leo Maloney in these pictures will be his highly trained horse Pico, who has been said by many who have seen him a number of times to have almost human intelligence, supplemented in his activities by Maloney's constant companion, a terrier, named "Bullets."

It looks bad for Johnny Walker. The picture of Marguerite de la Motte seems to have wrecked his composure. And that of Lionel Barrymore as well, who looks on from the doorway. This scene is from "Children of the Whirlwind," Whitman Bennett's stirring picturization of LeRoy Scott's underworld story, which appeared originally in "Hearst's International." An Arrow release.

Ginsberg Organization Has Splendid "Line-up" for Fall

ONE of the outstanding achievements of the present season in the independent field is the inception, creation and progress of the Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation.

With the basic idea of specialization, Henry Ginsberg, in a few short months has launched a full-fledged, smooth functioning organization, practically sold his entire product for America, Europe and the Latin American countries, is ahead of schedule on production and has proven to independent exchangemen that his ideas of segregation of production and sales in making and marketing product, is one of the big factors in creating a stability in the independent market.

The Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corpcration for the current season is distributing two series of pictures, the first Banner Productions, a series of six feature productions, the second Royal Pictures, a series of six pictures of the stunt and thrill type.

The Banner Production series consists of the following: "The Love Gamble," adapted from the Maysie Greif novel featuring Lillian Rich, Robert Frazer, and a strong cast with Pauline Garon, Arthur Rankin, Brooks Benedict, Kathleen Clifford, James Marcus and others.

The second Banner is "Wreckage," adapted from the novel "Salvage" by Izola Forrester. This production also has an excellent cast including May Allison, Holmes Herbert, John Miljan, Rosemary Theby and others.

The third release wil be "Wandering Footsteps," an unusual and new type of picture with Estelle Taylor, Bryant Washburn, Alec B. Francis, Frankie Darro and an excellent cast.

The balance of Banner subjects is "The Checkered Flag," a story of the auto racing game; "Brooding Eyes," a John Goodwin mystery story, and "Whispering Canyon."

The first three Banners are completed and scheduled for release and are all Ben Verschleiser productions. Edward LeSaint and Scott Dunlap directed the first and second pictures respectively.

The Royal series are being produced by William Russell Production and the first Royal is also completed and scheduled for release. In this picture Wiliam Russell is featured, supported by a strong cast including Barbara Bedford, Rex Lease, Alan Roscoe and Brinsley Shaw.

The first Royal picture is "Before Midnight," and the balance of the titles are "Big Pal"; "A Desperate Moment"; "The Taxi Mystery"; "The Phantom Express," and "The Millionaire Policeman."

One of the features of the Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation is the complete line of publicity, advertising and exploitation furnished exchangemen for the benefit of the exhibitor. Everything necessary to "carry on" is furnished the exhibitor and special exploitation helps are sent out from time to time.

Henry Ginsberg is now on the West Coast attending to production details. He is expected back in New York in ten days.

Leeper Goes Abroad

Dwight C. Leeper, vice-president of Richmount Pictures, distributors for Rayart Pictures in the foreign market, and associated with Harry J. Brown in the production of the Reed Howes and Billy Sullivan comedy-dramas which are released through Rayart, sailed this week on the George Washington for London.

While abroad Mr. Leeper will make an exhaustive study of the market requirements in various parts of Europe and will visit London, Paris, Berlin, Bremen, Hamburg and various points in Switzerland and Holland. Mr. Leeper will remain abroad three months, devoting his time to this work.

HENRY GINSBERG

President of the Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation is a comparatively recent arrival in the ranks of "the big distributors," and current announcements indicate that with each new releasing contract he signs independent producers lean closer to him for future releasing arrangements. Sittin' pretty —that's the way to tell Ginsberg's story.

Inter-Ocean Pleased

Foreign Buyer Gratified With Gotham Pictures Screened in Advance

The saying that "a pleased customer is the best advertisement" was exemplified last week by L. W. Kastner, President of Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, in a statement concerning the Independent producers of today.

Mr. Kastner, in part, states; "Our organization must view a motion picture production from a slightly different standpoint than the average American film buyer for the one reason that we must consider not only the tastes and preferences and dislikes of the picture going public of one country, but on account of our varied foreign connections, with practically all countries. A country like Spain, for instance, has entirely different screen tastes than Norway and so on. We must therefore try and consider pictures from an international standpoint.

"I am very gratified to state that the forthcoming Independent American product for the coming season, which I have already viewed has more than come up to my expectations. Of course, I have not seen all of it, or even a large portion of the Independent product but there are some producers that I know who are striving with every effort to make their pictures the best that money and talent can produce.

"I recently screened 'The Overland Limited,' the first of a series of twelve Gotham productions which the Inter-Ocean will distribute outside of the United States. This production is an excellent example of what I mean. It certainly came up to all my expectations and with this standard maintained throughout the series I feel sure that everybody will be satisfied."

President of the Broadway Distributing Co., Inc.

Sax Visiting Exchanges

President of Lumas Arranging Plans for New Gothams

Sam Sax, president of Lumas Film Corporation, producers of Gotham Productions is again en route to Los Angeles, but will make stops at various exchange centers on the way.

Mr. Sax made his first stop with Harry Charnas, of Cleveland, who has signed to distribute the twelve new Gothams for his Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Detroit offices. While there Mr. Sax made a new deal whereby Mr. Charnas will take over the distribution of the first six Gothams for the State of Ohio only. Included in this deal are the subjects, "Women and Gold," "Unmarried Wives," "Black Lightning," "The Night Ship," "The Silent Pal," "Shattered Lives" and "Defying the Law."

Mr. Sax next headed for Indianapolis and Chicago with St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Denver, Salt Lake and San Francisco scheduled before reaching Los Angeles. In Hollywood he will O. K. his latest production "The Part Time Wife" and start production in the next release which it is figured will be entitled "Racing Blood."

Broadway Liked It

"Boomerang" Brought Crowds to Capitol Theatre

B. P. Schulberg's screen version of the celebrated David Belasco play, "The Boomerang," by Winchell Smith and Victor Mapes, was accorded its New York premier last week at the Capitol Theatre where one of the highest summer figures were reached at the end of its engagement. The film, which was directed by Gasnier with Anita Stewart, Bert Lytell and Donald Keith in the leading roles, was endorsed by Broadway's critics as a really worth while comedy drama.

Dorothy Herzog of the Mirror said: "An entertaining romance that moves along airily."

Irene Thirer of the News said: "Exceedingly entertaining."

Mordaunt Hall of the Times said: "Smooth running in its course."

George Gerhard of the Evening World said: "The Boomerang has innumerable chuckles in it."

Broadway Distributing Co. Announces 1925-26 Plans

FRANK J. WHITTLE, President of the Broadway Distributing Co., Inc., is very enthusiastic about the coming seasons for the Independents. He has acquired for the Independent market the distribution of a series of eight action dramas, with George Larkin featured. In additioin, they have contracted for the distribution of a series of Society-High Class Dramas featuring the well-known stars, E. K. Lincoln and Wanda Hawley.

Mr. Whittle issued a statement, that is that the fewer and better pictures the Independent producer-distributor makes, the better off he will be. The field is rather crowded with bad productions, in addition to which the Independent exchangeman does not want to contract for, he says.

Continuing, Mr. Whittle said:

"The recent meeting held at Milwaukee opened the eyes of the Independent producers and distributors to such an extent that they have been given the most wonderful opportunity to show what they can produce and deliver. The motion picture business can be placed on a very sound basis if every one will co-operate. But how many do?

"We have read of good intentions and promises. But where are they? No organization can survive without proper co-operation between the Independent exchangeman and the distributor and producer. This can be done only when the producer gives the very best that is in him, and is followed in turn by the distributor, then the exchangeman passes it down the line to the exhibitor and we then have the complete circuit. We can only beat the so-called 'Trust' by treating the Theatre Owner fair and giving him A-1 product.

"It is the aim of the Broadway Distribution Corporation to handle not quantity but quality, and co-operate with the Independent exchangemen throughout the country, for our motto is Service—and that is all that the picture business is, merely Service. If you render proper service to the exchangeman, by giving him high class product, he will, in turn, give you proper service in purchasing your product.

"Our first speed thriller, 'Apache Love,' which has just arrived, and which we take great pleasure in announcing, has been sold to the Elvin Film Exchange of New York, has met with the greatest praise ever given a picture of this type. It is a picture which we are proud of, and the second of the series will be even better, and so on until we have completed the entire series of eight, which the Elvin Film Corporation have purchased.

"Our series with Wanda Hawley and E. K. Lincoln will be the best that these stars have ever placed before the public, and we feel very proud that for our initial entry into the Independent field we can offer such excellent product and such stars as we have on our 1925-26 program. And frankly, we intend to keep it up.

"We are also negotiating for several short subjects which will contain well-known comedians and stars. Let's all stick together and make this an Independent year to be proud of and for your sake as well as for the ethics of business principles let us give the Independent exchangeman a chance to buck the other fellow, by giving them high class product."

Mr. Whittle stated that in the very near future his concern will have several important announcements to make regarding the service and co-operation which they believe should be rendered the exchangeman in the various territories throughout the U. S.

Mr. Whittle will leave shortly for a tour of the key cities to place his product in various exchanges.

Clara Bow, in a scene in "Free to Love," a B. P. Schulberg production, soon to be released. The "fade in" of the electric chair disturbs our little tragedienne. (Splendid acting!)

State Righters Eager For Chadwick Program

STATE RIGHT distributors who bought last season's Chadwick features smashed all records for booking in the State Right market, and are eagerly looking forward to an even greater year this year after the announcement of the 1925-26 program of this producer.

The confidence of distributors in the Chadwick product is evidenced by the territories closed by S. S. Krellberg, General Manager of Chadwick Pictures, on his tour.

To date, territorial sales include: Specialty Film Company for Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas; Independent Film Corporation, for the New England States; Midwest Film Distributors, for Western Missouri and Kansas; Fontenelle Feature Film Company, for Iowa and Nebraska and Independent Film Corporation, for Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia.

Merit Film Corporation, for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey; Standard Film Service Co., for Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky, Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; Celebrated Players Film Corporation, for Northern Illinois and Indiana and All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., for California, Arizona, Nevada and the Hawaiian Islands.

De Luxe Feature Film Company, for Washington, Oregon, Montana, Northern Idaho and Alaska; the F. & R. Film Company, for Minnesota, North and South Dakota; and the De Luxe Feature Film Exchange for Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico, Utah and Southern Idaho.

Next year's productions include some of the most important achievements in the industry. The return to the screen of Theda Bara in "The Unchastened Woman," an adaptation of the famous play by Louis K. Anspacher, directed by James Young, is expected to be one of the greatest box office attractions offered in the independent market. The deep interest of motion picture audiences in the return of this star to the silversheet gives promise of sensational receptions wherever this picture plays. Since it has become common knowledge that Miss Bara will definitely "come back," the Chadwick office has been flooded with a deluge of mail from all parts of the world hailing the newly aroused interest in this star. And here is a ready made audience for the wise exhibitor.

The box office value of Larry Semon's "The Wizard of Oz" is now motion picture history. Exhibitors are eagerly awaiting this production to play their houses knowing it guarantees big returns. Another production from this ever popular comedian, "The Perfect Clown," for next season's program even overshadows "The Wizard," it is said. The exploitation possibilities in the title, the assurance of this star's consistent high calibre entertainment, his huge following, and the knowledge that he has now an opportunity to produce his own feature length comedies, the value of which is evidenced in the success of "The Wizard of Oz," is the best possible assurance that could be offered to an exhibitor.

Another achievement worthy of this producer is the acquisition of George Walsh for a series of fast moving action dramas of the type which brought this star fame. "American Pluck" is now completed and has been reviewed and acknowledged by the trade press to be one of the best productions of this kind to be seen. Walsh is the creator, and by far, the best exponent of the athletic hero role, and his host of admirers are eagerly awaiting the release of his pictures. "Blue Blood" and "The Price of Broadway" will be two of the pictures included in this series, and if the standard set by "American Pluck" is maintained exhibitors are assured of first class entertainment to come.

Lionel Barrymore, one of the most distinguished figures of stage and screen, will also be seen in two Chadwick productions, which will be adapted from well known stage plays. The first of these will be "The Bells" in which Mr. Barrymore will essay the role made immortal by Sir Henry Irving, and the second one will be announced in the near future.

In addition to the foregoing, two big special productions will be included in the program with all star casts, stories, and directors with established box office value. The first will be "Winning The Futurity," a thrilling, smashing race story, to be followed by "The Transcontinental Limited," an epic of the railroad that will beat all records for pictures of the absorbing melodramatic type.

J. E. CHADWICK

The president of Chadwick Pictures Corporation is also head of the independent motion picture producers, and while "on the move" constantly, he finds time to select material for his stars, Charles Ray, Theda Bara, George Walsh, Larry Semon, etc.

"Titles by Hubert Roemer"

It is a trite expression to say that newspaper work is "good training to have." But the trick apparently has worked in the case of Hubert Roemer, who has just completed the titles for "Headlines," produced by St. Regis Pictures, Inc., for an Associated Exhibitors release. Roemer is the latest recruit from the journalistic field to join the movies. He started with The New York Times in 1919, and later went to Paris where he wrote on special assignments for the European edition of the Herald-Tribune. He recently returned, and judging from the reports emanating from the St. Regis group, he has succeeded in finding a field where he will soon be prominent.

Roemer, a graduate of Cornell University, does his title writing and pursues the gentle art of authorship in the seductive pastoral quietness of Westbury, Long Island.

Second Royal Picture

The second Royal Picture to go into work is "Big Pal," an original story written especially for the screen. William Russell will be featured in this production, which is distributed by the Henry Ginsberg Distributing Corporation.

Charles Ray and Duane Thompson in "Some Pun'kins," first of his series for Chadwick Pictures Corporation, soon to be released.

SAM SAX

The president of the Lumas Film Corporation, asserts that every man engaged in production should set a high example for others by making only good, clean pictures.

Third Schulberg Release

Strong Box Office Cast in "With This Ring"

Following the recent announcement that Alyce Mills, B. P. Schulberg's latest screen find, would have the leading role in Fanny Heaslip Lea's story, "With This Ring," the producer chose this week a strong supporting cast to play in this forthcoming Preferred Picture. Lou Tellegen, Forrest Stanley, Donald Keith; Joan Standing, Martha Mattox, Eulalie Jensen and Dick Sutherland are among those selected for the featured parts.

Fred C. Windemere, recently signed by the Schulberg organization, is guiding the making of this film play. The story is one that attained great popularity as a serial in Saturday Evening Post and is now registering high sales in book form. It will be released as the third Preferred Picture for next year and will be ready for playdates subsequent to September 5.

Facts and Fish Stories

David A. O'Malley, secretary of Columbia Pictures, who boasts of being the best bluefish angler of Nantucket when he is away from the home office at 1600 Broadway, New York, recently returned from an especially interesting trip and a number of good yarns.

O'Malley's father-in-law is the celebrated Captain John Killen, who owns half of the island and a number of big boats, some of which have been used for big sea pictures.

O'Malley hinted that one of the big forthcoming Columbia productions may have some sea atmosphere. He is looking at "locations."

"Fair Play" Goes Big

William Steiner says that his star, Edith Thornton, in "Fair Play" supported by Lou Tellegen, is breaking records through the New England States and return dates are being booked by John Marks of the Cadillic Film Co. of Boston. Mr. Steiner also reports that "The Blood Bond" which features Leo Maloney promises to be the greatest picture of this young star's career.

Sax Considers Box-office In Mapping Lumas Program

WHAT is looked upon as one of the soundest statements issued by a producer and distributor this season comes from Sam Sax, president of the Lumas Film Corporation, distributors of Gotham Productions.

Mr. Sax says: "We have had all sorts of statements about the wonderful improvement in the art of the cinema and we have also had a great many productions which, while they may have come under the head of 'art,' spelled only disaster for the exhibitor. While I, of course, can speak only for my organization, I don't mind going on record here, and now, as saying that the one and only thing worth while considering in making a motion picture is—Will this make money for the theatre?'

"I do not wish to be misunderstood, however, as saying that anything that will make money is desirable. There is a big difference. We have a wonderful industry and a great power in our hands, and it must not be abused, but we can make the kind of pictures the public likes and still make them clean, wholesome and desirable from every standpoint.

"Another thing, the so-called 'sex picture' is rapidly passing out and good wholesome action drama will be the demand for the coming season. With this in view, we have arranged a schedule of production calling for twelve pictures, every one of which, from the standpoint of title, story and action will satisfy both the exhibitor and the public."

The titles of the productions to be released by Lumas bear out Mr. Sax's remarks, and the fact that it is also stated that they are to be backed up by extensive exploitation and advertising demonstrates that the exhibitor has been given very careful consideration.

The first Gotham Production to be released by Lumas is entitled "The Overland Limited." This is a railroad drama, now in production, and is said to be a genuine thriller. This will be followed by "A Little Girl In a Big City," a Metropoitan melodrama directed by Burton King, with Gladys Walton as the star and a supporting cast headed by Niles Welch. The third release stars "Thunder," the Marvel Dog, in "His Master's Voice," and then comes another thrill drama, "The Police Patrol."

An unusual story of "movie" life, "The Part Time Wife," comes next on the Lumas list. "Racing Blood," a story of "the sport of kings," is sixth, and then comes another exciting photoplay, "One of the Bravest," which deals with the fire-fighters. A startling mystery play, "The Shadow on the Wall," follows with the next in line "The Sign of the Claw," an entirely new type of dog story featuring "Thunder." The last two to be announced are "Hearts and Spangles," a circus story, and "Fast and Furious," a rapid-fire automobile drama.

There remains one more to be announced, and negotiations are now under way for an exceptionally fine vehicle.

It is announced that the entire series of twelve will be made and delivered before the Fall season starts. Three of the series are completed and production units on both the East and West Coasts are working simultaneously to complete the balance of the Gotham Productions to be released through the Lumas Film Corporation.

Weiss Bros. Start Campaign; Large Territories Are Sold

WITH final arrangements for their product for the season of 1925-26 completed, Weiss Brothers inaugurate their campaign for the distribution of their new program.

The program is a large one, consisting of a minimum of thirty-two features. These thirty-two pictures include eight five-reel action picturse featuring Buddy Roosevelt; eight featuring Buffalo Bill, Jr., and eight featuring the new star, Wally Wales. These three series will be released under the Artclass banner.

Under the trade-mark of the Clarion Photoplays, Inc., Weiss Brothers will present also Leo Maloney in a series of eight five-reel Western Gems. Leo Maloney is a well-established star with a large following gained through the many successful features in which he has been seen in the past. With him in this series will be his trained horse, Senator, and his inseparable companion, a dog, "Bullets." The stories for this series will be written, as in the past, by Ford Beebe. New sets and locations will appear in this series and no effort will be spared to make them as good as possible.

The program of last year released by Weiss Brothers is now bearing fruit in the number of excellent reports made by exhibitors to the trade papers and to exchanges. A number of exchanges who handled the pictures in their respective territories last year have opened negotiations for the larger 1925-26 program. Territories are now being allotted and in every instance, Louis Weiss, Managing Director of both the Artclass Pictures Corporation and the Clarion Photoplays, Inc., is giving those exchanges who handled the last year's program the preference in their territories. A number of those exchanges put a great deal of effort out to put the Buffalo Bill, Jr., series and the Buddy Roosevelt series over with their customers. Through the high quality of these pictures the exchanges handling them gained a large number of steadfast exhibitor friends, and it is naturally their desire to profit by their own efforts and the popularity of the stars and their pictures with the new program.

Mr. Weiss anticipates no difficulty in selling all territories early in the season, since he has had a number of inquiries from exchange men who did not handle last year's program. As a last resort Mr. Weiss states that he will go into all territories where he can not get a good opening with his own exchange. These territories will be covered either with an exchange under the Artclass name or by the acquisition of an interest in some live exchange where the Artclass product will be given sales effort and attention.

Two large territories have so far been actually signed. They are the Specialty Film Company, with offices at 1914 Main St., Dallas, Texas; 1122 Markham St., Little Rock, Arkansas, and 306 West Reno St., Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

The other territory is sold to the Enterprise Distributing Corporation with offices at 326 South Church St., Charlotte, N. C.; 1000 Perdido St., New Orleans, La., and 87 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga.

Mr. Weiss has also consummated a deal with Renown Pictures, Inc., whereby Artclass will have its own branch under its own name in the offices of Renown Pictures. These branches will be under the advice and direction of Renown and the actual physical distribution of the prints will be done by them. These Artclass exchanges will be located in the Renown offices, at 729 Seventh Ave., New York City, for Metropolitan New York and Northern New Jersey; 505 Pearl Street, Buffalo, N. Y., for New York State, and 806 So. Wabash Ave. for Chicago and Northern Illinois.

Another office will be opened in Indianapolis in the very near future. M. H. Hoffman, Vice-President and General Manager of Renown, is now in Chicago, making final arrangements for this opening, and following his return definite announcement in regard to the Indianapolis office will be made. Until the opening of that office the business for the territory of Indiana will be handled from the Chicago office.

The opening of its own direct office by a State Right organization may be something new on the calendar, but circumstances in the market have made it necessary. Certain State Right organizations have put a great deal of capital in the production end of their business, and too many times have signed for a territory only to have the pictures neglected, or, at least, not played up to their very best.

It is this fact, and also the benefits to be derived from the necessity for a number of intermediate handlings, that will make it necessary for producers to seek national releases or their own exchanges.

Independent Producers as a whole do not wish to go into their own distribution, but where their pictures can not be assured of proper attention they will do so to protect themselves. Artclass has a schedule for this year more than sufficient to justify special handling, and it is the intent of Mr. Weiss to see that the pictures get attention.

LOUIS WEISS

The managing director of Artclass Pictures admits he's been trying to cover "play dates" for his attractions, for lo! these many years —and nearly getting away with it. So now, while everybody's talking "play dates" Louis is moving faster than ever.

Exploitation Helps for Four Gotham Productions

EXHIBITOR'S booking the first four Gotham Productions for the coming season will, in addition to the usual motion picture publicity, receive the benefits which accrue from national co-operation with large organizations, it is claimed by Sam Sax, of Lumas Films, distributors of the Gotham product.

Arrangements are now being completed whereby "The Overland Limited," the first Gotham release, will receive the active co-operation of various railroad fraternal organizations all over the country and also special publicity in towns along the route of the Union Pacific Railroad Co.

Police Departments throughout the United States are being lined up in connection with "The Police Patrol," scheduled for the second Gotham release. A special trailer and title strip of film is being made for each police department to use in connection with the local showing of the picture.

H. L. Gates, author of "Joanna" and other well known fiction serials is now well along with the work of serializing "A Little Girl In A Big City," which will be syndicated through the Thompson Feature Service in every key city and in many of the smaller cities throughout the country.

A tie-up with the Travelers Aid Society is also available everywhere for this, the third Gotham production. Release number four on the Gotham program is "His Master's Voice," featuring Thunder, the Marvel Dog. Negotiations are now under way for an extensive commercial tie-up with the Victor Talking Machine Company in connection with this picture which offers some unusual and unique angles for co-operation between Victor dealers and exhibitors.

Mr. Sax, in bringing out these points, declared himself emphatically in favor of intensive exploitation behind each production. The tie-ups already effected for the first four pictures are just the forerunners of the season's campaign as similar tie-ups are being planned for the balance of the twelve Gotham productions, all of which have exploitation titles and which include; "The Part Time Wife," "Racing Blood," "One of the Bravest," "The Shadow on the Wall," "The Speed Limit," "The Sign of the Claw," "The Forest of Destiny," and "Hearts and Spangles."

Outstanding Casts Picked For Schulberg's Pictures

CASTS in which the oustanding personalities of the screen will be featured, will add to the box-office worth of the eighteen Preferred Pictures which B. P. Schulberg will present during the coming season. The producer is building up a stock company of his own and will also use the best available talent from the ranks of free-lance artists or players who may be borrowed from other organizations.

Under contract to Mr. Schulberg's company are three already popular players—Clara Bow, Alyce Mills and Donald Keith.

Clara Bow, discovered two seasons ago by Mr. Schulberg, is one of the most prominent actresses on the screen today.

Miss Mills went to the coast last winter for B. P. Schulberg Productions and has already established herself in the lead of two Preferred Pictures—"Faint Perfume" and "My Lady's Lips." Other producers have recognized her ability and she is appearing for F. B. O. in the feminine lead in their big special, "The Keeper of the Bees."

Donald Keith is another new personality recently developed by Mr. Schulberg. He made a distinct hit in "The Boomerang" and in "Baree, Son of Kazan."

The casts for the first two Preferred Pictures for release on the new schedule have been announced, and are typical of the big names with which Schulberg will endow his future pictures.

"Parisian Love" F. Oakley Crawford's novel which Gasnier is directing, features in its cast Clara Bow, Lou Tellegen, Donald Keith, Alyce Mills, Hazel Keener, Lillian Leighton, James Gordon Russell, Jean de Briac and Otto Mathieson.

The players in Gertie D. Wentworth-James' story, "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work," are Lionel Barrymore, Marguerite de la Motte, Henry B. Walthall, Lilyan Tashman, and Forrest stanley.

The "Audience Angle"

Jack Cohn, of Columbia Pictures, has received a number of letters of commendation on the first of each of the Columbia, Waldorf and Perfection releases from exchange men all over the country. These pictures are: "The Danger Signal," "Enemy of Men" and "Fighting Youth," respectively. "These pictures have the real audience angle," the consensus of opinion seems to be.

New H. B. Wright Film

Formal announcement is made that United Artists Corporation will release Sol Lesser's forthcoming film version of Harold Bell Wright's famous novel, "The Winning of Barbara Worth," which production, it is said, will be added to the fall schedule of releases.

In "The Overland Limited," shown here, Gotham Pictures signed a cast that includes Ralph Lewis (the engineer), Mary Carr, Alice Lake, Ethel Wales, John Miljon, Malcolm MacGregor, Olive Borden, and Charles Post. Frank O'Neill directed.

"The Unchastened Woman"

Photographic Work Ended, and Cutting of Chadwick Picture Begins

Theda Bara, who, at the time of her retirement, was one of the most sensational stars of screendom, has this week completed the photographing of the final scenes of "The Unchastened Woman," her first vehicle for Chadwick Pictures Corporation.

Director James Young and Douglas Doty, screen adaptor of the famous Louis K. Anspacher stage success, are now engaged in cutting and editing the picture at the F. B. O. Studios in Los Angeles, where the production was made.

I. E. Chadwick, President of the Company, is said to be well pleased with the picture, which represents the most pretentious effort of his company. After viewing the picture in the initial stages of the cutting, he said he is convinced that it will be one of the big dramatic successes of the coming season.

Wynne-Jones Returning

Due Back on the Homeric, July 14, From Conferences With Ufa

Frederick Wynne-Jones, American representative of Ufa Films, Berlin, is returning from conferences in Germany which will settle the details for presenting "Siegfried" at the Century Theatre, New York City, next month.

Mr. Wynne-Jones has been conferring on the Continent with the managing directors of Ufa and in London with Lee Shubert. He is scheduled to arrive in New York on Tuesday, July 14, on the Homeric.

Mr. Wynne Jones will issue an extremely important statement shortly after he comes ashore.

"Graustark" Bookings

One of the earliest showings of First National's new Norma Talmadge picture, "Graustark," which will be distributed as a special, will be at the Metropolitan Theatre, Atlanta, Ga. It is booked for a pre-release showing there begining August 17th, during the Greater Movie Season. "Graustark" is scheduled for general showings during the month of August, making it one of the biggest attractions of the year which First National has made available for the Greater Movie Season.

Billy West Forms Company; Rayart to Distribute Product

A NEW company was formed in New York this week known as West Productions, Inc., which will produce a series of feature-length comedies starring Billy West, the well known comedian. The company, organized by the comedian himself, is headed by George West, the comedian's brother, as president. Billy West himself will be vice-president and general manager.

The company will start work at once in Hollywood on the production on a series of four feature-length comedies starring Mr. West, surrounded by a cast of popular comedy favorites.

It will be remembered that Billy West has been prominent in the field of two-reel comedies for many years past. He has starred in no less than 165 two-reel comedies.

The new West Company will handle physical distribution of their product through W. Ray Johnston's Rayart Picture Corporation, also maintaining head quarters and sales offices at the Rayart Offices, 723 Seventh avenue, New York City.

In speaking of his new plans the comedian states:

"The cry all over the United States—in fact all over the world—seems to be for comedy. The people in seeking their amusement want to laugh rather than study problems presented to them in the guise of screen entertainment. From all parts of the country I have had letters from my fans asking me to go in for the high type of clean, fast action, fun-loving feature comedies that have endeared other famous comedians to their hearts. It is in answer to this demand that we are going into feature production and will produce a series of four speedy comedy features for release on the Rayart program for the 1925-26 season."

Complete Cast Announced For "The Part Time Wife"

SINCE the previous announcement that Alice Calhoun would carry the leading and title role in "The Part Time Wife," ntth of a series of twelve Gotham productions, some cast changes have been made and the complete list of players lined up. Alice Calhoun will remain as the leading player and Robert Ellis will have the principal male role and the supporting cast consists of Arthur Hoyt, Edwards Davis and Freeman Wood.

Two beautiful and accomplished young women will also have important roles and it is not too much to state that their names will be very familiar with the photoplay public before many months have past. The two players referred to are Patricia Palmer and Janice Peters.

Some unusual twists of screen technique are in preparation for this story, which has for its characters the personnel of a motion picture studio. While the plot of one story is being unfolded the action of a counter plot is shown as the action of a picture being made in the studio, in which the characters of the main story are working.

Alice Calhoun will have the best opportunity of her screen career in this story, while Robert Ellis has a most difficult role in the character of the poor husband of a wealthy screen star.

"The Part Time Wife" is scheduled for early Fall release, but it is part of the Gotham policy to have all prints and advertising matter ready at least a month or more in advance.

James P. Hogan To Direct "SOS Perils of the Sea"

HARRY COHN, production manager of Columbia Pictures, has signed James P. Hogan, one of the best directors in the business, to handle the megaphone for Elaine Hammerstein's forthcoming release, "SOS Perils of the Sea," one of the biggest specials ever made by these producers.

Hogan is credited with some of the biggest winners of the past few seasons, "Capital Punishment," "Black Lightning," and "My Lady's Lips" among them.

"SOS Perils of the Sea" was adapted from a story published in a leading magazine, by Lillian Taft Maiz, whose works have been turned into a number of big screen successes.

Miss Hammerstein is now engaged in making "The Unwritten Law," also a Columbia production, and although the pretty star has been hopeful of running off for a two weeks' vacation, she has agreed to start work on "SOS Perils of the Sea" as soon as "The Unwritten Law" is completed.

A number of well known character actors now under contract with Columbia will play opposite Miss Hammerstein. Actual casting will begin shortly after Cohn and his technical staff complete details on the technical end of the production.

Begins "The Best People"

Sidney Olcott will lose no time in beginning the production of "The Best People" for Paramount. He has only recently completed "Not So Long Ago" in which Betty Bronson and Ricardo Cortez are featured. This week he will begin "The Best People."

Truart Output Sold

All Productions To Go To Australia, New Zealand and Tasmania

The Hi-Mark Film Sales Corporation, 220 West 42nd street, New York City, through Nat Nathanson, general manager, announces that it has bought the entire production output of the Truart Film Corporaion for Australia, New Zealand and Tasmania.

The negotiations were concluded with M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Truart Film Corporation, just prior to his leaving for Los Angeles. The pictures involved are the six Blue Ribbon series titles, "Dollar Down," "The Hurricane," "Salvage," "Where the Worst Begins," "Age of Indescretion" and "Marrying Money;" four Novelty productions, "Three In Exile," "The Silent Witness," "Pals" and "The Wild Girl," featuring Louise Lorraine, Rex, the wonder dog and Black Beauty, the marvelous horse; and four Cinemelodrama series and the Truart Special, "Romance Road," featuring Raymond McKee.

To Play Opposite Valentino

Vilma Banky, noted European film star, has been selected to play opposite Rudolph Valentino in his new film and his first production for United Artists Corporation, "The Black Eagle," according to word just received from Joseph M. Schenck at the office of Hiram Abrams, president of the United Artists organization. Additional information from Hollywood is to the effect that work has already been started on "The Black Eagle,"—which formerly had been tentatively called "The Untamed."

"Hell's Highroad" Finished

Cecil B. De Mille's first contribution on the altar of independent film production is finished. "Hell's Highroad," a Leatrice Joy starring picture, has been transferred by Director Rupert Julian from the stages to the cutting room. It is Mr. De Mille's first offering under his new contract with Producers Distributing Corporation.

"Hell's Highroad" was adapted by Eve Unsell and Lenore J. Coffee from the novel by Ernest Pascal. Also featured are Edmund Burns, Robert Edeson and Julia Faye.

National Exploitation Tie-Ups For First Four of Gotham Films

EXHIBITORS booking the first four Gotham Productions for the coming season will, in addition to the usual motion picture publicity, receive the benefits which accrue from national co-operation with large organizations it is claimed by Sam Sax of Lumas Films, distributors of the Gotham product.

Arrangements are now being completed whereby "The Overland Limited" the first Gotham release, will receive the active co-operation of various railroad fraternal organizations all over the country and also special publicity in towns along the route of the Union Pacific R. R. Co.

Police Departments all over the country are being lined up in connection with "The Police Patrol" which is scheduled for the second Gotham release. A special trailer and title strip of film is being made to use for each police department to use in connection with the local showing of the picture.

H. L. Gates, author of "Joanna" and other well known newspaper fiction serials is now well along with the work of serializing "A Little Girl In A Big City" which will be syndicated through the Thompson Feature Service in every key city and in many of the smaller cities throughout the country. A tie-up with the Travellers Aid Society is also available everywhere for this, the third Gotham Productions. Release number four on the Gotham Program is "His Master's Voice" featuring Thunder, the marvel dog. Negotiations are now under way for an extensive commercial tie-up with the Victor Talking Machine Company in connection with this pcture which offers some unusual and unique angles for co-operation between Victor dealers and exhibitors.

New Style Press Sheet For Gotham Productions

CURRENT with the release of "The Overland Limited" there comes to notice a variation in the style and make-up of the exhibitor's campaign book issued by the Lumas Film Corporation for the new series of Gotham productions.

The sheet is made up in regulation newspaper tabloid size with pages sized 11x18 inches, with five newspaper columns set in standard measure. The paper used is of better grade than used by newspapers to allow for fine screen half tone cuts.

There are eight pages, and in compact form will be found everything the average theatre can use in formulating a campaign for the picture.

The first page is devoted to a condensed synopsis of the story, complete cast and billing matter and an editorial comment of what type of production it is. On the succeeding pages are condensed advance notices, reviews, catchlines and feature stories written in typical newspaper style and notable for their brevity.

A most comprehensive exploitation campaign is laid out with no impossible or difficult stunts for the smaller exhibitor. All accessories are illustrated and nine different style of line ads. for newspapers are provided.

On the whole, it is a most compact and useful, in fact indispensable, article for the exhibitor. The sheet was compiled and edited by Lon Young, whose experience in advertising and exploitation matters is well known in the industry.

Renard Hoffman Casting for New Gotham Picture

SAM SAX received advices from the West Coast Studios last week that actual production work on the fifth of the series of twelve Gotham Productions has started. The story is entitled "The Part Time Wife," an adaptation by Victoria Moore of Peggy Gaddis' magazine story to be published July 20th in Snappy Stories Magazine.

Alice Calhoun has been selected for the title role with the well known actor-director, Robert Ellis in the chief male role. Others mentioned for the supporting cast are, Lloyd Whitlock, Edwards Davis and Laska Winters.

Some very unique scenes and situations are provided for in this story, which has for its principal theme the trying position of a hard working but poor young man who marries a famous and wealthy moving picture star. The clash of temperaments and the difference in positions provides some very dramatic moments.

Many scenes of this picture should prove very fascinating to the dyed-in-the-wool film fans, as actual production work on a motion picture will be shown as part of the story. Many side lights of studio life will be revealed.

With four pictures actually delivered, a fifth started and preparatory work under way for the balance of the program, Sam Sax estimates that he will be in a position to make delivery of his entire program several months ahead of the promised delivery date to exchanges.

Chadwick Pictures To Spend $2,000,000 for Fall Output

WITH the completion during the past week of three important productions on the Fall schedule of the Chadwick Pictures' Corporation, it became known that I. E. Chadwick, president of the organization, and one of the foremost factors in the independent film field, had completed plans for the making of at least fourteen other feature pictures, involving an investment of approximately two million dollars, at Los Angeles studios during the next four months.

Mr. Chadwick, who, in addition to heading the producing and distributing organization bearing his name, is president of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America, has heretofore confined his producing activities exclusively to the East. Going to Los Angeles a few months ago, merely to supervise the filming of "The Wizard of Oz," he was quick to appreciate the advantage of picture making there, and immediately instituted the filming of three addiional productions.

The success which has marked the making of these pictures has been such as to convert the Eastern producer completely to the West Coast as a centre for his future activities, and with the possible exception of two offerings starring Lionel Barrymore, who is under contract to the Chadwick organization, and who by reason of stage engagements may be unable to go to Los Angeles, all of the productions of this company for the next season will be made there.

In addition to Lionel Barrymore and Larry Semon, the company has under contract such widely known motion picture personalities as Charles Ray, Theda Bara and George Walsh. Ray has just completed "Some Pun'kins," the first of a series of productions which he is to make under the Chadwick banner, in which he is supported by Duane Thompson, one of the 1925 Wampas Baby Stars; George Fawcett, Bert Woodruff, William Courtright, and other players of equal prominence. The picture was directed by Jerome Storm, responsible for many of the star's most conspicuous successes, and made under the supervision of Joseph De Grasse, who has also been long associated with him. It is said to excel any production ever made by the country boy favorite in its promise of popularity.

"American Pluck," first of a series of special attractions in which George Walsh is to be presented under the Chadwick banner, was made at the Selig Studios, under the direction of Richard Stanton. It is the type of thrilling action stories that first won this popular player recognition on the screen, and which provides him with ample opportunity to display his extraordinary athletic ability. Wanda Hawley is the girl for whom Walsh risks his neck in this first production. Others in the cast include Dan Mason, Leo White, Tom Wilson, Frank Leigh and Wilfred North.

Walsh is to make six productions for the Chadwick company, the script for the second of which is now in course of preparation by Frank Howard Clark, and work upon which will start at the Selig Studios this month.

Of particular interest in the schedule of this organizaion is the adaptation of Louis K. Anspacher's celebrated stage success, "The Unchastened Woman," in which Theda Bara will return to the screen, and for which the script was written by Douglas Doty, who was responsible for the scripts of "The Wife of a Centaur," King Vidor's Metro-Goldwyn production; Monta Bell's first triumph, "Broadway After Dark," and Mae Murray's most recent release, "Circe, the Enchantress."

In response to public interest, every effort is being made by the Chadwick organization, to assure the return of Miss Bara under conditions that will provide her with the opportunity for the fullest play of those talents which have won for her such a wide world following.

LEM F. KENNEDY

The producer of the feature picture, "Down on the Suwanee River," is here shown visiting the river made famous in the old song. This spot is near White Springs, Florida. A Lee-Bradford release.

Val Paul Signed

Hunt Stromberg has engaged Val Paul as Production Manager for his various units. Paul was a director before changing over into the business and of the industry and comes to the Stromberg Organization with a record that has caused him to be considered one of the best-versed men in the West Coast studios.

Lem Kennedy Presents Fine Players in "Suwanee River"

LEM F. KENNEDY has returned to New York from the South with his picture, "'Down On The Suwanee River," which has for its leads Mary Thurman and Charles Mack, supported by Arthur Donaldson, Walter P. Lewis, Blanche Davenport, and the promising juvenile, Wally Merrill, with other well-known players.

When speaking of his experiences in taking "exteriors" on the actual river of the immortal song, Mr. Kennedy admits that he was agreeably surprised at the beauty he found. He had not dreamed, he declares, that the real Suwanee River was so beautiful a stream, and goes to say it is no wonder that Stephen C. Foster made it the theme of his famous melody.

The photoplay was written by Hapsburg Liebe, author of "Bill Apperson's Boy" for Jack Pickford, "Trimmed," for Hoot Gibson, etc.

Mr. Liebe was with the troupe on location. The production will be released by the Lee-Bradford Corporation. Assisting Mr. Kennedy was Mellville J. Shyer. L. E. Williams had charge of the camera.

George Walsh in scenes in Chadwick's "Blue Blood," in which Cecille Evans and Philo McCullough support the athletic star.

FREDERICA SAGOR

The adapter of Percy Marks' novel, "The Plastic Age," for B. P. Schulberg's program next year, is one of the best scenarists in the artistic end of the industry.

"Biggest Year," Brandt Says

President of Columbia Pictures Sees Record Breaker Ahead

Joe Brandt, President of Columbia Pictures, has arrived in California and is conferring with production manager Harry Cohn. Brandt states that the present season should be the biggest in the history of the motion picture industry for both independent producers as well as the independent exhibitors.

"They are still discussing the workable suggestions of the Milwaukee Convention and whenever exhibitors are willing to discuss a situation for several months in succession," Brandt explained, "it means that a banner year for independent pictures is in sight."

Harry Cohen—Author!

Production manager Harry Cohn of Columbia Pictures has started to work on the continuity of an original story from his own pen which he recently wrote for lovely Dorothy Revier, "the most beautiful girl in California." He has several titles in mind, and will not disclose, until he is finished with the working script, the specific title which he intends to use.

New Star Enters Lists Under Artclass Banner

AMONG the season's crop of fast action pictures with riders, jumpers and acrobatic actors in general, will be one chap quite noticeable in the front of the crowd. When there is some fast riding to be done he will do it. When a new thrill or a new stunt is performed, his smiling youthful face will greet the spell-bound audience. When a new hero is found for the feminine fans to write admiring letters to it, it will be Wally Wales.

Wally Wales is a young man with the background of his early years spent on ranches with his legs literally tied about the horse's belly, punching cows for a living when he should have been at school, finally going to school in a shack with six other pupils, receiving the rudiments of an education which is all the early days on the plains offered the young boy when it offered anything.

With such a background this young man came to Hollywood. He had good looks, is tall, slender and he could act, but chiefly he could ride like the very wind itself, and he was afraid of nothing. He could do any stunt that a director with an imagination could think of and then invented a few of his own.

Lester F. Scott, Jr., of Action Pictures, Inc., who produces pictures for Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures corporation, saw Wally, and found that he had great possibilities for an acrobatic rider and forthwith engaged him. He will be featured in a series of eight five-reel Acrobatic Stunt Thrillers released for distribution by Weiss Brothers on their 1925-26 program.

Two pictures in his series have been completed. They are "Tearin' Loose" and "The Hurricane Horseman." The first of the series has been reviewed with great approbation by the trade press as a whole, and the second, according to advance information, is even better than the first. He has all the elements of a popular fan star and great things are predicted for him.

Beautiful Dorothy Revier's First Waldorf Production

DOROTHY REVIER, picked as the prize California beauty in a recent contest, and a 1925-26 Wampas star, now under a long term contract with Columbia Pictures, has a charming role in her first Waldorf production, "Enemy of Men," screened for the home office executives this week.

When Harry Cohn, Production Manager, signed this lovely star, a number of the biggest producers were angling for her signature. Mr. Cohn has agreed to loan her to Rudolph Valentino for his forthcoming "The Hooded Falcon," in which production she is to have the feminine lead.

A few years ago Miss Revier was practically unknown outside of San Francisco, her native city, where she was the featured dancer at a leading hotel. Her beauty attracted picture producers soon after she made her appearance in Hollywood.

Columbia met her demands before the other producers woke up, but she will undoubtedly be "loaned" from time to time.

"Enemy of Men" has a large cast, including Charles Clary, Barbara Luddy, Caesare Gravina, Virginia Marshall, Leo White and Laura La Varnie. Frank Strayer handled the megaphone. Douglas Bronston wrote the story.

Miss Revier is also featured with Jane Novak and Robert Edeson under Erle C. Kenton's direction in the first of the Columbia brand productions, "The Danger Signal," considered a worthy successor to "The Midnight Express."

Adds New Directors

Hal Roach has announced that he has added two new directors to his already large staff engaged in the making of pictures for Pathe release. Eddie Dillon and Roy Clements are the new additions.

Buddy Roosevelt and Faye. ckless Courage," first of the 1925-26 series of Rough Riding Romances for Artclass.

Splendid Campaign Booklet on B. P. Schulberg Pictures

ONE of the most attractive announcements of the 1925-26 season, which comes to our desk in the form of a thirty-two page booklet bound in an especially attractive soft blue embossed four-page cover, was designed by Miss Virginia Morris, of B. P. Schulberg Productions, Inc., 117 West 45th Street, New York City.

Miss Morris, director of advertising and publicity for the Schulberg organization, has made the very best use of her pages. Following a brief summary, Miss Morris devotes a page to each of the following Preferred Pictures:

"Shenandoah," "The Plastic Age," "With This Ring," "Lew Tyler's Wives," Parisian Love," "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work," "The Other Woman's Story," "Eden's Fruit," "Exclusive Rights," "Shopworn," "The Aristocrat," "Studies in Wives," "Shameful Behavior?," "His New York Wife," "Dancing Days," "The Worst Woman," "Horses and Women" and "The Romance of a Million Dollars."

Two pages are devoted to authors signed by Mr. Schulberg. This list includes Percy Marks, author of "The Plastic Age"; Fanny Heaslip Lea, author of "With This Ring"; Evelyn Campbell, author of "Exclusive Rights"; Larry Evans, author of "The Aristocrat" and "The Worst Woman"; Elizabeth Dejans, author of "The Romance of a Million Dollars"; Wallace Irwin, author of "Lew Tyler's Wives"; John Goodrich, author of "Eden's Fruit" and Royal A. Baker.

Miss Morris devotes two pages of her announcement booklet to some of the principal stars and supporting players in the Schulberg casts. This remarkable list includes Clara Bow, Donald Keith, Claire Windsor, Lon Chaney, Barbara La Marr, Bert Lytell, Mae Busch, Frank Mayo, Colleen Moore, Lou Tellegan, Alyce Mills, House Peters, Betty Blythe, Walter Long, Madge Bellamy, Alice Joyce, Anita Stewart, Owen Moore, George Hackathorne, William Powell, Mary Carr, Bryant Washburn, Myrtle Steadman, Ethel Clayton, Elliott Dexter, Patsy Ruth Miller, Jack Mulhall, Phyllis Haver, Harrison Ford, Ruth Clifford, Lloyd Hughes, Betty Francisco, Seena Owen, Alec B. Francis, Gladys Hulette, Estelle Taylor and Forrest Stanley.

Box-office reports on a number of Preferred Pictures take two pages of the book, and two pages are also devoted to photoplay achievements on previous programs of the Schulberg studios.

This booklet has been mailed to a number of theatre owners and copies are available on request. Miss Morris is very justly entitled to our congratulations for her splendid achievement in presenting the facts succinctly, and at the same time bending the printer's art to her every whim. Therefore, we congratulate Miss Morris!—C. E. H.

Weiss Brothers Have Eight Features Ready to Release

PRODUCTION on the new 1925-26 series being released by Weiss Brothers Artclass Pictures Corporation is well under way. It is the intention of Louis Weiss, Managing Director of Artclass Pictures, that the exhibitor will be enabled to walk into his exchange and see several pictures in each series before he books them, so that he can have a definite idea of just what he is getting when he writes his name on the dotted line.

This was his method of procedure last year and the results have only too well justified the procedure.

Lester F. Scott, Jr., head of Action Pictures is the producer of the Three series featuring Buffalo Bill, Jr., Buddy Roosevelt and Wally Wales respectively. He is rushing production as fast as he can without skimping the productions in any way. Nothing is cheapened to make time but efficiency is gained by having the most minute details of production planned far in advance.

The rotation of directors in interior sets and the arrangements for exterior locations have all been set and when a director receives his script he has everything ready to go ahead without delay and complete the picture with no waste of time.

This method of procedure has enabled the studios to complete eight features in the 1925-26 program. They are as follows.

In the Buddy Roosevelt Series "Reckless Courage," "The Galloping Jinx" and "Action Galore." In the Buffalo Bill, Jr. Series are "Quicker 'N Lightnin'" "The Desert Demon," and "The Saddle Cyclone." In the Wally Wales Series are "Tearin' Loose" and "The Hurricane Horseman." The third in both the Buffalo Bill, Jr., series and the Wally Wales series are now under way and will be completed within the next two weeks.

At the present rate of progress, Mr. Weiss expects that the whole production program will be completed by next December, three months ahead of the schedule originally announced.

Betty Bronson Coming East

Betty Bronson will leave in one month for Paramount's Long Island studio to prepare for the leading role in another famous Sir J. M. Barrie play, "A Kiss For Cinderella," which is to be released for the coming Christmas season. "A Kiss For Cinderella" is to be the second special Christmas feature production of a Barrie story by Paramount. It was prepared for the screen by Willis Goldbeck.

"The Wedding Song"

Having completed "Hell's Highroad," her first starring picture for Cecil B. De Mille, Leatrice Joy will have a vacation of three weeks before the start, early in July, of "The Wedding Song," her second production under De Mille's supervision.

Weiss Bros. Announce the Release of New Short Subjects on 1925-26 Program

Among the regular series of action pictures which Weiss Brothers Artclass Pictures Corporation will distribute this coming season there will be a new short subject novelty.

It will be a series of one reel films and will be entitled "Guess Who." It will be a reel in which the audience will take part. It will consist of a number of shots of famous stars who are well known to the public as a whole. Appropriate titles will give vague hints as to the star's identity and it will be the part of the audience to mark the order of their appearance on the screen on a card which will have the list of stars' names printed in alphabetical order. These cards will be given to the audience upon its entrance to the theatre. Suitable prizes can be given to the winner. It is anticipated that this film will be of great interest to theatre patrons since it plays on the public's well known ability to identify many screen stars immediately upon their being seen on the screen.

The card which is given at the entrance to the theatre has a place for the name and address of the participant and on the reverse side has enough room for the whole week's program for that theatre.

There will be six of these reels in the series and each one will have twenty-five stars and no "repeats" in the series.

Independent Pictures Corp. Speeding Up on Production

WITH all cylinders hitting, the various departments of Independent Pictures Corporation are teeming with activity. At the West Coast, production activities headed by Jesse J. Goldburg, are going ahead with all possible speed, to keep pace with the demands of the sales organization.

Besides making necessary improvements on the studio which the concern acquired, four companies are at work shooting right up to schedule. The studio is being enlarged to adequately house the units at work.

Eleven permanent sets are now in the course of construction to accommodate the requirements for "Western atmosphere."

The first of the new series of the personality-plus star, Bill Cody, has been completed and is titled "A Man's Fight." Mr. Goldburg promises exchangemen and exhibitors a novelty surprise in this subject. He claims that "A Man's Fight" is the best picture Bill Cody has made. Featured with Bill in this story is "Flashlight," the human horse, and if reports are half correct—he must be a wonder.

The second of the Bill Cody's, "Shooting Straight," is in preparation, and the cameras will start clicking just as soon as Bill gets off the crutches with which he has been forced to navigate since completing "A Man's Fight."

Adele Buffington, head of the scenario department for all production units of this concern, personally wrote the continuity of the first of the Big Timber Productions, featuring Lightnin', the super-dog titled "Lightnin' Strikes." Lightnin' is now undergoing special training daily with Harry Marks, the well-known trainer. While production is going ahead with full speed on the first story, every available minute that can be spared for Lightnin' is given to Marks and the manner in which the animal is responding to direction is uncanny. He is so intelligent and has absorbed his training so perfectly that one rehearsal on the set is all that Lightnin' requires to go through with his daily dozen. The entire studio force is enthusiastic over the performance of the dog.

The third unit is working on the second Bob Custer series, which is being released by F. B. O. Bob Custer has proven himself a tremendous drawing card and Goldburg intends to build the second series on a much larger basis than heretofore.

The fourth company is at work on the short subject entitled "The Screen Book of Knowledge." Reports from the coast indicate that this subject will be one of the finest mediums offered to exchanges in the short subject field for the coming season. As the title suggests, it is calculated to give the tired parents a chance to rest from the youngster's usual series of queries by taking him to a theatre where all questions that a kid could possibly ask will be answered direct from the silver sheet.

JESSE J. GOLDBURG

President of Independent Pictures Corporation, promises a high-class program to his exhibitors. In addition to rapid-action Westerns and strong dramas, Independent will produce "The Screen Book of Knowledge."

Head of Aywon Film Corp. Announces 1925-26 Line-up

NATHAN HIRSH, president of Aywon Film Corporation, announces the biggest line of attractions for exhibitors they have ever handled.

Foremost on their list for 1925-26 will be three series of six productions each of features starring Kit Carson, Gordon Clifford and an all-star series of Marlborough pictures. In addition there will be added, from time to time, big special reductions of various kinds.

Aywon also will release a series of Jimmy Callahan Comedies, said to be just about the last word in laugh makers.

Several of the Kit Carson features have been completed. They are known as "Rocky Mountain Knockouts," being a different sort of outdoor thriller, with a connected plot and story carried throughout, and some really spectacular "stunts" are performed by the star. The Kit Carson pictures are being produced on the coast by Robert J. Horner under the supervision of Mr. Hirsh.

Gordon Clifford, supported by Charlotte Pierce, is appearing in a series of Western pictures. Clifford is considered the greatest "stunt" man in Hollywood and his pictures in the series to date bear out this reputation. In every one of them he risks life and limb to provide genuine thrills for the movie fans.

Mr. Hirsh predicts the greatest of all seasons for the independent producer and exhibitor. The market for good pictures has never been better, he says, and he looks forward to greater success with his well known organization than ever before.

Dorothy Revier, "the most beautiful woman in California," who is featured in Columbia Pictures Corporation's Waldorf series, and in a number of Columbia brand releases.

First of O. Henry's

Having selected Marion Harlan to be the "O. Henry Girl" of the films, Fox Film Corporation now announces that it has selected "Shoes" as the first of the celebrated short story writer's works that it will transfer to the screen.

To Harold Goodwin falls the role of leading man opposite Miss Harlan. Others to appear in this picture are Brooks Benedict, Charles French and Harvey Clark. The remainder of the cast will be announced later.

Bill Steiner's Line-up Has Proven Box-office Values

THE season of 1925-26, which promises to be the biggest year the Independents have known, will find William Steiner, bronzed veteran of many seasons, doing business at the "old stand" in No. 220 West 42nd Street, with a line-up of action features and attractive romantic dramas all of a calibre warranted to keep "Bill" busy for the next twelve months.

As a rule, exhibitors don't have to be told much about Bill Steiner, and when he says he's got a box-office picture the showmen who have been profiting by their long associations with this house take it for granted that they're going to slip a little money to the bank after giving the Steiner pictures a play.

Bill Steiner is optimistic, always. Listen to him:

"I've been making pictures a good many years. I hate to let on just how long, for somebody might pick me up with the trite remark that young Methuselah was my first leading man. I'm not denying anything, however, for an astute silence sometimes builds up 'publicity.' And besides I'm not going to throw down a guy like Methuselah. He must have been the right sort to have a brand of liquor named after him when he grew old.

"However, it has been my experience (this is what I started out to say) that such beggarly details as 'who wrote the story?,' 'who directed it?,' 'who paid for the production?,' 'what did it cost?' mean nothing. The only thing that counts with the public is entertainment value. Of course, the name of a 'star' may attract people to the box-office, but if the story is not suitable to the 'star' then it's 'good-night' so far as the public is concerned. For that reason, I always insist on having entertainment quality embodied in every release. The best of us sometimes slip a cog or two, but when catering to the masses I try to give them something that will 'get under the skin' and some wholesome humor to lighten the story.

"That 'wronged woman' and 'sex' stuff is 'out' with me, and any time I have anything to say about a picture it will be 'out.' After a day's work, who wants to go to a theatre and weep because some girl has become entangled in the meshes of some he-vamp, and tries to throw herself into the dark, cruel river that never gives up its dead? And how father risked his money in speculation and was 'ruined'; and the family that always had plenty is now struggling in poverty? Why should the public cry over the sap-head's foolish venture in the stock market, and other similar sequences?

"I hate to see the dark side of life picturized. It's not entertainment. It's stark tragedy. I believe in getting out into the sunlight. Let your patrons laugh, with now and then a bit of real sentiment to touch the heart and bring a tear and then dry it up with a big laugh at some clean, wholesome action. Look at the records of famous stage plays that enjoyed sensationally long runs—'Lightnin',' 'The Old Homestead,' 'Shore Acres,' 'Abie's Irish Rose.' What made these attractions famous? Not another blessed thing but the human appeal and wholesome laughter. And take it from me, Brother (you're the fellow who has to worry about his own box-office), this goes for motion pictures as well as stage plays.

"There may be a few (and darn few) who would rather wallow in filthy, suggestive situations in pictures. But they are so few that it's a big waste of time and money to cater to that trade. No self-respecting producer will do it, and life's too short. There is an abundance of clean, sweet things available. So I say (and say it right out loud): Give the public pictures that will entertain them and send them out of your theatre cheerful and happy, and not with that depressed feeling that a gloomy picture has on them!

"I pledge myself to follow what I preach for all time to come. Clean pictures of full value in 'entertainment' quality. Edith Thornton in 'Fair Play," supported by Lou-Tellegen and other well-known screen favorites, has broken theatre records, especially through New England, where John Marks, of the Cadillac Film Company of Boston is booking it in that territory. This is one of my offerings, and I am proud of it.

"Of course, the lovers of thrill and stunt dramas are all strong for Charles Hutchison, the creator of the dare-devil stuff. And we all know that good Western subjects please a vast number of people who love them better than almost any other type of picture. The riding, and the adventure iin the big open thrills them. They love to see their hero lick the daylights out of the villain. I guess it's a safe bet that this class of picture will live forever. I give my clients a goodly supply of 'Westerns' with such stars as Leo Maloney, Neal Hart and Pete Morrison, all feature length pictures. That's my story."

WILLIAM STEINER

If the boys will step right up and hand Bill, through his distributors, a big flock of play dates on his excellent "line-up," Bill says he'll take a week's vacation in the Spring of 1926.

Eugene O'Brien and Claire Windsor in "Souls for Sables," a Tiffany Production.

Jack Clifford Signed

Vaudeville Star Will Play in Charles Ray's New Picture

Jack Clifford, vaudeville star, has been signed for an important role in Charles Ray's second picture for Chadwick Pictures Corporation. Clifford's part in this production, tentatively entitled "The Winner," is said to offer him an opportunity to appear in a character similar to that which he assumed on the stage.

Other members of the cast, who have been selected to date, are Gertrude Olmstead, J. P. Lockney, Gertrude Short, Frank Austin and Sybil Johnson.

Jerome Storm, who directed "Some Pun'kins," Ray's first for Chadwick, will again direct.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

Berinstein of Troy Makes White Elephant Pay Well

Shake hands with Julius Berinstein of Troy, N. Y., who turned a veritable white elephant into a paying proposition by the simple expedient of keeping it clean and running it as though it was the highest priced theatre in town. It might be added that Mr. Berinstein comes from a theatrical family, his late father, William Berinstein, having been at the head of a chain of houses that embraced theatres in Albany, Troy, Schenectady, Elmira and elsewhere. Perhaps it all comes natural to Julius Berinstein, but anyhow it's interesting. His house is a 900-seat affair known as the Palace, several blocks removed from the business center of the city and charging a 10-cent admission.

Do you think for a minute that Mr. Berinstein gets the riff-raff simply because he charges 10 cents? Well, hardly. His house plays to the best people in Troy for the reason that it is spic and span, as cozy as the costliest house in town, with ushers that are always obliging and with a program that measures up to the best. Every week Mr. Berinstein personally inspects the house from top to bottom, even going so far as to first wash his hands and then rub his finger over the top of the lobby frames, or some other more or less inaccessible spot. If there is dust, woe be to the cleaner. Mr. Berinstein doesn't stand for any violations of a certain code of rules and doesn't hesitate to lay the offender off for a day or week, without pay. There have been instances where he has boosted some employee's pay, and then perhaps months later reduced that person when he found that he wasn't measuring up.

Mr. Berinstein doesn't stand for persons talking over the seats, or any slouching down or even so much as placing the arm over the back of the seat, three ushers and a man in front keeping their eyes open for offenders along this line. Another little thing that gives a better idea of the type of man and a reason for his success is the changing of the candelabra shades each week. Nothing much, but it simply gives a little different appearance to the interior and it all counts.

WILLIAM A. DILLON

New York State M. P. T. O. president. He's an oldtimer in the business and comes from a family long known in the theatrical world. He originally came from Cortland, N. Y., but now has the Strand Theatre, seating 1,600, in Ithaca. He has always taken an active interest in exhibitor affairs and at conventions is never afraid to "speak his piece."

Did Harry Lazarus, who runs the Auditorium in Kingston, enjoy the Fourth? We'll say he did. And he wasn't present at the big celebration either. Just fished along the Green River. Right here we'll let you in on a little secret. He used the despised worms and he a fly fisherman at that.

The good people of Albany, or at least that portion in the vicinity of the Hudson Theatre, are either automobiling or taking a nap afternoons these days, and as a result George Roberts has decided that there will be no more matinees until sometime in the early fall.

The Star in Newburgh is offering what are termed "Bargain Mondays" these days in the hopes of bracing up business a bit. The house charges 10, 15 and 20 cents and on one of the Bargain Mondays the program included "The Man from God's Country" and "Fast and Fearless."

The Gateway in Little Falls, which was recently acquired by the Schine brothers and which has been handled by Robert Wagner for some time past, closed on June 27 but will reopen early in the fall under the Schine banner. In the meantime the theatre will be somewhat altered.

Congratulate Ernest Tetrault of the Grand in Watervliet, and don't forget Mrs. Ernest at the same time. The couple were married last week and had in a few days' honeymoon. Mr. Tetrault is once more back at the theatre.

With his eyes a bit moist as he parted from an old friend, one that had stuck by him through thick and thin, through winter and summer, for the past twelve years or more, Benjamin Apple walked out of the King Theatre in Troy last Tuesday night and turned over the key to James Rose. Mr. Apple may eventually secure another theatre but there will never be a house like the old King, where he made the pile that was later lost in the American.

In what appears to be an effort to force Paramount pictures in Middletown, the Paramount company has been using one-half page newspaper ads in that city addressed to the theatre-going public of Middletown, calling attention to the fact that Paramount pictures can be seen at the Mitchell in Otisville, the Central in Goshen, the Lyceum in Florida and the Oakland in Warwick.

The city of Hudson is still small enough so that about everybody in town runs to the fire. The other day the fire alarm sounded and fully two-thirds of the people attending the matinee at one of the local picture houses ran out, inquiring whether it was "224" or "226." Theatre owners in that city have become so much accustomed to the practice that they pay little or no attention to it, probably figuring that so long as the people have paid their way into the house, they should be allowed to leave when they choose. The city is peculiar in that it has no second-run house. There are four theatres, the Star seating 373, the Park 475, the Playhouse 1,200 and the Rialto 450. Everyone runs to the house showing the picture first. Only one house has a balcony and as a result the rich man rubs elbows with the laborer.

Having accumulated something like a million or more, Louis Schine of Gloversville, one of the heads of a chain that numbers more than sixty-five theatres in New York State, decided last week that he could afford a vacation. Mr. Schine lost no time in heading for Atlantic City, where he remained over the Fourth. It was said that the vacation was the first Mr. Schine has taken in many a year.

Abe Stone, who has the Delaware and Arbor Theatres in Albany, looks like a fixture for the Capital City. He bought a new home last week, and while he will not renew his lease on one of the theatres he is now running, he will stand by with the other and may eventually be found to add another.

William Smalley leaves no stone unturned in getting after business. Here's a fair sample. In advertising in the Oneonta paper, Mr. Smalley, figuring that automobiles are like flies in central New York these days, calls attention to his theatres in Cooperstown, Sidney, Stamford and Worcester, not forgetting a dancing pavilion which he runs in Cooperstown.

The most honest exhibitor in all central New York, and this comes from the film exchanges, mind you, is Louis Scott, who runs the Opera House in Cazenovia and shows pictures once a week. "As honest as the day is long," is the way they speak of Mr. Scott, and then proceed to tell numerous reasons why. In fact, Mr. Scott has been so square with the film exchanges that even the film salesmen are frank and open in declaring that they would not take advantage of him.

Ben Stern, assistant manager at the Troy Theatre in Troy, spends about fifteen hours of the day on the job. Here's the reason. Ben's wife is spending the summer at Atlantic City. Ben shows up shortly before 10 A. M., and then works around the theatre until 11 P. M., for the simple reason, as he says, that he has "no place to go."

It never rains but it pours, for Tony Veiller, manager of the Lincoln Theatre in Troy. Mr. Veiller lives in Albany and drives his car between the two cities. Just as he reached the cemetery half way between Albany and Troy, he found himself minus gasoline. He walked a half mile and brought back a quart or so and then drove on to the next supply station, the owner of which in-

Salesmen Worried

Buffalo, N. Y., film salesmen are becoming alarmed at the increasing number of theatre chains and declare that their jobs are threatened by the movement. Chains are springing up all over the territory and some of the boys say they won't need salesmen soon.

Western New York now has the Schine Theatrical Corporation, Genessee Theatrical Enterprise, Affiliated Theatres, Inc., the Sharondale Corporation of North Tonawanda, Western New York Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., the Shea Amusement Company of Buffalo and many others.

In fact, it now looks like a race to see which company can get the most houses in this neck of the woods.

Canada

The large theatre at Petawana, Ontario, an important military camp center of Canada, was totally destroyed by fire on July 3, thus wiping out one of the special amusement places of the war days in the Dominion. The theatre, which was a big auditorium seating several thousand persons, was of frame construction and had been erected for the entertainment of soldiers during the days when they were training for war service. It was completely equipped for the presentation of pictures and was in use this summer for the soldiers now in encampment.

Peter Gorman of Ottawa, Ontario, one of the most widely known theatre men of Canada celebrated his sixtieth birthday on July 2 when he was showered with messages and gifts from his legion of friends all over the Dominion. He was born in London in 1865 and made his first appearance on the stage in Ottawa in 1876, becoming a great clog dancer. Later he undertook theatre managing and was associated for eighteen years with the late Ambrose J. Small of Toronto, who disappeared over five years ago. Mr. Gorman is also a prominent horse owner of Canada.

Harold Vance, formerly manager of the Starland Theatre, Montreal, and previously of Ottawa, has been appointed manager of the Majestic Theatre, Ottawa, by the proprietors, Messrs. Froman and Petergorsky. Mr. Vance, who is an experienced showman of years, has decided on a policy of two distinct shows only per day at 35 and 25 cents, offering photoplays, short film subjects and vaudeville.

Manager Coplan of the Imperial Theatre, Ottawa, a large independent house of the Canadian Capital, made a distinct success with the presentation of "The Fast Worker" for three days, July 1 to 3, through special advertising stunts. One stunt was the surcharging of 24-sheet posters of the feature with a special announcement sheet drawing the attention of prospective patrons to the effect that a block of seats would be reserved for this feature and urging them to secure seats in advance because of the rush. This had direct results because the block of reserved seats was sold out at every night performance.

John T. Fiddes, veteran exhibitor of Winnipeg, Manitoba, has taken upon himself an important sideline for the summer. In addition to being the proprietor of the Playhouse Theatre, Winnipeg, he has become the director of entertainment at Winnipeg Beach, a large watering place near the city. The features there are under the personal management of Frank Wade for Mr. Fiddes. In this way, Mr. Fiddes is cashing on the people's amusement winter and summer.

Theda Bara, whose first production for Chadwick Pictures Corporation on her return to the screen is "The Unchastened Woman," directed by James Young.

Buffalo, N. Y.

Jacob Farber, Batavia, clothing dealer and owner of the new Lafayette Theatre in the town, has turned the building over to Fred M. Zimmerman, president of Western New York Theatrical Enterprises, Inc., which has leased the theatre for fifteen years. The theatre is complete in every detail. James Kelly, formerly at the Avondale, North Tonawanda, has been appointed manager.

Jake Rappaport of the Lovejoy, a popular Buffalo East Side community house, says he remembers way back when it used to be a tough job to get 'em out of the theatre while now it's a harder job to get 'em in. Jake operated a theatre when they came in at a nickel a throw and brought their lunch and bedding with them, and when, having seen the same picture all afternoon and evening, asked him if that was all.

Elmer Winegar and John Kimberley put over a tieup with the Crystal Beach company this week through which tickets were distributed at the theatres good for Movie Day at the beach. On this day a two reeler was made showing a couple enjoying the amusements at the resort. This film will be shown next week at the theatres which gave out the tickets.

Krieger Brothers of Batavia, N. Y., former exhibitors in Rochester, will, it is reported, take over the Border Amusement Company houses in Buffalo on July 15. The houses involved in the deal are Ellen Terry, Marlowe and Star.

Arthur L. Skinner, manager of the Victoria Theatre, a popular Buffalo community theatre, is on his vacation at his summer home at Point Abino, near Crystal Beach, Ontario. He is spending most of his time chasing the elusive perch in the waters of Lake Erie.

Rhode Island

A theatre that will cost approximately $350,000 will be erected in Woonsocket, R. I., by New England Theatres, Inc., a subsidiary of Famous-Players-Lasky Corporation.

formed Mr. Veiller that he had a flat tire. As he started to change the tire, rain began to fall. That's all, but enough is enough, according to Tony.

Like the Stars and Stripes that "were still there," Jake Rosenthal, owner of the Rose Theatre in Troy, was right on hand the other night when his son graduated from the High School. Jake is mighty proud of his son and the dimes that come trickling through the wicket at the Rose will help pay for a college education during the years to come.

Valentino's popularity had absolutely nothing to do with Julius Byck naming his theatres in Hunter and Tannersville the Rudolf. It seems that Mr. Byck's father's name is Rudolf and the houses have been named after him. Mr. Byck, who has been an exhibitor for fifteen years, was along Film Row during the week sporting a tie loud enough to speak for itself. He was accompanied by Barnet Levy, 22 years of age, who handles the house in Hunter. With more summer folks coming these days, the house in Tannersville added a player piano and violinist during the past week.

The house at Bolton Landing will not operate this summer, according to reports along Film Row. The same holds true with the one at Long Lake. Lake George's Theatre is now running full blast with Mrs. Carpenter at the helm. M. B. Riddell of the Gem in Luzerne is spending his vacation in the West.

Jake Golden conducted the finals in the dance contest which he has been running at the Griswold in Troy, with much success. Prizes were awarded last Monday night with ten dancers competing. The results of the recent screen tests will be shown on July 5, 6 and 7 and will probably pack the house to the doors.

Benjamin M. Berinstein of Elmira has been named as supervising manager of all of the Berinstein houses in that city, with George Roberts of Albany continuing as general manager of the circuit.

There were some anxious days for Uly S. Hill, managing director of the Strand group of houses in this city and Troy, during the past week. One of Mr. Hill's sons was taken to a local hospital on Tuesday, where he submitted to an operation. The boy was brave and is now on the road to recovery.

A trip through the Catskill region during the past week developed the fact that C. R. Didsbury, who runs a theatre bearing his name at Walden, is a mighty good exploitation man and extremely popular in his community. Despite the size of the place, the house operates six days a week and is doing well. The same holds true of Jack Beck, who operates the Liberty and who is also in the insurance business. When it comes to showmanship the whole region will have to take off its hat to Fred H. Starck, who has turned the Rialto in Monticello, from a liability into an asset. Mr. Starck has a very pretty theatre and isn't afraid, through newspaper advertising and exploitation, to acquaint the people with the sort of pictures he is running.

Sam Hochstim of Hudson manages to take a day off once a week, when his brother Edward, who is employed along Film Row in Albany, journeys down for the Sunday. In days gone by this selfsame Edward used to be a sprinter who could negotiate the 100 yards in ten flat.

Sam Moroze of Albany will be a new comer among the exhibitors in that city after September 15, when he takes over the Delaware Theatre, a residential house. Walter Suckno, running the Albany and Regent Theatres, will look after the exploitation of the Greater Movie Season.

Pittsburgh

Several managerial changes took place in Pittsburgh theatres the week of June 29, beginning with the resignation of Charles Johnston, manager of Harry Davis' Ritz Theatre in downtown Pittsburgh. Mr. Johnston has gone to Canada for an indefinite stay in quest of his health.

Samuel De Fazio, for two years manager of Rowland and Clark's Blackstone Theatre, has accepted a similar position at the Ritz. Incidentally, De Fazio is rounding out his fourteenth year on "the avenue," having begun that many years ago as assistant to Manager Antonoplos of the Olympic Theatre. Since that time Sam has been manager of the Minerva, of Isaac Guckenheimer's Cameraphone and later manager of Guckenheimer's Blackstone for the two years it was conducted by Guckenheimer, prior to its sale to Rowland and Clark.

De Fazio is succeeded at the Blackstone by Joseph Smouse, who for a year and a half has been manager of Rowland and Clark's Arcade Theatre in the Southside. He, in turn, is being succeeded at the Arcade by W. L. Otey, who for seven years has been manager of the Colonial, Elks' and Rialto Theatres at Bluefield, W. Va.

C. A. Wagner, manager of the Soisson and Paramount Theatres, Connellsville, is making ready for a hunting trip to Alaska. He will go in company with Charles V. Hoover of Uniontown, well-known big game hunter. They plan to leave July 24 and will remain until September.

Larry B. Jacobs, one of Pittsburgh's best known publicity men, for the past nine months doing publicity for the Browarsky Brothers' Hippodrome and Variety Theatres on the Northside, and also the Rex, East Liberty, has severed his connection with that organization, and on July 6 took up his new duties as publicity director for Loew's Aldine Theatre in Pittsburgh.

Manager E. H. Brient of the State Theatre in downtown Pittsburgh has ninety window displays to boost the showing of "The White Monkey" at the State, week of July 6. Fifty of these displays are in book stores and the balance in music shops. Ninety window displays sounds like a record for Pittsburgh.

The Rowland and Clark Theatres worked an exceptional publicity stunt at their State Theatre during the week of June 29, when "The Early Bird," starring Johnny Hines, was the attraction. General Manager A. S. Davis of the R. & C. chain announced that in an effort to swell the milk and ice fund for the benefit of the poor children of the city, with every presentation of a Rieck-McJunkin milk bottle cap at the box-office during the week he would give 10 cents toward the fund.. The idea was a great success and thousands of milk bottle caps were turned into the box office.

Louis K. Sidney, managing director of Loew's Aldine Theatre, Pittsburgh, is vacationing in Atlantic City, accompanied by his family, having made the trip in his Packard Twin Six. It is "Sid's" first vacation in seven years, and he says he is resting up prior to a great season at the Aldine.

"Bob" Lynch and "Ed" Lebby, local Hallroom Boys, paid a visit to their friend Pat Bayer, of the Family Theatre, St. Mary's, recently, and desire to report that when it comes to hospitality Pat Bayer is there with bells on. Pat raises his own fruits and vegetables, and Mrs. Bayer bakes the bread, and the Hallroom Boys say they had the feed of their life.

J. O. Hooley, who three years ago resigned the managership of the Sheridan Square Theatre in East Liberty to go West, has returned and again taken up his old duties. Hooley has many friends here who are as glad to see him return as he is to get back.

Massachusetts

Well, if here ain't another New England pioneer exhibitor going back into the picture business. Louis Brown, who built the Elm Theatre in Danvers in 1911 and then sold it in 1920, again is the owner of the property. Mr. Brown recently closed the famous old Berry Tavern in Danvers and now he's going to return to the film field. He conducted the Elm for a number of years before he disposed of it.

Abraham Goodside, owner of the Capitol Theatre in Springfield, was victorious in a suit brought against him by a husband and wife for damages for injuries, which the woman alleged she suffered in a fall while in the theatre. They sued for $6,000.

Construction work is to be started soon on a theatre to be erected in the rear of the College House at Harvard Square, Cambridge. It will seat 1,800 and cost more than $300,000. While it is expected the policy will be exclusive motion pictures, a complete stage will be built. Harry N. Stearns and George L. Dow are in charge of the project. Charles A. Newhall is the owner of the property.

No matter how hot it may be, you never see any let-up in the energy of Earle Wilson, manager of Gordon's Olympia Theatre in Lynn. He just sheds his coat, rolls up his shirt sleeves and buckles down to the job no matter what need be done.

The Blanchard Brothers of Southbridge will spend $45,000 on remodeling the Hippodrome, a structure that has been utilized as a dance hall, into a first-class theatre.

W. J. Bradford is erecting a theatre on Maple and Chestnut streets, Quincy, to cost $150,000.

Iowa

Sam Crawford, who within the past few weeks sold his interest in the Strand Theatre at Griswold, Ia., died suddenly on June 21 after an illness of one day. Apparently few if any had any inkling that he was ailing and his death was a great surprise to all his friends and relatives.

The Orpheum Theatre at North English, Ia., has been sold by B. A. Cheney to B. Graham.

Park & Mitchell have sold the Opera House at Mitchell, Neb.

E. H. Robertson of the Crystal Theatre, Scribner, Neb., and M. B. Biemond of the Liberty Theatre, Loup City, Neb., were in Omaha recently.

A. Ziehl has sold the Lyric Theatre at Jewell, Ia., to D. L. Woodworth.

B. H. Schepers has bought the Star Theatre at Calloway, Neb. M. E. Scheringer & Son were the former owners.

Jake Cohen has sold the Lyric Theatre at Valley Junction, Ia.

Mr. Miller has sold the Princess Theatre at Odebolt, Ia., to H. H. Cone.

G. H. Derry has sold the Colesium Theatre at Lamoni, Ia., to a small college in that place.

The American Legion Theatre at Leigh, Neb., has been closed.

The Colonial Theatre at Grinnell, Ia., has been closed for the summer.

A. H. Blank of Des Moines, head of a big chain of Nebraska and Iowa theatres, has plans complete to build a fine twelve-room house on one of the fashionable streets of Des Moines.

"Looks Like a Big Leaguer," says everybody who sees George O'Brien, William Fox star, in action on a baseball lot. And, although he is not, it is within the range of reason to say he might have been if it was not for the lure of the movies and the keen eyes of Tom Mix, who saw in the youthful camera toter the making of a great star and had him signed up for acting instead of "totin'." George has never forgotten Tom's boost and shows it by playing on the Mix team, one of the hobbies of the Western star in which he takes much pride. In the above photo George is all ready to go out and uphold the Mix honor in a game against a team from one of the other studios.

Kansas City

A budget of $5,000 for preliminary expenses in the Greater Movie Season campaign in Kansas and Missouri has been arranged by R. R. Biechele, president of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri; Bruce Fowler, manager of the Newman Theatre; Jack Roth, manager of the Isis, and Dave Harding of Capitol Enterprise. An extensive poster display, which will be followed by newspaper advertising, is planned. A merchant co-operative campaign is planned for Kansas City, under the direction of Jay Means, vice-president of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri.

Among out-of-town exhibitors in Kansas City last week were: M. W. Jencks, Orpheum, Topeka, Kas.; C. L. McVey, Dreamland, Herrington, Kas.; Ed Peskay, Penn Theatre, St. Joseph, Mo.; Barney Dubinsky, Tootle Theatre, St. Joseph, Mo.; Mr. and Mrs. G. H. Frey, Peoples Theatre, Pleasant Hill, Mo.; Stanley Chambers, Miller Theatre, Wichita, Kas.; Charles Sears, Sears Circuit, Nevada, Mo.; W. H. Webber, Echo Theatre, Great Bend, Kas.

S. A. ("Dad") Davidson, Neodasha, Kas., exhibitor, finally found his way to Kansas City movie row after a long absence. He brought with him the same old smile which has won him a wide acquaintance.

An invitation which in all probability will be accepted wholesale, has been extended to Kansas City exhibitors by Roy Churchill, F. B. O. branch manager. Mr. Churchill purchased a 500-acre farm near Chillicothe, Mo., the other day and invited "all" exhibitors to come out and go duck hunting next fall.

A suburban theatre is planned for the center of a chain of store buildings to be erected at Forty-third street and Roanoke Parkway, although details of the house have not yet been planned.

St. Louis

N. Fiorita of New Orleans, La., has leased the Criterion Theatre, Broadway near Olive Street, owned by the Super Theatre Corporation of which Hector M. E. Paszemoglu is the head. Fiorita has been operating the Dream Theatre in New Orleans and takes charge of the Criterion at once. The house has 654 seats and was operated by the Famous Players Missouri Corporation before being taken over by Paszemoglu. The Super Theatres Corporation also operates the Delmar, Congress, Plaza and Yale Theatres and has received several offers for those houses. It is possible that a deal may be consummated for them in the near future.

Steele, Mo., is to have a handsome new theatre. James L. Gatling of Memphis, Tenn., has drawn plans for the house. J. W. Yarborough of Steele, Mo., will be the owner. The house will be two stories with a frontage of 50 feet and a depth of 100 feet. It will be of brick and concrete construction.

Thursday night, July 2, was Motor Boat Racing Night at the Grand Central Theatre, Grand Boulevard at Lucas Avenue, owned by Skouras Brothers Enterprises. Handsome silver loving cups were presented to the winners of the four big races held on the Mississippi River Sunday, June 28, by Joseph Mogler, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of St. Louis. Spyros and Charles Skouras took an active interest in the revival of motor boat racing in the St. Louis Harbor and put up the trophies for which the racers fought. They also served as officials for the races.

A stock dividend of 80 per cent., totaling $440,000, was declared by the board of directors of the Park Circuit and Realty Company, which owns the Forest Park Highlands Amusement Park in St. Louis and Fountain Ferry Park, Louisville, Ky. Permission will be asked to raise the capital stock from $560,000 to $1,000,000. The last balance sheet of the company shows assets $1,168,854.28 and liabilities of but $160,755.

Mrs. I. W. Rodgers of Poplar Bluff, Mo., and Cairo, Ill., was in town arranging her bookings preparatory to dropping out to Colorado for several weeks' vacation. Late in August she will move over to New York to meet her son who is now touring Europe. She plans to place the boy in Missouri University when that school re-opens. He recently graduated from Western Military Academy at Alton, Ill.

Visitors of the past week included: S. E. Pertle, Jerseyville, Ill.; Henry Lory, Highland, Ill.; Jim Reilly, Alton, Ill.; J. W. Cotter, Fourth Street Theatre, Moberly, Mo., and Al McCormick, Popar Bluff, Mo.

Detroit

George Koppin has begun to extend his theatre building operations to suburban cities. He has announced plans for a 2,000-seat house, costing $400,000, to be erected in Ferndale, a thriving suburb situated on the new Woodward avenue "Super Highway" seventeen miles from the city.

Edward Ryan, assistant to W. S. Butterfield, president of Bijou Theatres, Inc., has left for Montreal and other Canadian points on a vacation trip. He will be gone several weeks.

Jules Pincket, former owner of the Grosse Point Park Theatre, will build a new house to be known as the New Flamingo on the Seven Mile Road between Gratiot and Chalmers avenue. It will open December 1 and seat about 1,500.

Lilyan Tashman in "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work," a new B. P. Schulberg production.

Cincinnati

The Palace Theatre, Cleveland, which has been playing Keith-Albee vaudeville and short film subjects twice daily since the house was originally opened some two years ago, changed its policy as of July 5 and will show six acts of vaudeville in connection with a feature picture, on the three-a-day plan, with a reduction in admission prices to 75 cents top, as compared with $1.10 heretofore prevailing. The new arrangement is to remain in effect for eight weeks, by way of experiment, after which time the future policy will be determined. The initial feature was "The Iron Horse."

Incorporation papers have been filed at Columbus by the Laroy Theatre Co., Portsmouth, Ohio, by Simon and Leona Labold, G. J. Heisel and others, in amount $100,000. Also the Weber Theatre, Dover, Ohio, $10,000.

The James Building Co., William James, president, operating a chain of houses at Columbus, Ohio, will erect a theatre on South Parsons avenue, Columbus, and another on Main street of that city, according to late building reports.

The Rialto Theatre, Toledo, has been taken over by Mrs. Edna Bearse, while at Woodsfield, Ohio, Fred Clemens has purchased the Pleasant Hour Theatre and changed the name to the Alpine.

The projectionists at the Bijou Theatre and May's Opera House, Piqua, Ohio, owned and operated by the Piqua Amusement Co., recently quit when a strike was called. R. V. Erk, manager of both houses, states that the walk-out occurred when he refused to retain four men on the Opera House stage during a recent legitimate performance, Erk maintaining that a lesser number would be sufficient. The musicians at both houses are still on duty as this is written, and Erk declares that there will be no interruption to business, as other men have been secured to replace those who have left.

It now looks as though Gifts Theatre, located at the corner of Sixth and Vine streets, in the heart of the downtown business district in Cincinnati, is doomed, the property having recently been purchased by the Seton Realty Co., who, it is understood, will erect a department store building in the site. The house is one of the Frankel chain.

Chicago

The Chicago Herald Examiner carried a story about the success of Cooney Brothers, owners of the Capital, Hamilton, Stratford, Chatham and other theatres on the South Side. It said that about six years ago they started with a capital of $5.65 and today the circuit has property valued in excess of $2,000,000. It tells how it took Ben and Jack Cooney a couple of years to build their first theatre, the Chatham at 75th and Cottage Grove avenue, and how then the other houses were rapidly added to the chain, until the opening of the big Capital on 79th and Halsted that made movie theatre history in this city by paying from the start and using presentations and other high cost entertainment features and drawing business away from even the Loop houses.

Another huge new house is going up at 75th and Stony Island Avenue for the Cooney circuit. It will seat 3,500 and be within a short distance of Jackson Park and Lake Michigan. This house will have a large stage and the successful programs of the Capital will no doubt be followed by the new house, which will be ready for opening in a few months. In addition to the film booking office which they opened recently, the Cooney Brothers plan to open a vaudeville and booking office in the Loop and Francis Mangan will have charge of this end of the business, with Albert E. Short as musical director of the whole circuit.

The boys along the Row gave Sam Abrahams a nice send-off last week. He expects to make an extended overseas trip and before returning will visit his aged father who is living in Palestine. Sam owns the Gold Theatre on West Roosevelt Road and is assistant business manager of the Exhibitors Association of Chicago.

Abe Kohn, who has managed the Monroe Theatre, Chicago, for the past year, while the house is closed for the summer, will act as publicity representative of the Fox Exchange on Wabash Avenue.

Charley Raymond, radio manager for Balaban & Katz, has resigned and is now at Kansas City with Bruce Fowler, managing director of the Paramount theatres in that city. Raymond will handle publicity.

The Chicago trade has been advised to be on the look-out for Lester Reeves and Mrs. Graham Thatcher, who are wanted at Peoria, Ill., for the alleged collecting of tuition fees from prospective movie stars to learn the movie business. Warrants have been issued for the arrest of the pair, according to word from Peoria authorities.

Warner Brothers have sublet from Jones, Linick & Schaefer the Orpheum Theatre at 110 South State Street, Chicago, for a Loop showing of their films in this city. The house seats 791 and has an organ for musical programs. This is one of the pioneer movie houses of the city and has been used of late for extended showing of feature films by the J. L. S. circuit. Plans for a Loop location for a huge movie house will still be pushed, according to the Warner representatives on the job here.

The real estate activities of Fitzpatrick & McElroy on the South Side of Chicago continue unabated. Last week they took title from the Western Theatres Company on the property at 120th Street and Lowe Avenue for an indicated $375,000. During this year the circuit has acquired several valuable pieces of real estate on the South Side that may be of use later on for movie houses.

The Vendome Theatre Corporation on South State Street, Chicago, has surrendered its charter to the state, according to word from Springfield.

California

Manager H. W. Sherburne of the U. C. Theatre, Berkeley, Cal., recently featured the usherettes of this house in a novel revue which included violin solos, piano selections, singing and dancing. Some splendid talent was discovered and the act made a distinct hit with patrons of the house.

Getting merchants to help sell tickets proves of advantage at times in filling a theatre. H. Ceccarelli, manager of the California Theatre, Berkeley, recently lined up twenty-one downtown merchants willing to donate door prizes for the publicity received by them for the event.. In order to be eligible for a prize the theatre-goer had to purchase his ticket from a merchant participating.

Plans for the new Peninsula Theatre at San Mateo, Cal., have been changed to provide for an additional 500 seats, bringing the capacity up to 2,000.

Indiana

C. C. Cassady, manager of the Joy Theatre, Cloverdale, Ind., has leased the Roachdale Hall, Roachdale, Ind., from F. C. Rice, who is going to Michigan for his health. Mr. Cassady will run it in connection with his theatre at Cloverdale.

Los Angeles

George Russell, manager of the Hollywood Carmel, will use several acts of vaudeville during the summer. Russell said he put on the vaudeville acts to keep the school children coming to the theatre during the summer vacation.

J. J. Curl of the Larchmont has gone to Mexico for a short rest. Associated with Curl and Mark M. Hansen in the operation of the Larchmont is Alice Calhoun.

George M. Clayton, manager of the Hippodrome, has had a pipe organ costing more than $50,000 installed in his house. Stanley Delmar, formerly the crack organist of the California, has been engaged to operate the new instrument.

Plans are being prepared for a three-story and basement theatre to be built by T. Beverly Keim on West Seventh street, extending through to Wilshire boulevard near Figueroa street. The structure will be erected by the Harold Arnold Company and will seat 1,200.

There has been no movement on the part of West Coast Theatres to reopen the California and Miller's Main Street house which they closed up several weeks ago. Fred and Roy Miller sold the two houses to West Coast a few months ago. After keeping them open for about three weeks they were closed by the new owners.

Stromberg Signs Dixon

Hunt Stromberg's program for the current season is so extensive that he has signed Ralph Dixon, one of the best known film editors in the industry, to augment his editorial staff, which now includes Harry L. Decker and Harry Marker. Dixon was Thomas H. Ince's editor-in-chief for four years.

NORMA SHEARER

The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer star is wearing this knitted sport outfit between pictures. She is now playing in "The Tower of Lies," opposite Lon Chaney.

Denver

J. J. Goodstein has departed for Philadelphia after spending several days with his three theatres in Colorado. He assumed possession of the Isis Theatre, Longmont, Col., on July 16. He also owns and operates the beautiful new Longmont Theatre of that city. Ed. Marquand, former owner and manager of the Isis Theatre, has been engaged to manage both theatres in Longmont for Mr. Goodstein. Mr. McCormick, former manager of the Longmont Theatre, has been transferred to the Palm Theatre, Pueblo, Col., where he will be publicity manager. The Palm Theatre of Pueblo, also one of Mr. Goodstein's chain, is combination vaudeville and high-class first-run picture theatre.

Something new in the way of exploitation has been just put over by Rick Ricketson, manager of Rialto and Victory Theatres of Denver. Simultaneous with the opening of the world premier showing of "White Desert," the snow picture, a snowball fight was arranged in front of one of the leading newspapers of Denver. The snow was brought from the nearby mountains and piled in the city streets. A real mid-winter fight resulted. The stunt created considerable attention, especially among the thousands of tourists now visiting Denver. "The White Desert" was filmed at the entrance of the Moffat Tunnel last winter, just a few miles from Denver.

Ed Schoelkoph is the owner and operator of the theatre at Idaho Springs, Col.

Other exhibitors visiting the city during the past week were Ed Schoelkoph, operating the Opera House, Idaho Springs, and Millard Peterson of Flagler, Col.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Lem Stewart, in His Latest Portfolio, Emphasises the Value of Good Display

IT is to be regretted that space does not permit us to give in full the latest "portfolio" sent by Lem Stewart to the Paramount Theatres managers. Moreover Lem had only a sufficient quantity to supply his immediate needs, and cannot comply with any requests for copies.

Lem's portfolios are issued at irregular periods. They cover some phase of the work he is anxious to bring to the attention of the managers of Paramount theatres, and are gotten out in uniform size that they may go into the tickler files supplied each house. The present portfoli carries 36 pages of examples of good and poor advertising work, 22 of which are good examples, four mixed and ten just plain bad. Taken in combination they are a complete exposition of advertising technique, but to use them all would clog this department for several weeks, and we have to content ourselves with two examples which bear out Lem's contentions.

In his introduction to the good advertising Lem sums up his opinion in these words:

"These advertisements are good because they adhere to the rule of simplicity so essential in the art of newspaper advertising. They are good because they have unity. They are good because both copy and illustrations are arranged in orderly fashion. They are good because most of these ads are excellent in proportion."

In his comment on the poor examples is found this comment:

"These ads create a decided impression of carelessness, almost a hopeless attitude on the part of the advertiser.

"No matter how large or small the town in which your theatre is situated, no matter how restricted the facilities of your newspapers, there is really no excuse for the publication of ads of the following character.

"Any manager, who with reasonable effort cannot get better results than those illustrated on the following pages, should discontinue newspaper work.

"Space costs money. Used as follows, it represents a total waste of cost and effort."

That last paragraph should be set in larger type. Space that does not bring in a return on the investment is not worth the money it costs. It is a waste and not an aid.

Too, Too Much

Most of the poor spaces are too full. They are packed with cut and type matter. It may be likened to a man who pays for a five minute long distance telephone call and then talks so rapidly, that he may say all he wants to, that none of it is understood.

An advertisement too full of type, or which is so stuffed with large spaces that the suggestion of too much is conveyed, is wasteful because none of it will be read. The title may possibly get over. Nothing else will. Since the title alone gets over, it would be more profitable to discard the rest and ensure a proper display for that title.

But discarding the rest of the type will probably give room for two or three clean-cut sentences that will sell.

That is what Lem is trying to drive home. Look these two examples over. Don't you think that you would be more apt to read the Empty Hands space?

Your Best Baits

People are not compelled to read your advertising. They must be coaxed, and white

TWO EXAMPLES FROM LEM STEWART'S PORTFOLIO SHOWING GOOD AND POOR SPACES

The collection on the right are smaller in scale than the "good" example on the left, but this is rather in favor of the poor examples since the reduction makes them look cleaner than they are actual size where the excess of ink gives visual offense. Looking at the poor example you do not see anything you want to read. The good space is clean and inviting. It does not have to be large.

space, clean set type and good cuts are the best bait.

This is what we tell, week after week in the last two pages of this department. It is what Lem tells in his portfolio. We have been telling the same story for nearly fourteen years. And still we get plenty of mighty poor displays of what Lem very happily calls the "hopeless attitude."

We do not imagine that he expects to revolutionize the work of his managers, but we do believe that these hints will bring improvement. They will because the theatre managers under Mr. Franklin must listen to the word of the home office.

The outsiders, for whose benefit we reproduce these displays and for whom the regular department is conducted are not compelled to listen to what we have to say. And many of them give the matter small thought.

Why Not Try?

BUT—if Lem Stewart, with his letters of advice can cut the advertising appropriations of his theatres nearly fifty per cent. in one year, don't you think it is worth while reading this department more thoughtfully?

Lem more than halved advertising costs in a single year. You, too, can cut your costs if you will read and study the examples we reproduce week after week.

Don't read with blind eyes, don't listen with deaf ears just because Selling the Picture cannot fire you if you do not follow the suggestions. Get in line with the progressives. Save money while making more money.

Follow out the Stewart formula of simplicity, unity and arrangement, and you can cut your bills and increase your bank deposits with one movement.

Cliff Lewis Gets Hearst Publicity

Zander the Great is the first Marion Davies picture to be played at the Strand Theatre, Syracuse. Other picures have been played, but not at the Strand, and the Telegram, the Hearst paper, gave no particular cooperation to the theatre.

Cliff knew it was different in other towns, and figured that the Strand had something coming to it, so he went after the publicity, and got a lot of it.

Naturally he used the orphan matinee. That's right in line with the idea of the picture, and he worked two well-advertised parties, with motor transport and all the other trimmings, but that was just a starter.

He got an eight column cut, done by Fay King, to illustrate one of the orphan parties and then he persuaded the Mayor and other local notables, including some of the members of the local stock company, to see the picture, get photographed in the lobby, alongside one of the Zander lobby cards, and this gave him a number of good stories with a real local interest.

Get a gallon of paint for your September lobby.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

Two musical incidents, an Al St. John Comedy called "The Iron Mule" and the Topical Review together with the feature photoplay, "The Teaser," featuring Laura La Plante and Pat O'Malley, made up a show of two hours and seventeen minutes. One hour and seventeen minutes of this was required for the feature picture, while the comedy ran twenty minutes and the Topical Review took up its accustomed eight minutes. This left thirty-two minutes for the musical presentations.

Each of the four deluxe performances opened with sketches from "Cavalleria Rusticana" by Mascagni. As the action of this opera takes place in front of a church, a large transparent church window lighted from back wall by light blue box lamps with one spot of magenta was used. A black cyclorama masked in the window. On the small production stage were steel blue and light blue spots. The larger stage in blue and two navy blue Mestrum floods from the projection room on orchestra. The opening number of this presentation was "Vio la Sapete" by a mezzo soprano; next came "Duet" by soprano and tenor; followed by "Intermezzo," played by the orchestra of the theatre; and then closing with "The Prayer," sung by a mixed quartette, when all spots and floods dimmed off with the exception of three overhead light blue spots on the singers who were kneeling. Twelve minutes for this incident.

Following the Topical Review came an incident programmed as "Impressions of the Foreign Vogue in Songs." This presentation was made up of five selections having their origination in shows of foreign extraction. First was "Titina," danced by premiere danseuse in abbreviated French costume, with baritone also in French costume, joining in at the chorus. This was done "in one," the chorus being sung twice by the baritone as the dancer danced it. The second was "Katharina," danced by six girls in Russian costume and sung by a tenor also in Russian costume. This was on "in three" with back drop typical of "Chauvis Souris." The third selection was a special arrangement of "Indian Love Call" and "Rose Marie" played by the famed Mark Strand Orchestra. An orange flood from the projection room covered the musicians, while an amber flood from the dome lit the purple spangled curtains closed across the production stage. The concluding selection of the "Foreign Impressions" was "The Parade of the Wooden Soldiers" by ten members of the ballet corp, costumed as in the original show "Chauvis Souris" production. This presentation required twenty minutes altogether.

The foregoing music, from the "Cavalleria Rusticana" selections through to the Topical Review and including the foreign songs, was picked up by microphone direct from the stage on Sunday night of the week and broadcast through Station WNYC as the first portion of the regular Sunday night concert through that station.

Played to Fathers

Most managers made much of Mothers' Day, but not so many put in a good word for the old man, when he had his innings. R. T. Newton, of the Capitol Theatre, Little Rock, Ark., entertained the veterans at the Confederate Home at a performance of Proud Flesh. As he was not open on Sunday, the guests came Monday, arriving in cars supplied by a local auto livery. Each guest was presented with a necktie and made to feel that he was welcome, and the stunt won very favorable comment.

A PRE-RELEASE DISPLAY FOR TRACKED THROUGH THE SNOW COUNTRY FROM LONG BEACH

The ballyhoo truck and the lobby display used by Otis Hoyt, of Hoyt's Theatre, Long Beach, Cal. The central picture shows the detail of the lobby display seen at the left. The whole proved a most inviting appeal on a hot June day. Most of the frames in the lobby are for the vaudeville acts, with an improvised poster for the picture. Keep this idea for later use.

A Producers' Distributing Release

PARADED CHARLEY'S AUNT FROM STATION TO THEATRE

Not only that, but Leo G. Garner, of the Isis Theatre, Bristol, Va., persuaded the merchants to join in the demonstration for the advertising they could get out of the stunt. It went with a bang, and the entire town hustled in to see it.

Paraded Auntie in a Tennessee Town

Parading a film can is not wholly a novelty, but Leo G. Garner, of the Isis Theatre, Bristol, Va., added a kick by persuading some of the local merchants to banner their cars and join in the parade which escorted the cans of Charley's Aunt from the station to the theatre by the most roundabout way. That first car, for example, tells that "Evison's Boot Shop makes walking easier," while giving the largest lettering to the film.

Mr. Garner started in a couple of weeks in advance with a set of teasers, one and two inch singles in the shape of letters addressed to Charley and signed "Your Aunt." These announced that she was about to visit him, and threw in some local quips, such as the hope that she would find the main street less muddy than it was on the occasion of her last visit.

There was nothing in these to connect the ads with a film or the theatre; though the public may have had its suspicions, and they ended with a single three (placed upside down), which invited the public to "Join the big parade Monday morning and welcome Charley's Aunt, who arrives on Train No. 4 at 11 A. M."

To make sure of a parade, Mr. Garner also inserted a classified advertisement for 100 boys, to apply two hours before the parade. He knew better than to hire them Saturday. He got them Monday and herded them down to the depot with a lot of card banners. The boys helped to string out the line, and both Charley and his Aunt were impersonated by local talent to give color to the affair. It put the farce over to a cold weather business. Practically everyone saw the parade and most of them viewed the picture.

The week before Mr. Garner put over So Big with co-op double truck. Most of the spaces hooked to the title with such suggestions as that your building deterioration would not be So Big if you used a certain brand of paint. It held business up for a three day run.

Fred Meyer Pays Patrons Who Buy

Fred S. Meyer, of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, has another brand new one, all bright and shiny. He sprang it in the last issue of the monthly magazine which serves him in place of a program.

This magazine is a regular issue of about 50 pages, running up to one hundred pages or more for specials, and carries a raft of merchant advertising. This stunt ties to this advertising, but it can be worked just as well on a four pager as on a fifty.

The idea is very simple. You make purchases from any three advertisers. You send the receipts for sales and the clipped ads to the Palace, and you get a free ticket.

There is no red tape and no stipulation as to how large the purchases must be. You can get anything from a plate of ice cream to an automobile, and most anything in between.

The main idea is to show that the magazine is not only read but studied, and we presume that the merchants are given a practical demonstration of the pulling power of the ads in the form of their receipts. But apart from this, the tickets are singles, and seldom come in without at least one paid admission.

Gave Patrons Chance on a Darkened Kiss

Earl Settle, of the Palace Theatre, Muskogee, Okla., used the candy kiss idea for A Kiss in the Dark, but he dressed it all up in ruffles and flounces and made a production on it.

In the first place his kisses were tied to the cards in such a fashion that it replaced the word in the title, the printing merely giving "A (space) in the Dark."

These were given out for two days before the opening, being distributed to the patrons by four little girls while the lights were full on.

When the youngsters got back to the stage, the lights all went off for thirty seconds when a slide was flashed bearing merely the title. Then the house was dark for another thirty seconds.

From the sounds it appeared that many of the patrons were able to take a hint. It might not do in all houses, but Settle knew his patrons. It's a great stunt if you can work it, and a lot better than just shooting out the enveloped kisses.

Because of Rin-Tin-Tin, Harry Hardy played up dogs at the Alhambra Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., for The Lighthouse by the Sea.

Eighty dogs were entered in a contest in which prizes were offered for the dog most like the star, the largest, smallest, prettiest and ugliest dogs. The dogs were blanketed and paraded through the business section before being judged and Mr. Hardy got a big advertising kick for five dollars, plus the cost of the blankets, which was very small.

THE INFERNO IS SCARCELY A HOT WEATHER TITLE

But W. T. Murray, of the Rialto Theatre, Atlanta, put it over with a red lobby and some very realistic flats, the centre one of which masked the box office. Openings in the side pieces were draped with red cloth and high lighted.

Had Real Wine Trucks for Clara Bow Picture

Most of the lobby and street displays on Wine have been more or less in the nature of jokes; old wine boxes and empty bottles, but over in London they still have real wine, and the European agency tied in an Italian importer, Molinari, to the exploitation on this picture.

A Universal Release

THIS TRUCK ADVERTISES REAL WINE AS WELL AS THE PICTURE

This is a truck used in London to advertise the wines imported by Molinari, and Mike Simmons tied it up to the showing of the Clara Bow picture in its various London bookings. It is shown here working for the Rialto Theatre. Can't be done here.

THE LOBBY DISPLAY

The large cut on this page shows the delivery truck used by the concern carded for a showing of the picture at the Rialto Theatre, while the smaller shows an advertising dummy bottle and some fancy chianti flasks which were displayed in the lobby of the Rialto. The dummy bottle is twelve feet tall and the necks of the larger flasks run them up almost eight feet.

Snake in An Apple Improved a Cutout

Making the cutout from the 24-sheet on Eve's Secret the lobby attractor for the Rialto Theatre, Augusta, Ga., C. F. Creslein cut out the outline of the apple, pasted tracing cloth over the opening and tinted the cloth with transparent aniline color.

Back of this he set a shadow box, in front of which a cut out snake's head moved slowly back and forth in response to the urging of a geared down motor. The effect was striking and brought the passers by to a dead halt. That's the advantage of an animated display, no matter how simple the animation. People will stop and think instead of passing without being fully conscious of the display.

This was the only special stunt used on this title, but it was a material aid to business and found its reflection in the box office receipts.

A Paramount Release

MADE AN IMPROVEMENT ON THE CUTOUT FROR EVE'S SECRET

Charles Cresline, of the Rialto Theatre, Augusta, Ga., cut out the apple, re-covered the hole with tracing paper and in a shadow box back of it set a snake's head, which squirmed around with considerable realism. No trouble and a big help.

Stuffed House With an Unusual Display

Charles H. Amos, of the Garing Theatre, Greenville, S. C., did so much business on Oh Doctor! that he was a bit surprised himself. He expected a good house but not a near-record.

His chief appeal was a battered old Ford wreck with a cutout of Reginald Denny bouncing out of the driver's seat. Over against the lobby wall a cutout nurse stretched out her arms to make a catch. A card on the car read: "If your pretty nurse is leaving because you are well, get smashed up again. Oh Doctor!"

This was backed by a window in a drug store with Denny in bed tended by his nurse. The remainder of the space was taken up with hospital supplies and the suggestion that if you got in a smash the store could minister to your comfort.

It's just another example of the fact that you make the most business with the biggest displays, but you have to back it with a good show.

Showed the Book

In addition to using the cutout of Mary Brian from the 23-sheet of The Little French Girl, Frank J. Miller, of the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., used a shadow box banner above the entrance. This was painted in brilliant colors and had for a centerpiece a reproduction of the picture on the insert card, flanked by two cutout copies of the book with Miss Brian's picture on the jacket.

BORROWED TWO STILLS TO ADVERTISE CONTRABAND

A small outfit was shown in the lobby of the Colonial Theatre, Tacoma, and this 300-gallon hustler was perambulated on a truck. As a further stunt the sheriff appointed Manager H. B. Sobottka a special deputy to guard the stills.

Was Given a Badge to Guard a Display

Using stills to advertise booze plays is nothing new, but there are still some new angles to the old stunt. H. B. Sobottka, of the Colonial Theatre, Tacoma, Wash., found one the other day when he came to advertise Contraband.

In spite of its nearness to the Canadian border, Tacoma has a fair supply of bootleggers, and Sheriff Desmond has them in assorted sizes and shapes.

Mr. Sobottka borrowed a small one to set up in the lobby of the Colonial, with the statement that "This is a contraband moonshine still confiscated by the Sheriff. See Mr. Contraband here Wednesday."

In addition he had a still of 300 gallon capacity, capable of running off a hundred gallons of white mule a day. This he mounted on a truck and perambulated about town with "for the history of this still see Contraband, Colonial, Now."

The kicker is found in the fact that the manager was appointed a deputy sheriff during the period of exploitation that the stills might with propriety be left in his custody, and this was good for an additional news interest.

Keep This Idea for Next Mothers' Day

Although Louis P. Kramer, who handles the publicity for Universal in the Chicago, thinks that his biggest stunt was hooking the Tribune to an exploitation stunt, we like better his stunt for Mothers' Day.

The Tribune has been tied to contests before, but never to an out-and-out exploit. Kramer arranged to have Carl Laemmle toss a baseball from the uncompleted tower of the new Tribune building, thoughtfully placing a member of the Chicago White Sox underneath to catch it. The drop was 460 feet; close to the record of 524 feet.

It was a good stunt and won yards of real reading, but it was a nine-day wonder and it was all over. On Mothers' Day flowers were tied to the corner lamp posts in many parts of the city above cards reading: "From Carl Laemmle, President Universal Film Co., to the Mothers of Chicago." They will remember that long after the baseball stunt is forgotten.

Here is something you can do next year, if you paste this up now. Get them up near the churches and you'll reach half the town with the least effort.

Added News Reel to Lobby Trailer

When he came to advertise Man and Maid at the Strand Theatre, Pasadena, Charles McManus built a cage for a projection machine that threw on a miniature screen the trailer for the Elinor Glyn picture, and also a brief news reel. The machine was threaded to run continuously, and with a black proscenium it could be seen clearly enough even in the daytime.

He had a pair of attractive side signs painted and used ribbons to connect the main show to these side announcements, as shown in the cut.

Some managers may object that the box takes up rather too much lobby room, but Mac found he had plenty of space to get them up to and past the box office, and that was all he needed.

Another Paper

Add Harper Theatre Topics to the growing list of useful house organs. It is a four-pager gotten out by the Harper Theatre, Detroit, mostly program and press agent stuff, but with enough house material to make it worth while.

The house runs six changes a week, and one of the issues features a letter from a patron who attended five of the six shows the previous week, and liked them all.

Nothing works harder for a house than a well-edited house organ, and the Topics qualifies in this class.

Two Good Ones for Take a Chance

Getting a lobby display on take-a-chance week, when you cannot advertise star or play, is one of the problems on the stunt. D. Roscoe Faunce found the answer in a jack-in-the-box in the lobby.

The clown was eccentrically mounted on a wheel so that it rose and fell, the lid of the box working from the same wheel. It gave a lobby display that held interest and yet spilled no secrets.

Even better was a distribution of put-and-take tops to the guests at the various business luncheons. They were tied to small cards urging the recipient to take a chance the following week, but most of them started in right there and then. In quantities the tops cost only thirty cents a dozen and there was not one that did not earn its cost many times over.

The picture was The Goose Hangs High, which got away with an awkward title.

HOW McMANUS FRAMED A DAYLIGHT SHOWING IN PASADENA

Charles F. McManus framed this stunt to show the trailer on Man and Maid and threw in a short news reel for bait in the lobby of the Strand Theatre. Note how the ribbons carry the glance from the miniature screen to the side displays.

Got a Fine Display at a Minimum Cost

Getting a gateway and steps built gave Harry Gould, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas, a fine display at a cost of only $25.50. The display was planned by his assistant, Don Harkleroad, and as it can be changed for repeated use, the cost really is less than this, just as this cost is kept down because the backing window was already in the prop room.

The steps, pillars and gates cost $25 and the two insert cards represent an outlay of fifty cents. The potted plants were borrowed, as was the cutout, which looks familiar, though we cannot place it.

In order to get the details the picture was made a close-up and does not show how the display dominates the entire lobby, while taking up very little real room, since both entrance and exit doors are left free.

A few pieces like this are a real asset to the careful decorator, and we think that at the price it is a real bargain. It made more than that much extra business for The Little French Girl and is all profit for its next use.

A STRIKING LOBBY THAT COST ONLY $25.50

This was planned by Don Harkleroad, assistant to Harry Gould at the Hipprodrome Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas. This does not include the cost of the window, which was already in the prop room and the plants and cutout were borrowed.

Real Estate Page

One of the oddest hook ins was worked on Classmates at the Fairfax Theatre, Miami.

A real estate company took a page to announce that the jungle scenes were made on their new development and offered 500 free tickets to the show to those who applied at their offices. The jungle stuff in Classmates did not look exactly like a nice home site, but it seemed to be worth while bragging about and the company got 500 people to hand circulars to.

Tied to Ice

There was a cool suggestion to the hook up arranged for Frivolous Sal at the Knickerbocker Theatre, Nashville, Tenn. A furniture store gave over a window to a display of refrigerators with a sign reading:

"Mount Rainier, always clad in snow, with its wonderful ice caves, is the background for much of the action of Frivolous Sal at the Knickerbocker but Mount Rainier itself is no mightier for your food refrigeration than a White Frost refrigerator."

Stills or cutouts could have been used to advantage, but the card was the only connection, whereby both the house and the store lost a part of the value of the stunt.

Rocked the Boat

Frank J. Miller, of the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., made a banner on Janice Meredith showing Washington crossing the Delaware. A small motor gave the boat an up and down motion which greatly enhanced the effect of the design. American flags were displayed at either end of this shadow box and a large medallion of Miss Davies hung from the bottom into the lobby space. An essay contest for school children also helped to put the picture over.

Poster Uses

On The Lighthouse by the Sea A. S. Grist, of the Strand Theatre, Asheville, N. C., used two poster helps.

One was a 24-sheet across the house front, spotted from across the street. The other was an eight foot cutout of the dog from another 24-sheet, which was mounted and placed in the lobby two days in advance, being moved from the corner to the centre when the picture opened. Both contributed toward better business.

HIGH HATS FEATURED GRIFFITH IN GREENVILLE, S. C.

Charles H. Amos used a large hat on the lobby floor, smaller ones on the banner above the Garing Theatre and perambulated a flat outline hat about the streets to give emphasis to the Hi Henry worn by the new comedy star.

Semi Centennials

At the first matinee of Old Home Week at the Sterling Theatre, Greely, Col., the doorman had instructions to admit without ticket any person who stated his or her age as over fifty and who reasonably looked the part.

The old folks made so much talk that business was good that evening and all of the following day. If you work it, try it on a picture you are certain the old folks will like.

Built a Building

To get over the idea of The Shock Punch D. Roscoe Faunce, of the Strand Theatre Birmingham, Ala., built a section of a structural steel building; a crossbeam extending across the lobby, with two uprights near the centre. Between these was a skyline of a city.

A cutout of Dix stood on the crossbeam while the lower part of the painting showed a falling workman. It looked interesting, so the customers invested in tickets.

Poor Typography Marks Phantom Ad

This advertisement is from a San Francisco newspaper, but it looks very small town. The cut is strong, but the inserted lines are about as poor as they get them. That top bank is a wretched display of all caps that do not get over well below the third line. In the lower section there is a poor spacing which brings the "supplementary" directors name down to where it appears that he is the supplementary director of the Curran Theatre, and at the same time makes you look close to see where the picture is being played. The Phantom of the Opera is an unusual production, but here there is no suggestion of bigness. Rather it might be a very ordinary picture, taking a large space only because there was a large cut. That cut should not have been used in this space. It does not permit a proper display of the type, though such typesetting as this does not deserve a display. A cut that size needs another column down the side, and two would be better.

A Universal Release

VERY POORLY SET

Victoria Capitol Likes Half Pages

The Capitol Theatre, Victoria, B. C., seems to be going in for half page displays or even more than an exact half. This layout on A Thief in Paradise is a cross page twelves on a 22-inch column. The ad man has not made the usual error of filling his space too full of cuts. With a play so replete with hokum he has plenty to talk about, so he picks out the one cut he thinks will make the most noise and uses that to attract attention to his type talk about the rest of the punches. And he further avoids error by putting these in so that they are not too closely packed. It is a most inviting space. You come upon it with a feeling that it must be interesting, and you are apt to read it all where precisely the same copy, set in large faces to fill the entire area, would turn the reader away with the text unread. A ten or twelve point type is just as easy to read as an 18 or 24, provided it does not have too much of the larger sizes to fight, and the twelve will give room for white space that will make it easier to read the lines. Breaking up the punches with boxes and banks gives a further isolation which makes for emphasis and there are so few large lines that they all get their full effect. Even in the lesser details there is shown an appreciation of the niceties of layout that mark the adept. In the reduction the square sided cut will not look as crude as in the original, where the cropping seems rather abrupt, but you may be able to note that on the left and at the bottom a two point rule borders the cut. This is very simple, but it materially improves the appearance of the cut. The right hand side does not so greatly matter, but where the head is cut through on the left the raw cut looks unfinished and the border rule supplies a badly needed touch; a point to keep in mind for your own possible use, but remember, too, that to make a U of the border will not be as effective as this L. The Capitol is to be congratulated upon a very intelligent piece of work.

Far Too Much Copy Overshadows Cut

This is a good attractor cut on Sans Gene, but the Century Theatre, Baltimore, hurts the effect with too much copy. That cut works best where it is permitted to dominate the space, and here it is just the cut tail to the type dog, and it can't wag. Sans Gene should not require so much selling, and some of this could have been put into light italic with decided benefit, notably the reference to the five dollar opening in New York. This is to emphasize the "regular prices" line just below, but the five dollar bank overshadows the local prices to the point where the latter is lost. This display would have been very much better had there been more white space and less talk. This suggests that the house was afraid of the picture and was using every argument to get it over.

will study four three-line paragraphs where the same copy in eleven solid lines would be passed over. This space is 175 by 3, rather too deep for the best effect, but the small features get their own panel and take up more room than really is necessary. It is essential to the best selling that all features shall be mentioned and displayed, but it can be done in smaller space than this with the same effect. The lettering on the cut is rather weak. With such a title to sell, it should get every possible aid, and yet the "Sally's in the movies now" is much more prominent than the larger letter in the cut and probably does most of the selling of the title. This seems to be a local drawing rather than a lift from the press book. The sketch is clever—decidedly so, but the title is the more important, since many sales can be made on the titles to those who are not interested in the star.

Inviting Aspect Is Aid to an Ad

Working with plan book material, Frank H. Burns has turned out an exceptionally sightly display for the Beacham Theatre, Orlando, Fla. We particularly like the placement of the selling talk. That and the oddly costumed figure should sell a star not so well known as Miss Talmadge. It apparently is made up of two casts from the same mat, for if you look closely you can see that the loop of the "g" has not been cropped from the shadow of the figure, and the same loop in the name has not been completely routed. Evidently the title rested too closely against the name to fit in with Mr. Burns' ideas, so he separated them slightly, with excellent effect. Most managers prefer the compact cut with the title and illustration set together, so this cut supplies a general demand, but when it is desired to separate them, it can be done with a gain in effect and at small cost. This is where the mat is superior to the cut. You can have two or more casts made and cut them to suit where you might hesitate to destroy two purchased cuts. We are using a number of displays from Mr. Burns because we believe that they supply unusually good models for small town use. For that matter they do not differ materially, except in size, from those used by the Loew houses in Washington, D. C., where space is more costly. But this is a three nines, more than double the usual Washington space. If you get a mat from the exchange that seems to carry excess baggage, it is simple enough to crop away the excess. There is still a general demand for the "strong" cut with a lot of detail, but managers are coming more and more to realize that the heavy cuts are not as good sellers save for melodramas. For more polite presentations there is far more appeal to the light, well displayed illustration.

Good Composition Helps This Layout

It would have been very easy for the compositor to have mussed up this four ten and a halfs from the Orpheus Theatre, Halifax, N. S. Had that bank of copy been set in the usual all capitals, it would have been an almost total loss. As it stands there are few all-cap lines and it is one of the most readable displays we have had in a long time. The copy is well done, but the best copy would have been useless had it been too difficult to read, so it is the combination of copy and composition which makes this stand out above the average. That advertisement should sell on its merits, and if you are not looking for theatre advertisements, we think that the "She was wild" line will catch and hold the inattentive. It would not, had it been set in all capitals. A novelty is that

THE FIRST RUN

PRESENTATIONS – PROLOGUES – MUSIC

Edited by Colby Harriman

MAINTAINING INTEREST IN PRESENTATIONS

DIVERSITY in presentations is not only an absolute necessity but is the keynote of any successful program. The producer often finds himself confronted with a problem when he follows a week-to-week plan in devising, and subsequently mounting these divertisements because the complete production lacks the elements sufficiently strong to contrast the current presentation with the one that preceded it.

Sometimes we live so close to our work that our productions suffer as the result. We often find ourselves in a rut as the outcome of such a cramped field of operation, and after a while our artistic sensibilities become calloused to the point where we simply change the costumes, rearrange the sets, but basically give nothing new.

There should be a wide range in the character of the various presentations produced, and too much emphasis cannot be laid on the point that the successful producer will schedule his productions weeks ahead, in the same manner as the exhibitor books his pictures.

The presentations demand a great amount of time in their preparation in order that they may be truly representative of this newer art of the theatre, and any producer who permits carelessness, haste, or indifference to enter into his methods of preparation will soon find himself upon the shoals of unpopularity. It is really lamentable the opportunity which so many producers have had to put over the presentation and failed to grasp. They have had large amounts of money, excellent staffs to assist them, and a willing public, but no program can succeed unless it is devised and produced along the lines which bespeak originality, an ever-increasing and changing novelty, and above all, the elimination of monotony which comes about naturally with a diversified program.

It is suggested that the producer make a few notes as to the various presentations he intends to feature during this season. The subject matter may be obtained from so many sources that are widely different, and if he will only prepare a schedule and adhere to it, he will find that the interest in his programs and offerings will increase, not only with the audiences, but will prove attractive at the box office.

There are so many scenes from Grand Opera, musical comedy, a bit of suggestion from some of the older plays which can be brought in and pantomimed or paraphrased. There are so many opportunities offered by folk-lore, and stories of the nations throughout the world, of peoples in all climes; poetry is teeming with suggestions, musical compositions are overloaded with ideas; take a trip through the art galleries or consult art books, magazines, and you will be surprised with the suggestions which will come flooding in upon you. Then by using your ingenuity as a showman you will be able to combine ideas, to take your suggestions and using the original ideas, develop something that will not only embrace the artistry, beauty, poetry of the production, but will carry with it the popular accord.

JAZZ-OPERA IDEA DEVELOPED IN SCORE

MOTION pictures have always had two dimensions, and more recently the stereoscopics have given them a third, but Broadway today houses the motion picture of four dimensions, with Sound being this dimension. This all refers to the "Beggar on Horseback," which is now being played at the Criterion Theatre in New York, having really one of the few perfect musical scores ever heard which was created by Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld. Josiah Zuro, Director of Presentations for the Riesenfeld theatres (who, also, conducts the orchestra at the Criterion) is the authority for the statement that this score is the first jazz opera idea this country has ever had.

The score is entirely in jazz except for a few sentimental love themes, and as the particular picture is a jazz fantasy, the pulsating rhythm of this new American music provides the correct background for the photoplay.

The various characters are identified with themes which are indicative of their temperaments. Throughout the picture these themes are played against each other in the same way that dialogue is used on the stage. For instance, in that part of the picture which portrays Neil's dream, the themes are distorted, introduced in strange moments just as they would be in real dreams. The wedding ceremony is made grotesque by use of a syncopation rhythm; the score breaks into sudden, unexpected effects; particularly striking is the brief bit where the composer is seen dozing off to sleep, a few bars of "Rockabye Baby" weirdly arranged are tossed from instrument to instrument, and played a little lower each time to suggest the gradual approach to sleep, until with a subdued crash of chords Neil finds himself with a silk hat on his head, and his dreams broken.

Various instruments are made use of backstage to achieve unusual results. There are several jazz bands playing back of the screen, and these are heard when the band in the restaurant below Neil's apartment starts its activities and destroys his inspiration. The harmonica is heard from backstage, and when the symphony in the picture is played a real piano plays a solo from the wings, and the score ceases temporarily.

Not the slightest gesture or mood is overlooked in this remarkable accompaniment. Facial expressions are given a new significance. The very sound of voices is heard. Musicians generally are commending Dr. Riesenfeld for his score, and Mr. Zuro for his conduction in one of the most outstanding musical accompaniments in the motion picture theatre.

Overture Dansant

A novelty is offered this week in the overture spot with the introduction of Margaret Severn & Company in "Music and Visualization" assisted by the Rivoli Orchestra, Willy Stahl, conducting. A very simple setting is used which has been designed by Joseph Urban, and in the first scene a black draped arch in a true arc is upstage. Transparency is hung in folds over the opening with a pink and blue sky to back, and in the foreground up right between the transparency and the drop bay trees are silhouetted. A large green moon is visible at lower right of the arch. Amber and canary with green foots and flood are used on the dancers who appear in the conventional filmy draperies. The second part is done in front of the curtain close-ins with red and white highlighting the characters. Third scene is worked full stage with the black cyc, black close-ins covering the opening of the arch. White spot is used on the dancer. In the last scene the close-ins over the black draped arch are opened suggesting a Venetian scene. Two festoons of Japanese lanterns are let down in one which carries a predominance of primary colors. The end of a gondola appears extreme left of the arch which also carries festoons of ribbons with here and there some Japanese lanterns. A spile cluster is extreme right of the arch. Light blue flood with the sky drop tinged blue and rose, the dancers working in amber spots highlighted from the side in the warmer tones. Characters appear in Venetian costume; spirited finale:

The Jazz Maniacs

Riesenfeld's second Classical Jazz Festival not only correctly emulates the spirit of Jazz, but proved to be a popular number. A film trailer is done in cartoons which carries a few humorous titles such as "the world being made safe for maniacs, etc." is flashed on the screen, and this is followed with "a Jazz craze has swept the country, and everybody's doing it." A framework with a slider opening in center is led down which resembles bars in an asylum. The lights come up revealing a jazz band dressed in all manner of ridiculous costumes, each inmate doing his own particular lunatic stuff. Setting is simple, black cyc with two large painted posters at angles on the back drop right and left. A few compo-board set pieces, such as the tip of a Russian cathedral up left, a figure of a soldier up center. The small piano up right center is camouflaged in highly colorful garb, etc. A traffic semaphore directly center. A large gas pipe in the form of a chandelier is hung in left center on which one of the characters does several acrobatic gyrations. A fantastic chandelier of compo-board hangs down right center with candles protruding in all directions. This is tipped with small lamps in amber tone. Blue, magenta and canary and amber are shot in from the sides on the various numbers. The selections being punctuated with the character of "Napoleon" calling for "Lights" following every number. Lights flash off and then on for the next change. Characters use various facial make-ups hurriedly adjusted. One young lady dancer makes an appearance wearing a Benda mask of "A Silly Girl." She sits in a bath tub which has a sail on it and is mounted on travellers and paddles her way across stage from right to left. She reappears and does a dance. The center section of the white bars is drawn up leaving an arched opening.

Music

The overture, "Gems of Friml," a selection from the compositions by Rudolph Friml played by the Mark Strand Symphony Orchestra, with Carl Edouarde conducting. Kitty McLaughlin, Soprano, sings "L'Amour Toujour L'Amour." The singer appears dressed in Colonial costume in front of the framework of French windows with an hemispherical cap which is set against black patent leather drop; the outline of the white framework being very effective against this background. A leaf cluster is right and left of the windows. Amber flood from top with amber and canary from the sides are used to highlight the set with a pink spot used on the soloist.

The Clown and the Music Box

Edward Albano, Baritone, dressed in clown costume of white, appears in front of close in and sings "Harlequin" by Sanderson, working in a white spot. Conclusion of number curtains open revealing top of a large music box which occupies about two-thirds of the space of the stage. Music box is painted to resemble a balcony framework with a gold center bearing an artistic design. A large crank is left of the box; on the top Mlle. Klemova poses in white ballet costume with blue bows on her hair and back. Albano turns the handle and the dancer does a mechancial doll dance to Laidow's "Music Box," as the clown kneels beside the set piece. Black plush used to back with the legs of the patent leather being gathered together in folds right center and left center over the black. These are highlighted with green, magenta, amber and purple from the sides which are very colorful. White spot is used on the dancers. Red borders are on. White spot is used on the singer with amber from the left highlighting the dancer. At the conclusion of the dance the song of the baritone is again resumed for finale.

The Prologue

One of the most colorful stage settings which we have been privileged to see at this theatre is offered this week in a very atmospheric arrangement, as an introduction to the featured picture. The setting which is mechanically simple is very massive in its appearance and extremely effective. A four-arch leg drop with long narrow openings is hung down in one. Back in three there are four set pilasters with spans giving a triple-arch effect. A platform is back of the arches down in one upon which the various characters work. Two railed gangplank arrangements are right center and left center which run from the platform in one to the platform back of the arches upstage. The tip of a gondola is seen left of center. Four Venetian lanterns with amber and magenta lamps hang in the down stage arches. Two pilot lights on standards are placed, one down right and one up left. Gold fabrics are used to back the setting and these are tinted red at the top with a blend down to canary. Ambers and greens with blues mixed are shot in from the sides. A strip in canary and amber is at the base of the drop in one which highlights the characters as they appear on the platform, and the second group of arches is well arranged to give effect of space, as though water was in evidence. The various characters appear in Venetian carnival costumes, Luigi Guffrido, Tenor, sings "Serenata" (Toselli) following which the Ballet Corps and Ensemble enter and dance as the spirals fall from the top, and pom poms wave and the general carnival spirit is maintained.

COLONY THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Cyrano De Bergerac" (Atlas)

Music

The Colony Melody Masters, with E. Chas. Eggett, conducting, play Massenet's "Phedre." The musical settings for the picture have been especially arranged by Dr. Edward Kilenyi.

The Mystic Voice

Thie feature is held over for the third week. The mysterious singer renders Cadman's "At Dawning." A slightly different lighting effect is used with a full stage screen hung down in one upon which a cloud effect in deep blue tone is thrown against a sky of rose and canary.

The Prologue

We must again commend the Colony for an excellent prologue to a picture. The Colony is surely taking a step in the right direction and offering presentations which are not only worthy of the name, but are correctly arranged along the fundamental lines of this newer art. The prologue to the picture which was conceived and staged by Howard W. McCoy, Managing Director, was given a correct technical production with the assistance of J. De Rosa, as technical director, and Harry Shaw, as production manager. The subject is about the only thing which could be used for a prologue to this picture, and it not only created the atmosphere but it counterparted the colorful scenes which the picture revealed. It is suggested that other theatres playing this picture use the Colony idea as their prologue. We doubt whether this idea could be improved on in this instance. The setting reveals a garden which consists of a set house extreme right detailed as a flat running on an angle up stage with a jog carrying off. A practical balcony facing on stage with two stained glass windows highlighted from inside with canary. The vivid colors of the windows contrasted with the deeper tones of the set. Below the balcony is an arched door with a backing which is tinted red. A hedge row running from the corner of the set house up stage at right across to left. Two large flowering trees up right center and left center with a large stunted trunk of a tree and green foliage up center. There are several smaller trees scattered about the stage to dress and a profusion of foliage banks masking the hedge-row and used in various decorative positions. An amber moon box is visible through the blue cyc up center. Foliage border hung down in one. At the rise an old friar carrying a lantern appears at right and crosses stage disappearing left. Renee & Lora-Frances & Jeannette appear and render an incidental ballet arranged by B. Bernardi. After their exit three characters made up to resemble the principal actors in the picture, Roxanne, Christian and Cyranno appear. First come the two men from right, Mr. Mario Alvarez as "Christian" stands center and sings "Si Mes Vers Avaient Des Ailes" by Reynaldo Hahn, as "Cyrano," played by Mr. Arthur Tracey, stands in the arched door-way beneath the balcony. Presently Miss Virginia Johnson as "Roxanne" appears on the balcony and with Mr. Alvarez sing the duet by Gounod, entitled "Duo D'Amour." Blue foots with light blue and green and white from the sides highlight the various colors of the set which is rich in natural pigments.

The Rialto Orchestra with Frank Tours, as Guest Conductor, plays the various musical motifs, used to interpret the scenes of "Mendelssohn," one of the Famous Music Master Series produced by James A. Another version of Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz is offered.

Tandy Mackenzie, Tenor.

This singer, dressed in tuxedo, appears in amber spot in front of the light gray fabrics which are toned blue, green, and sings the following numbers:

Lullaby from "Jocelyn," Goddard.
"Mother O' Mine," Frank Tours.

Miriam Lax

This popular soprano appears in a very charming gown of white with rhinestones, in front of a simple setting which consists of a large oriental panel with a mosaic silver base bearing the figure of a spread winged crane in white, with the light gray fabrics carrying off from right and left of center. A pink spot is used on the singer.

Dance Divertissement

Marley, Alma, Frances and Marguerite dressed in white lace dance costumes with silver thread spangles and trimmings, appear in a setting which is a full stage view of the oriental panel used in part as the backing for the previous number. The panel is a large square silver background done in silvered mosaics, spotted with reds and blues bearing a large gold border. A white spread winged crane is painted center over a cluster of flowers in a design and color of asters. White and canary is used on dancers.

Rivoli Policy Creating Interest

New York's moviegoing populace is looking forward with great interest to the new jazz policy which will be inaugurated by Hugo Riesenfeld at the Rivoli next week starting Sunday. Just how the Ben Bernie jazz orchestra will fit into the picture theatre entertainment scheme has aroused much discussion and rumors are flying thick and fast around Times Square. Mr. Riesenfeld, when questioned on the subject, stated that the performances will be radically different from those now in vogue and all designed primarily to "fit" the picture production. For instance, next week the film attraction contains scenes showing all the leading New York night clubs and cabarets. The stage and musical background will be appropriate and centered around the Ben Bernie Organization. Popular entertainment, according to Riesenfeld, is to be the rule at the Rivoli.

"IN A MONASTERY GARDEN"
An Overture Feature
A Moving Picture World Presentation
Devised by Colby Harriman

THE presentation which we are offering this week is one suggested by a musical composition of the same title. While the composition is not a recent one it carries with it such elements as will enable its transition to the stage in a manner to serve as a presentation and also as an overture feature.

It also affords an opportunity for the introduction for a male ensemble and while there is a more dignified and serious note than usually found in stage offerings, it is not amiss nor detrimental to the program to occasionally inject such themes into a program, as we have found by experience that with the occasional offering of such a presentation the approval is quite universal.

The setting has been devised in a manner which will lend itself not only to an excellent lighting treatment, but affords a mechanical progression which is devised with the thought of novelty.

The pen sketch represents a section of a monastic court with entrance from the cloister hall into a beatiful and colorful garden. The action suggested and which is detailed in musical composition should be carried on with the dignity and impressiveness which the music suggests.

A platform 1 ft. high and about four ft. wide should run across the entire opening in one. Steps can be placed at extreme right and left of the platform so that the characters entering will give the effect of coming down from an upper room. A scrim should be hung in folds at the curtain line in front of the platform and this is to be taken away as the action progresses, which is suggested later on in the details.

A cut drop with arched openings is hung at one back of the platform. The 3-step pieces are placed in the opening leading from the platform upstage so the characters entering from down in one will pass through the opening, and give the effect of going down into the garden. A wall should be placed well upstage running across extreme right to left with the ends raked to mask. A set tree should be placed on the downstage side of the wall up left, another set tree on the upstage side of the wall up right. A flower row should be placed down stage side of the wall and foliage pieces right and left downstage. Blue cyclorama to back and mask.

Scenic Details

Fig. 1 is the tracing outline in which the drop should be cut to give the effect of the arch. If an arched drop is already listed in your scenic inventory it would not be necessary to cut another drop for this particular scene, as two strips sewn together to form a "Y" could be made and fastened to the center of the opening, and this could be fastened to the bottom batten of the entire drop. If desired, the entire arch can be made of compo-board or contrasted, but the cut drop arrangement will be effective and less expensive.

In Fig. 2 is a detail of the treatment of the arch with Fig. 3 showing the various angles and thickness to be emphasised by the artist. Fig. 4 shows the outline of the star-rosette motif which can be painted and shaded in a manner to suggest thickness.

In front of the arch should be a low pedestal as indicated in Fig. 5 upon which the statue of the Virgin or a patron saint can be placed. Pedestal should be about 2 ft. high and wide enough to mask the bottom of center truss.

(a) Represents the front of the pedestal showing the various sections in its construction and (b) shows the outline of the top of the pedestal.

At right and left of the arched opening a candelabra base is attached to the drop. This can be made as indicated in Fig. 6. Fig. (a) shows the front elevation of the candelabra base and (b) the side. These can be made by taking a strip and screwing smaller strips in a horizontal position to give the various sections, and covering the openings with canvas in forms as indicated. It can be fastened to the wall with a ring at the back of the candelabra. Three small tubes can be fastened into the top of the base as indicated in (c) and three candles made of paper with a small candle power lamp to tip.

Scenic Treatment

The Drop: This should be painted to give the effect of stone-work in gray and reddish brown tone. Particular attention should be given to the highlighting of the various trusses which comprise the arch. The various thicknesses being gradually highlighted and the decorative motif in the center of the archways clearly defined and shaded. The openings in each archway and in the area over the head of the statue should be cut out and the back faced with strips so as to eliminate any rolling of the edges. The pedestal upon which the statue or image stands should be painted to resemble old marble. The treatment in the garden must be very colorful so as to form a contrast to the heavier tones in the foreground. The garden wall should be painted gray-green tone with the foliage set pieces carrying a predominance of reds, yellows and a variety of greens. A flowering tree should be up right with a light green tree up left. A medium blue cyclorama highlighted with a suggestion of pink for the background.

Lighting Treatment

At the rise everything down with the exception of the blues in the foots and first borders which should be down next to last point so as to give a haze. The candles should be lighted right and left of the arched opening with an amber tip. Through the scrim can be seen the deep blue of the sky which silhouettes the upper part of the arches and the trees in the garden. As the action progresses an amber spot off right is placed to throw a shaft of light across stage to left center highlighting the right side of the statue on the pedestal. At this point a blue should be brought up from a baby spot on the left side of the statue. The lighting in the garden should gradually ascend through the morning tones; the flower row being highlighted with canary and green and a rose tone given to the blue cyc. Spots should be placed to highlight the various foliage pieces draped about the walls, the set trees, and to flood the area of the garden between the arches and the wall. A cloud effect can be used to advantage on the cyc.

Costume

The ensemble is garbed in the dress of Friars as shown in Fig. A. The brown garb should be used. Sandals should be worn and the general make-up of the players should be that to emulate in wings, etc., the appearance of Friars.

INSTRUCTIVE COSTUME DESIGN, by Emil Alvin Hartmann, is a book which should be in the workroom of every producer. It is an authoritative textbook in which the rudiments of costume design are explained in simple non-technical language.

The foreword of the book, sections of which I am taking the liberty of reprinting, seems to me to contain in a nutshell the elements which constitute it:

"This is a book of practical helpfulness, of practical information and definite instructions in the matter of Costume Design. No effort has been made to go into any lengthy discussion of the history of costumes through the ages, particularly the history of the female costumes through the ages, for the reason that libraries and museums, especially during the past few years, have provided ample means for the student to become familiar with this phase of the subject. The real value of the work lies in its concise instructions, and profuse illustrations of the method of teaching the subject of Costume Design. Throughout the book the author has endeavored by precept and illustration to have the student actually do the things that are suggested—to have the mind, the eye and the hand work in unison, doing the practical design step by step while the theory is being learned."

Within this book we find an interesting treatise on the subject of Costume Design, with valuable information on how designs are made—the elements of a costume design—how these theories may be intelligently put into practice and applied in proportion to the human figure. The entire category runs in an instructive way from the days of the Ancients up to our own times. There is an interesting and valuable chapter on the study of color, particularly as applied to the various types, also chapters on millinery design, etc. All these phases are set down by a man who knows intimately the possibilities and limitations of Costume Design, and of all the books which I have ever seen relative to this particular subject, this book will prove a boon to the producer in the intelligent designing of costumes for the various productions offered.

A color type chart is added which will also prove of helpful interest.

Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Summer time attendance in the small town is bound to drop—if you don't work extra hard to keep the house cooler than outdoors and furnish exceptional entertainment.

The pull of the search for a cool spot; the plentiful outdoor sports; the prevalence of automobile owners. These work against you.

If ever a small town man needs good shows he needs them to keep his house off the red ink side of the book in summer.

That's why Straight From the Shoulder keeps digging at you to shoot in the dependable tips.

If a fellow can select a strong, cool-atmosphere picture for his feature; if he can choose his comedy, serial or other short subject with the feeling that it will round out the show, send the folks away in a frame of mind that disposes them to come again, he's a whole lot better off than if he just takes the feature and the short subject as it happens to come.

Shoot in tips, folks. This is the time the lemons go better in lemonade than on your screen.

VAN.

IN EVERY WOMAN'S LIFE. (4,258 feet). Star cast. I cannot say too much about this production. It has everything and if I could buy pictures that would please my audience as well as this, then I would be happy and sitting pretty. Make some more like this. Mr. Exhibitor grab this one. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. All classes, town of 1,200. Admission, 10-25. J. E. Lewis, Everett Theatre (8,000 seats), Middletown, Delaware.

IN HOLLYWOOD WITH POTASH AND PERLMUTTER. (6,750 feet). Star, Alexander Carr. I do not believe this one will please the average audience. It didn't give much satisfaction here. Some of the comedy was good and a great deal of it went over their heads. Don't promise too much. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission, 15-25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

LOVE MASTER. (6,779 feet). Star, Strongheart (dog). A very good picture. Pleased all who saw it but did not do enough business to pay rental in two nights. Not worth extra rental to us. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Farmers and town class, town of 800. Admission, 10-25. Firlkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

OLIVER TWIST. (7,000 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. This is Dickens' immortal story, with Jackie Coogan in the role of Little Oliver, an inmate of the poorhouse, supported by Lon Chaney as Fagin, the fence, George Seigmann as Bill Sykes, Gladys Brockwell as Nancy Sykes, and Lionel Belmore as kind-hearted Mr. Brownlow, gives you a fine picturization of Dickens' famous characters, in a drama of life in old London Town. Whether your patrons are lovers of Dickens or not, they should like the human story anyway. By all means, don't overlook this one. Draw city and country class, town of 3,000. Admission, 20-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

ONLY WOMAN. (6,700 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. A very good picture which pleased everyone who saw it; and one of the few that pulled a better house the second night than the first. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw miners and railroad class, town 3,500. Admission, 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre, Gallup, New Mexico.

PAINTED PEOPLE. (5,700 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Colleen Moore is a great favorite here and this is one of her best pictures. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Farmers town of 200. Admission, 10-25. J. M. Blanchard, Community Theatre (200 seats), Lone Rock, Iowa.

SANDRA. (7,905 feet). Star, Barbara La Marr. Will please LaMarr fans. About the same as all her pictures. Too much love scenes and not much action. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission, 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

SO BIG. (8,562 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Very good. Better than story which it did not follow too closely. Fine cast. Well acted and directed. Should go anywhere. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Small town class, town of 1,000. Admission, 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

SUNDOWN. (9,000 feet). Star cast. This is a picture that is quite different. It offers much in natural settings, and the cattle, well it looks like they had them all and then some. It's a big western of a better and cleaner type, will appeal to all classes. Pleased my patrons. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fair appeal. All classes, town of 1,200. Admission, 10-25. J. E. Lewis, Everett Theatre (8,000 seats), Middletown, Delaware.

Fox

ARIZONA ROMEO. (4,694 feet). Star, Buck Jones. The first Jones I ever ran here and it seemed to please as much as any western drama. I think Jones is fair but I don't think he will ever be a big favorite here. That's simply my impression. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Not a special. Good appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission, 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

ARIZONA ROMEO. (4,694 feet). Star, Buck Jones. A poor Jones picture. Not liked. Fair business. General class, city of 35,000. Admission, 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats). Easton, Pennsylvania.

CYCLONE RIDER. (6,672 feet). Star cast. A fine bet for a small town. Action galore. The auto race is a pip. If your audience likes action, give them this one. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission, 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

DAUGHTERS OF THE NIGHT. (5,470 feet). Star, Alyce Mills. A story extolling the merits of the telephone central. Very much overdrawn, for they do not make them that way and in most places they are "cussed" instead of praised. Story is a fast-moving melodrama and has lots of pep, but does not draw well. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

DICK TURPIN. (5,229 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A costume picture with plenty of action; but we didn't do as much on this as his regular westerns. Tony, as Black Bess, dies in the last part of the picture, and the kids were all downhearted. Tone, good. Print, good. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

FLAMES OF DESIRE. (5,438 feet). Star cast. Don't promise much when you run this

In summer, make everything count for you. Let the people KNOW about your well-selected program. Don't skip the short subject. Tell them what a laugh-bringer you have; let them hear about the next episode of the serial.

And help the other fellow to decide when to step heavy and when to lay back on the advertising.

Send in your dependable tips on every picture you show—features, short subjects!

one; nothing to it, and you will probably pay a special price for it, as that is the only way I can buy Fox pictures. Draw big city type, admission ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

FLAMES OF DESIRE. (5,438 feet). Star, Diana Miller. Didn't do anything to speak of on this. Picture didn't seem to have much drawing power. The public are seeing too much hot stuff such as "Flames." R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Colorado.

FOLLY OF VANITY. Star cast. A fair picture which seems to please the King Neptune shots are wonderfully done, and offers some beautiful settings which are quite different from anything yet offered. It will please in the most of theatres while the story is weak. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes, town of 1,200. Admission, 10-25. J. E. Lewis, Everett Theatre (8,000 seats), Middletown, Delaware.

GOLD AND THE GIRL. (4,512 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Buck's are all pretty good—that's what his regular followers say. They are small productions; Buck can stand big ones, regular specials! He's there! R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

GOLD HEELS. (6,020 feet). Star, Robert Agnew. Plugged this Saturday night and it pleased mostly all. A race track classic, based on "Checkers" with good appeal. Print new. No as special. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

HEARTS AND SPURS. (5 reels). Star, Buck Jones. Here's Buck Jone's latest and it's a peach. The comedy in it is a scream. The whole cast does excellent work. Fine little picture. Print new. Tone, good. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Colorado.

HUNTED WOMAN. (4,954 feet). Star, Seena Owen. A northern picture by James Oliver Curwood. Good picture for the summer months as it is taken in far cold north. Beautiful scenery. Tone, good. Special, no. Print, new. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Colorado.

LAST MAN ON EARTH. (6,899 feet). Star, Earl Foxe. A snappy show, and it's very different from the usual run of films. Some of my patrons got such a kick out of it that they came back on the second night to "Ha ha" again. It can be classed and sold to patrons as a novelty special. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

LAST MAN ON EARTH. (6,899 feet). Star, Earl Foxe. An enjoyable eyeful; comedy touches very good. Pleased my patrons. Some of the posters are a little loud and the girls look well fed, but there are enough of the quiet kind of posters to use if preferred. Draw mixed class, town 1,500. Admission, 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats). Port Orchard, Washington.

LAST OF THE DUANES. (6,942 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A corking good western. First time I have shown Mix in a long time and it went over with a bang. Mix is there, believe me, and he has a wonderful horse in Tony. Step on this one, boys. She will stand it. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission, 15-25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

OH YOU TONY. (6,802 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A very good Mix, lots of laughs and the race is a real thriller, but seven reels is too long. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Working class, town of 2,800. Admission, 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

RAINBOW TRAIL. (5,251 feet). Star, Tom Mix. This is the sequel to "Riders of the Purple Sage," and it's a knockout. Another Zane Grey story that's a big box office attraction. Tone, good. Print, new. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Colorado.

RIDERS OF THE PURPLE SAGE. (5,578 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Dust off the empty seats for this one. It will no doubt bring in the dough for the small town exhibitors. A Zane Grey story with Mix and Tony and a good supporting cast. Print, new. Good appeal, tone good. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Colorado.

SOFT BOILED. (7,054 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A real good Mix picture that drew poor business for us. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Town and rural class, town of 1,028. Admission, 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

Metro-Goldwyn

BEAUTY PRIZE. (5,759 feet). Star, Viola Dana. This is about the same as all her pictures. Nice little program offering. Nothing big about them but yet they seem to please. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission, 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

BEAUTY PRIZE. (5,759 feet). Star, Viola Dana. A fair picture to a certain class but hasn't a general appeal and at times is draggy. Would say just an average program and that's all. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, fifty per cent. General class, town of 3,600. Admission, 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

DADDY'S GONE A-HUNTING. (5,851 feet). Stars, Percy Marmont, Alice Joyce. A great love drama. Very sad, and a bit heavy. By the man who made "Humoresque." Print, good. Tone, not so good. No as special. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

DIXIE HANDICAP. (6,905 feet). Star cast. Four days to very good business. Picture is the best race horse story screened, in my opinion. Draw general class, city 35,000. Admission, 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre, (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

JANICE MEREDITH. Star, Marion Davies. We ran this in tie-ups with school and broke even. It's box office appeal is weak but a better production is hard to find. It is great. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Farmers and town people, town of 800. Admission, 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

MARRIED FLIRTS. (6,705 feet). Star, Conrad Nagel. Will pass as a program picture. Another "jazz" picture. Heavens knows the market is full of such pictures. They don't draw now. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission, 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

MONSTER. (6,435 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. A weird comedy-drama that drew well on advertising Lon Chaney. Some enjoyed it fine, while others didn't care for it at all. Johnny Arthur is a new one, and is good in this. New print. No as a special. R. T. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

NAVIGATOR. (5,600 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. Pleased one hundred per cent. I can't see why any house shouldn't enjoy this one. Buster hasn't been popular heretofore but now they want more. The kids sure liked it. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

PRAIRIE WIFE. (6,487 feet). Star,

Yakima Canutt, the F. B. O. Star in "The Human Tornado."

Dorothy Devore. Sounds great, doesn't it?—but boys, don't expect too much. Patrons expected to see Perils of the Plains, and a wonderful Romance of Pioneer Life. Didn't flop, but it didn't please. Paid too much. Good print. As special, never. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

PRAIRIE WIFE. (Star, Herbert Rawlinson). I personally did not see this one but from what I heard about it, it seemed to please. It is a semi-western. Don't promise too much and then you will not disappoint anyone. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission, 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

RAG MAN. (5,908 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. One of Jackie's better ones. Had a good crowd of kids and that's about all, as we had a beautiful storm that evening. Still everyone seemed to enjoy it. Not much profit as Jackie's pictures come high. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission, 15-25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre, (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

RECOIL. (6,800 feet). Star cast. Not up to other Rex Beach stories. Just a fair picture. Tone, poor. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, sixty per cent. Farmers and town class, town of 800. Admission, 10-25. Firkins and Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

SEVEN CHANCES. (5,113 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. Not as good as "The Navigator" but well received by patrons. A good entertaining comedy. General class, city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre, Easton, Pennsylvania.

SEVEN CHANCES. (5,113 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. Here's a good laugh producer in six reels with Keaton surrounded by 7,777 brides. Book it. It's all comedy and some of it is a riot. Print new. Sunday, yes. Special, no. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Colorado.

SHOOTING OF DAN McGREW. (6,318 feet). Star, Barbara LaMarr. Must say that this picture was quite a drawing card in my house and everyone enjoyed it. Buy it right and it will draw for you. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. Town and country class, town of 7,800. Admission, 10-25. Herbert Tapp, Hippodrome Theatre, (460 seats), Sheridan, Indiana.

SILENT ACCUSER. (6 reels). Star, Eleanor Boardman. Raymond McKee and the dog "Peter the Great" are in the cast also. This one proved a very satisfactory picture for us and our patrons complimented us on it. Metro should make more like it if they want to sell the little fellow. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. General class, town of 3,600. Admission, 10-20. William A Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Ill.

SINNERS IN SILK. (5,750 feet). Star, Adolphe Menjou. A very fine society picture with a good moral. Every flapper should see this one. Menjou certainly does fine work. Conrad Nagel and Eleanor Boardman also good. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

Paramount

CALL OF THE CANYON. (6,982 feet). Star, Lois Wilson. Another Zane Grey picture. The name drew a crowd if nothing else, but this one was a good one. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes, town of 1,800. Admission, 10-25. Miss Zelma Campbell, Colonial Theatre (450 seats), Moulton, Iowa.

FEET OF CLAY. (9,746 feet). Star, Rod LaRoque. Pleased only fifty per cent. of my audience which was very limited on both nights of playing. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair appeal. Town and country class town of 7,800. Admission 10-25. Herbert Tapp, Hippodrome Theatre (460 seats), Sheridan, Indiana.

FORBIDDEN PARADISE. (7 reels). Star, Pola Negri. About Pola's best but that's not saying much. Pola is certainly a dead one here. I hardly gross rental on any of her junk and this was no exception. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. No appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

FORTY WINKS. (6,186 feet). Star, Ray Griffith. A feature comedy that is very entertaining. Griffith is jake for the part he has. Is bound to please all classes. Print excellent. Yes for Sunday, special, no. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

GOLDEN BED. (8,594 feet). Star, Rod La Rocque. A special in price only is my opinion of this one. There are some big scenes all right, but it could have been cut down a couple of reels and it would have been much better. DeMille's pictures do not draw here for some reason. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

GOLDEN BED. (8,594 feet). Star cast. A very good one although the reports that I have read didn't say so. The old saying still holds good, "If it's a Paramount it's the best in town." Tone, okay. Special, yes. Good appeal. All classes town of 1,800. Admission 10-25. Miss Zelma Campbell, Colonial Theatre (450 seats), Moulton, Iowa.

LIGHT THAT FAILED. Star, Percy Marmont. A fair picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Appeal, ninety per cent. Robert W. Hines. Hines Theatre, Loyalton, South Dakota.

MADAME SANS GENE. (9,994 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. A picture for first run theatres, where they will appreciate it. No good for town theatre. Made an awful flop for me. You may get $5.00 a chair in New York, but in small town don't raise your admission price. With my patrons it was just a picture. Fair tone. Yes for Sunday. Draw all classes, town 1,200. Admission 10-25. J. E. Lewis, Everett Theatre (800 seats), Middletown, Delaware.

MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE. (9,932 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. Fine story, photography, acting and sets, but my what a flop at the box office. Paramount stung me on price. Admission 10-20-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

NEW LIVES FOR OLD. (6,796 feet). Star, Betty Compson. A real good picture. I say "good" because when a picture pleases my patrons a hundred per cent. then it deserves honorable mention, and this did that very thing. A picture which offers Miss Compson a rare chance and she takes advantage of it. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw all classes, town 1,200. Admission 10-25. J. E. Lewis, Everett Theatre (800 seats), Middletown, Delaware.

NIGHT CLUB. (5,721) feet). Star, Ray Griffith. A farce comedy that kept them laughing the biggest part of the time. Good tone and appeal. No as special. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star, Lois Wilson. My patrons well pleased with this picture and it contains much of real entertaining interest. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Town and country class town of 7,800. Admission 10-25. Herbert Tapp, Hippodrome Theatre (460 seats), Sheridan, Indiana.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star cast. If you have not booked this one boys—you're "back numbers." It's as good as "The Covered Wagon," in photography, suspense and plot, and has thrills throughout the story. A splendid lesson in Texas history, visualizing the great Southwest in the early days of the Lone Star State and featuring a great cattle drive through a hostile Indian territory to North of 36. Can't be beat in romance and adventure. A superb cast. Get it quick, fellows, it's wonderful. Draw city and country class, town of 3,000. Admission 20-50. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star, Lois Wilson. A far better picture than "The Covered Wagon." It should bring you money if the rent on the picture isn't too high. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. All classes town of 1,800. Admission 10-25. Miss Zelma Campbell, Colonial Theatre (450 seats), Moulton, Iowa.

OLD HOME WEEK. (6,780 feet). (By George Ade.) Star, Thomas Meighan. Ran this on Saturday night and the K. K. K. had quite a doings here, so didn't do as well as expected. Patrons reported good on this. Now print, tone good. Yes for Sunday, no as special. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. Enjoyable picture for young and old. The kids, however made up most of my three days showing of this picture and in consequence account of paying Adolf a big price for it, made no profit, just about broke even. Adolf does not have to worry where his money is coming from as long as us small country boys are working for him gratis. Small town class and farmers town of 1,800. Admission 10-30. R. Kuhn, Kuhn Theatre (250 seats), Lebanon, Oregon.

SACKCLOTH AND SCARLET. (6,732 feet). Star, Alice Terry. Another picture to give the advocators of censorship something to talk about: this picture, "Open All Night" and "Man Who Fights Alone," from Paramount has created a sentiment for censorship among our better patrons; first reel-and-a-half "very indecent" (remarks from patrons leaving show). If you run this, look it over first and cut out the first reel or more and you will have a fair show. Draw middle class and had very bad business. H. D. Wharton, Pastime Theatre, Warren, Arkansas.

SHOCK PUNCH. (6,151 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Here's a dandy, one that will please them—and a good one for your Saturday program. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

SHOCK PUNCH. Star, Richard Dix. All Dix pictures please and as usual majority of fans were satisfied. A picture with a good punch. Tone, good. Special, no. Good appeal. Mixed class town of 1,800. Admission twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House (492 seats), Belvidere, New Jersey.

SPANIARD. (6,676 feet). Star, Ricardo Cortez. Proved a splendid attraction for me and audiences liked Cortez in his role as the Spaniard. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special no. Good appeal. All classes city of 95,000. Admission 40-50. Guy O. Kenimer, Arcade Theatre (1152 seats), Jacksonville, Florida.

SPANIARD. (6,676 feet). Star, Ricardo Cortez. Very good. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre (small town patronage), Russellville, Kentucky.

TOO MANY KISSES. (6,750 feet). Star, Richard Dix. This star certainly goes over with a bang. He's coming fast, and is very popular here. Good title, good business. Lots of fast action in this one. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Eighty per cent appeal. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

TOP OF THE WORLD. (7 reels). Star, Anna Q. Nilsson. Fair program. Good acting of two stars, it's chief merit. Fair entertainment. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Small town class town of 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

SILENT SANDERSON. (4,641 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Western theatres and family theatres can't go wrong on Carey. The Producers Distributing Corporation Carey's make the F. B. O. Carey's look like comedies. I only hope that they continue to keep up the good work. Tone, only fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Masses city of 230,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

SILENT SANDERSON. (4,641 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Very fair western drama. Story of the Yukon, where men are men, etc. Box office, medium. Fair tone, appeal sixty per cent. No for Sunday or special. Draw all classes, town 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 setas), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

STOP FLIRTING. (5,161 feet). Star, Wanda Hawley. A fair comedy-drama which gets a little tiresome and ends up something like a serial. Pleased about sixty per cent. Good tone. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw miners and railroad class, town 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre, Gallup, New Mexico.

TIGER THOMPSON. (5,700 feet). Star,

Harry Carey. A good clean western with plenty of action, well photographed. Just enough comedy and Harry's popularity remains in its dominate position with our patrons. Even the "western shunners" come to see Carey. Tone, good. Sunday yes. Special, no. Appeal, one hundred per cent. D. B. Rankin, Co-operative Theatre, Idana, Kansas.

TIGER THOMPSON. (5,700 feet). Star, Harry Carey. About the same as all his pictures and are good bets for a small town. Nothing big but will pass as the average western program offering. It seems to me that there are not as many good westerns on the market today as in former years. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

WELCOME STRANGER. (6,618 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. A great picture and one of the best that we have ever shown. Well acted and well directed and full of good comedy so what more would you want. PATHE REVIEWS. This review is good enough for any program as a "filler" and it will make plenty of friends: Pathecolor in this reel is very beautiful. Yes for Sunday, very good appeal. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

Independents

BORDER JUSTICE. (State Right). Star, Bill Cody. Fair western, rather on the blood and thunder order but when they like westerns it will make good. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. CRACKERJACK. (C. C. Burr). Star, Johnny Hines. (7 reels). Johnny's latest and it's another good one. Boys, if you haven't played Johnny's other two "The Speed Spook" and "The Early Bird," do so now. They are bound to make money for you. Good tone, very good appeal. Print couldn't be better. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Colorado.

DRUMS OF JEOPARDY. (State Right). A good program picture. Good tone. Appeal ninety per cent. Yes for Sunday but no as special. Draw farm and country class town 1,000. Admission 10-30. Robert W. Hines, Boyd's Hall Theatre (550 seats), Bowdle, South Dakota.

FIGHTING THE FLAMES. (State Right). Star cast. Good fire picture. Have seen better fire scenes but not often. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Conservative class city of 23,000. Admission twenty-five cents. D. J. Adams, Auditorium Theatre (1,000 seats), Concord, New Hampshire.

GAMBLING WIVES. (State Right). Star, Marjorie Daw. Just fair, well acted and well directed but not much of a story. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Railroad class and miners town of 3,500. Admission 10-25. Giles Master, Strand Theatre, Gallup, New Mexico.

GIRLS MEN FORGET. (Principal). Star, Patsy Ruth Miller. Two days to good business. A flapper story liked by the majority. Draw general class, city 35,000. Admission 6,000. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre, Lebanon, New Hampshire.

MAN FROM RIO GRANDE. (State Right). Star, Art Mix. A very poor attempt to imitate the inimitable Tom Mix that will send the audience away with a bad taste in their mouths. No tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, thirty per cent. All classes city of 230,000. Admission 10-20. R. M. Kennedy, Royal Theatre (350 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

RIDIN' MAD. (State Right). Star, Yakima Canutt. Aside from some very good stunts by the star who surely can ride a horse but cannot act. This is only a fair picture. It takes more than stunts to make a picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

RIDIN' WEST. (State Right). Star cast. Another one of those good westerns. Never fails to please our patronage. Tone, good. Sunday, okay. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Middle and working class city of 25,000. Admission 10-25. Ed. C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

RUSTLERS AND ROMANCE. (Arrow). Star, Yakima Canutt. Only fair, is my opinion of this one. Very weak plot. The only redeeming feature of it was the riding of Canutt. That boy can ride but you must have more than riding to make a picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 15-25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

THROUGH THE FLAMES. (State Right). Star, Richard Talmadge. Good little picture: nothing big, but all right for program show. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw small town and farmers, town 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. D. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

"The White Desert"

Unusually Tense Drama and Tremendous Thrill of Avalanch of Snow in Metro-Goldwyn Feature

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Under the title "The White Desert" which to the average mind conveys no idea of the real nature or locale of the story and in fact will probably suggest to many that it is another sheik picture, Metro-Goldwyn is offering a tensely dramatic story of railroad building in winter through the heart of the snow-covered mountains of the West.

Courtney Riley Cooper supplied the story and Reginald Barker directed; both have many successes to their credit, and as it reaches the screen this picture should prove a thoroughly entertaining film for the majority, and taking into consideration its snow stuff should prove considerably above the average as a hot-weather attraction.

This picture by no means depends on its atmosphere, however. In the first place the big scene is a tremendous and absolutely new thrill. Pictures with big flood scenes that sweep everything before them have become commonplace, but here we have similar destruction wrought by a terrific avalanche of snow. It seems as if millions of tons come sliding down the mountainside; you actually see it in huge cataracts falling over the sheltered place in which the principals are imprisoned, and in another scene it seems to entirely engulf and bury a score of workmen. Oh boy, here is a real thrill that will bring you to the edge of your seat.

While this scene comes fairly early in the picture it does not anti-climax what follows, but rather serves as a forceful basis for a lot of stirring action. It is here that the real drama commences, with the camp marooned from outside help, all wires down, and without food and with a blizzard raging. Director Barker has admirably succeeded in putting over the tenseness of the drama and by a number of skillful touches shows the tremendous nervous tension of the characters while they are just waiting to be rescued, unable to do anything and slowly starving.

When one after one the leading characters start out for help and are brought back frozen and finally the hero and his brave but week companion who is spurred on with the necessity of obtaining milk for his new born babe, finally succeeds in summoning help you feel with them the thrill of accomplishment against terrific odds.

We don't recall a picture in which the entire atmosphere of the production is better sustained. There is snow, and more snow and the chilly breath of winter in practically every scene, the mountainside and entire landscape is covered deeply and there are excellent sequences showing tremendous locomotive snow removers bucking and ploughing through heavy drifts.

While the story is forceful and dramatic enough without it, a melodramatic sequence which packs a good punch has been introduced for good measure, in which the villain attacks the girl and she keeps him at bay until the hero's arrival by throwing a pan of boiling water in his face.

While Pat O'Malley has the leading role, Claire Windsor and Robert Frazer as well as the others in the cast all give excellent performances, but it is really the tenseness of the drama and the thrill of the avalanche that are the big points.

Story

Work is being rushed on a tunnel through the mountains. Keith is the engineer in charge and Barry is the superintendent. Both are in love with Robinette, the president's daughter. Winter comes and Barry warns Keith that the blasts are too big and are liable to loosen the snow above, but Keith anxious to make a record does not heed the warning. Finally a tremendous avalanche slides down the mountain side hurling about half of the camp over the cliff, destroying the commissary and telephone lines. A blizzard adds to the plight of the marooned party. Keith goes out to try and get word through but fails, then Barry decides to go, and Robinette confesses her love for him. During all this time the nerves of the men who have been without food and awaiting death are on edge, the tension becoming terrific. Barry gets word through and a relief train after bucking the heavy snows finally arrives. Barry gets to Robinette just in time to save her from the attack of a maddened brute whom she has blinded by throwing boiling water in his face.

"The Lucky Devil"

Author Who Wrote Wallace Reid's Breezy Stories Supplies a Sure-Fire One for Richard Dix

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Remember the breezy and delightful auto-racing comedy dramas in which the late Wallace Reid scord such big hits? Well, Byron Morgan who wrote those stories is the author of "The Lucky Devil," Richard Dix's newest starring vehicle for Paramount.

After having appeared in a wide variety of roles, Dix, for the first time since he became a box-office magnet, appears as a real racing driver, piloting a speed wagon in a big road race.

The plot is of the same type as the previous Morgan stories, which means that there is plenty of action to keep up the interest. The opening flash shows Dix as a man of the great outdoors, the camera moves back and you see it is a display in a department store. Dix wins a big auto in a raffle and despite the fact that it has proved a hoodoo starts for California. The hoodoo follows. He is mistaken for the real owner, is robbed and gets in bad with the "Girl's" aunt but through the girl's assistance manages to enter a big race and wins both race and girl.

While possibly it is not quite as snappy and spontaneous as some of this author's previous stories, it keeps moving at a good fast pace and contains a lot of situations that are sure-fire with an audience. There is a pleasing romance with just the right amount of pathos and sympathy for the girl and hero when they go broke. Some good roadside scenes show the way the "hoodoo" seems to be always after Dix as one thing after another happens to him. There is a good snappy ring fight with a real "pug" Gunboat Smith in which Dix is subjected to some pretty good mauling and it is a relief to find he does not knock him out but he does stay the two rounds necessary for the prize money.

The auto race occupies quite a large part of the film and to sustain the interest there is considerable by-play, the destruction of a cart on the roadside, splashing of mud on nice clean clothes, the efforts of the spectators to watch the whizzing cars resulting almost in St. Vitus' dance and amusing touches even though they are familiar devices to get laughs.

There is good pep in the race itself, for in addition to the natural interest of a contest of this kind, thrills are provided by the efforts of two "dirty" drivers to ditch the hero's car.

One punch scene shows several cars in collision and another has them running into a pile of bales of hay on the roadside.

A decidedly novel and clever finish which introduces a pleasing but rather improbable touch is the winning of the race by Dix running his car backwards over the finish line just ahead of the other fellow.

We believe "The Lucky Devil" while it may not appeal to the blase and sophisticated patron will prove splendid entertainment for the majority of patrons and they will want to see Dix in more pictures of this type.

"The Happy Warrior"

J. Stuart Blackton Makes Faithful Translation of the Hutchinson Novel For Vitagraph

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

If your patrons liked "The Clean Heart," they will like "The Happy Warrior," for it is cut off the same cloth to the same pattern, and has been transferred to the screen with the same care that marked the earlier presentation, preserving more nearly the flavor of the novel than do most screen translations.

The present story carries a trifle more physical action as the director has made the most of the fight at the circus; so much, indeed, that the action sags from that point through contrast. The fight comes too early to aid in building up a climax, but it is glorious while it lasts. This has been built up to a high pitch, and held from too much stress through a comedy relief in the fight between the fat lady and the living skeleton.

If your patrons like A. S. M. Hutchinson's stories, they will like this, for Mr. Blackton has used every technical resource to enhance the production. When Egbert goes to trial he sees his accusers distorted in the trick mirrors used at amusement resorts, there are shadow scenes, silhouettes through canvas, and once, when Ralph is standing on his head, he sees the clergyman upside down as naturally he would. Nothing has been left undone. But if you do not like the unusual types and the familiar nit-wits of Hutchinson novels, this is no better than the others.

Malcolm McGregor does well with Ralph and Mary Alden is forceful and effective as his aunt. Olive Borden is almost appealing as the circus girl, but Alice Calhoun is handicapped by her thankless role. Anders Randolph, as the circus owner, is the one nearly human character in this assemblage and stands out forcefully in his few scenes. Otto Mattieson as the vengeful servant gives a remarkable character study; about the best of the lot. The rest do the best they can with what they are given.

The Story

The Lathams are suddenly raised to the peerage through the death of a distant relative. The claim is disputed by the unacknowledged widow of the late lord. In her weakened condition she seeks out her sister and dies, leaving her baby to the care of its aunt, Maggie. The latter holds the papers determined to wait until Rollo, son of the Lathams comes of age. Meanwhile Ralph defends Rollo from the bully. Not only does a strong friendship spring up between the two boys, but Ralph has won the attention of Stingo Hannaford, proprietor of a circus, and joins as its star boxer. Another member is the bully he thrashed. Once more the bully attacks Rollo, who has come to visit Ralph, and Ralph comes to the rescue and is knocked out by Pinsent, who is stabbed by Egbert. Ima, Stingo's daughter, nurses Ralph through brain fever. Stingo gives up the circus business for horse trading and sends Ralph to the Argentine for stock. Several years later he comes home to find that Dora is to marry Rollo. The aunt thinks this a good time to wreak her vengeance. Ralph starts off to win the title and the girl, but his better nature prevents him. Egbert, escaped from prison, takes the proofs to Rollo but Ralph follows in an effort to prevent him. Egbert shoots Mrs. Letham and commits suicide, and Ralph finds that he loves Ima.

"Passionate Youth"

Divorce, Parental Neglect and Jazz Are Outstanding Elements of Melodrama Offered by Truart

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

With such well-known players in the cast as Beverly Bayne, Frank Mayo, Pauline Garon and Bryant Washburn, Truart Films is offering under the sensational title "Passionate Youth" a melodramatic production which deals with parental divorce and neglect of a growing daughter by an ambitious mother.

The title suggests jazz, and there is considerable of it in this picture, with scenes of drinking parties in restaurants, wild parties at home and dancing in bathing suits in the moonlight, but the majority of the action is carried on by the older members of the cast and it is really the mother who is the center of the story.

The plot covers a lot of ground starting out with the father as a minister in a small church and his wife sharing his lot until she becomes ambitious for her daughter just budding into womanhood. She strikes out and succeeds but in so doing leaves her daughter to her own resources with the result that she ends in shooting a worthless man who has been playing with them both, and having to face a trial for murder.

The constantly changing situations and introduction of new characters develops lines of action that are not always carried out to their conclusion nor are the underlying motives always explained, this lack of smoothness results in the story at times becoming involved and somewhat confused and a number of the situations are more convenient in developing the plot than convincing.

The leading players all give capable performance though Frank Mayo does not seem quite at home as the minister. In addition Carmelita Geraghty gives a good characterization as a gold-digger whose line of action is never clearly explained.

With its jazz angles, a murder and trial scene and the stressing of the parental neglect theme this picture will probably prove a fairly pleasing attraction and rate at the box-office as an average program offering.

"The Lady Who Lied"

Stone, Valli and Naldi in Colorful First National Adaptation of Typical Robert Hichens Story

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Those familiar with the novels of Robert Hichens will recognize as typical of his style the story that is unfolded in First National's "The Lady Who Lied" adapted from his novel "Snake-Bite." There is the atmosphere of the Sahara Desert although in this instance it is Algiers and not Egypt that serves as the locale of most of the action, and, as in some of his other stories the feminine element of the romantic triangle is a married woman.

Opening in Venice during a carnival, switching to a small North African town and then to scenes on the desert including a tent that is gorgeous enough for a prince and finally introducing an attack of the native tribesmen on the caraven, the production is colorful.

The plot moves forward smoothly but too much detail and deliberateness of tempo causes the interest to lag at times and the film could stand cutting to considerably less than its present length.

All of the leading roles are well handled. Most of the action falls on Virginia Valli as the wife, and Lewis Stone as the "other man" while Edward Earle as the husband is of scarcely less prominence. Nita Naldi's work is effective as an adventuress described in the subtitle as "a woman of the night" but she appears only in a few scenes. It is a polite type of domestic problem story with practically no vigorous drama until the big situation is reached. Then the story becomes melodramatic when the other man is bitten by a snake just as the doctor husband is about to "have it out with him" and he refuses to use his professional skill unless the wife assures him there is nothing between them. Here is where the title comes in for she lies to save him.

While there is no hint of unfaithfulness on the part of the wife, this is not the type of story that will appeal to certain classes of patrons, for Lewis Stone who really has the leading "heroic" role is pictured as deliberately plotting to win the wife away from her husband. This alienates sympathy for him; nor is there any strong appeal in the unhappy wife's plight for the husband is not a bad sort of fellow after all.

"The Little Giant"

Glenn Hunter and Edna Murphy Excellent in Universal—Jewel Comedy—Drama

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

The cry has gone forth tha tthere are all too few pictures attractive to those small town audiences who are tiring of jazz stuff. If this is true then "The Little Giant," a Universal Jewel with Glenn Hunter and Edna Murphy, ought to prove successful in towns as well as cities. It depends, not upon melodramatic thrills or imposing backgrounds or forced comedy, but upon a certain humanness that originally was found in the Hugh McNair Kahler story from which it is adapted. Pathos and comedy are deftly mingled by Director William Nigh, the acting is excellent, and so the picture may be classed as one that does not miss fire in its striving toward realism.

The story is a fine vehicle for the undoubted talents of engaging Glenn Hunter, and the star does a great piece of work. He has the audience laughing at him one moment, and the next nursing a heart ache. Miss Murphy is an able foil, especially where pathos succeeds comedy, doing some of her best work in the dramatic scene where the youthful sales manager turns against her and the world.

David Higgins as the aged peddler with the rapid-fire line of conversation is fully as successful as Hunter in stirring the sympathies or the humor of the audience. He fits in the part like a glove. Jim Bradbury, Jr., and Jean Jarvis contribute a lot of comedy, most of it of the semi-burlesque type, but their antics never detract from the realism of the picture. Miss Jarvis is especially funny as the dumb, staring servant girl. The other players are all capable.

It may be said that "The Little Giant" holds up a mirror to life and then does a few legitimate tricks with the mirror, making it a bit concave or convex at times, to enhance the appeal of the mirror characters. It's a good, clean picture of unquestioned entertainment value, and it ought to please every type of audience.

Story

Elmer Clinton, raised from childhood by his uncle, Clem Bixby, an itinerant peddler, wins the post of sales manager with a washing machine company and tries scientific selling. Royce Enfield, son of the owner of the company, who is jealous, flatters Elmer into thinking he is a "little giant" and surrounds him with a crowd of rum-loving spongers. Elmer and his wife live beyond their means. The washing machines apparently do not sell. Uncle Clem comes to live with the Clintons and sells many machines on the sly. Royce is discovered intercepting the orders and destroying them. Elmer and he fight. Elmer turns the fast crowd out of his house, forgets snobbishness and really goes to work, engaging Uncle Clem as sales advisor.

"The Texas Trail"

Usual Fast Action with Comedy Angle Heavily Stressed Characterizes New Harry Carey Western

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Following one of the formulas of the regulation Western, Harry Carey in "The Texas Trail," his newest picture for Producers Distributing Corporation, is cast as the foreman, the girl as an Eastener and there is a mortgage on the ranch. Theft of money to prevent foreclosure supplies the villainy; efforts to recover it afford opportunities for building the romantic angle and together they provide basis for the action.

There is, however, one material point in which this story differs from the ordinary run; this is in stripping from the star in the opening scenes the usual heroic glamour. He is first shown submitting tamely to being held up by bandits much to the disgust of the heroine, and the subtitles poke good-natured fun at the type of hero who fights a mob of men single-handed. While this is much more in accordance with real life it is a question as to whether hard-boiled western fans will like to see their illusions so shattered, although before the film is finshed the hero fully establishes his right to this classification.

Just to the extent that the heroic angle is subordinated is the comedy element built up. The earlier reels are all fashioned with this idea in view to such an extent that at times it seems amost like a burlesque on the conventional Western. There are some cleverly devised situations here and quite a lot of laughs and Harry Carey, particularly in a scene where he masquerades as a woman, reveals unsuspected comedy ability.

It is seeing the girl he loves in trouble that awakens the fighting spark in this easy-going cowboy and when he gets started the action is fast and furious enough to suit anyone, culminating in a smashing, even if familiar, punch scene where the villain in a fight falls over a cliff.

Harry Carey has a congenial role while dainty little Ethel Shannon scores as the girl, especially in the scenes where she dons a cowboy costume and poses as a bandit. Claude Payton makes a particularly convincing villain. Scott R. Dunlap has given the story good direction and the continuity is smoothly developed.

While this method of treatment may not appeal to some dyed-in-the-wool western fans, for the majority it has the element of novelty and with its effective comedy angle plus the usual fast action should provide good entertainment for the average patron.

"Daddy Goes A Grunting"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

While Glenn Tryon is the star of this Hal Roach two-reel comedy distributed by Pathe, little "Husky" Hanes, a clever baby about two years old, practically steals the picture. This is a domestic comedy of married life in which hubby, who is a chronic grouch, gets a lot more than he bargained for and learns a valuable lesson when wifey gets tired of his nagging and goes away, leaving him to take care of the baby. He scalds his feet in a tub of hot water, loses his clothes and wrapped only in a towel, falls down the dumbwaiter shaft and shocks the other tenants of the apartment house. Then he rushes out in this garb and climbs the fire escape to rescue baby who keeps dropping flower pots on his head and finally creates a regular bedlam of excitement when he believes he has been poisoned. Everybody gives him a different medicine and he, of course, finally does get sick. Amusing situations filled with good gags follow one another at break-neck speed, so that you are not over one smile or laugh before there is another. Never a let-up in the fun from start to finish. There is some slapstick, but it is mostly good gags and situations and should prove above the average as a laugh-getter with most fans.—C. S. S.

"Hot and Heavy"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Eddie Nelson has the lead in this Jack White-Mermaid Comedy directed by Stephen Roberts. His supporters are Otto Fries, Ford West, Phil Dunham and Estelle Bradley. Circumstances lead the hero to be engaged as bouncer in a noisy restaurant, superseding a very husky individual. He also acts as waiter for a party of the select on a slumming trip, and manages, through the use of familiar gags, to keep constantly in hot water. His troubles reach a climax with the return of the original bouncer, and then the real fun begins. Before this bouncer's return, which occurs near the end of the picture, the fun has been rather ordinary and forced. But when Bouncer No. 1 starts chasing Bouncer No. 2, audiences will be treated to a real spectacle. A chase across roofs culminates in the husky being trapped on a long pole stretched between two houses. This is rolled along the roofs until it drops, with the man still clinging to it, to smaller buildings and then to the top of an auto. It's a good stunt and it gives the picture a needed punch. There also are some scenes of very attractive kittens.—S. S.

In the newest of Universal's "Sweet Sixteen" comedies starring Arthur Lake, he is shown as trying to learn how to play the violin. His father keeps him busy by hammering on the floor whenever he stops. Dad goes out and a mischievous little boy comes in and keeps up the hammering, leading Arthur a merry chase. The kid gets a razor and cuts up everything in sight including the telephone wire when Arthur is talking to his sweetheart Marceline. Eddie the rival appears on the scene and finally the kid breaks the violin. Arthur is jubilant until his father appears with a new violin he has won at a raffle. There is not as much "pep" and it does not measure up to the majority of the series.—C. S. S.

"Sneezing Beezers"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

A burlesque on the romantic mythical kingdom type of dramas is this two-reel Mack Sennett offering directed by Del Lord. Billy Bevan is cast as a taxi driver who is engaged to carry the ex-king, now a lunch wagon owner, back to his country in which they kill off the kings every few days. Madeline Hurlock is the king's daughter, and John J. Richardson the chief villain. Bevan, finding the country too exciting, hides under a canvas and finds himself inside the gas bag of a balloon in which the king and his daughter have taken refuge with the jewels and money. He cuts his way out and the balloon falls. The villain follows in an aeroplane, all land in the snow country among the Eskimos and there is much skiing, etc. These two reels consist of a conglomeration of exceedingly fast-moving situations filled with typical Sennett comedy, a lot of it is novel and there are several situations that are not only amusing slapstick, but very cleverly handled as well. Well up to the Sennett standard, this comedy should prove thoroughly satisfactory for the average patron who likes rough and tumble, fast-moving comedy.—C. S. S.

"The Polo Kid"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Eddie Gordon is starred in this comedy and not only is it the best in which he has appeared but one of the most amusing that has been produced by Century in quite some time. The opening gives the impression that Eddie is a polo player but it develops that he is a street cleaner and what seemed to be his mallet is in reality a broom. There are a number of laughs in the scenes where Eddie, utterly oblivious to the presence of a horse crawls under it, in and out between its legs, in attempting to sweep up waste paper. After this episode the comedy follows familiar slapstick lines with Eddie getting in bad wth a big politican when he jabs his back in attempting to retrieve a piece of paper and knocking him into a lake rescues him with a harpoon. Eddie saves a girl's life and of course it develops she is the politician's daughter and there is considerable "rough-housing" before matters are straightened out. A novel finish shows Eddie being rewarded by the politician tearing up paper for Eddie to sweep up. Most audiences will find this quite an amusing offering.—C. S. S.

"Travel Treasures"

(Educational—Magazine—One Reel)

Lyman H. Howe Hodge-Podge No. 36 takes the spectator all over the earth in the form of a loose-leaf record. The photographs are represented as being on the leaves of an album and the art work, this time without any still-to-action effects, is generally effective. The photographic bits show the United States, England, France, Italy, Japan, China, Russia, Egypt and Australia. Two of the most interesting are those of a mammoth dredger in the Panama Canal and laborers in China.—S. S.

"A Battle of Wits"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

More than the usual amount of heart interest is injected into this Universal western starring Josie Sedgwick. Her brother is accused as a horse thief and hounded by the villain who uses this as a club to try and make Josie marry him. The real thief is captured and the villain severely whipped by the sheriff who is in love with Josie. Edmund Cobb appears as the hero. Miss Sedgwick has a chance to masquerade in boy's attire and indulge in strenuous Western stunts including some fine riding. It is up to the standard of the series and should prove a satisfactory attraction where Westerns are in favor—C. S. S.

"For Love of a Gal"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

A typical Paul Terry offering is this subject in which the familiar mouse in his flivver has his girl stolen from him by a rival in a big car. The girl is then kidnapped by a band of pirate cats. The mouse gets in a cannon and is "shot" aboard the boat and with his trusty sword kills the whole crew. Finally it is blown through the air and in falling keeps on going right through the Earth, landing in China. There are as usual amusing and clever imaginative and utterly impossible situations and it is up to this cartoonist's usual high standard as a merrymaker.—C. S. S.

"When Men Were Men"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Paul Terry has taken the caveman as his principal actor in this highly amusing Aesop's Film Fable. The caveman makes prehistoric monsters work for him and steals his bride in the approved fashion. The familiar cat is of course present. It is very funny and cleverly drawn.—S. S.

"Cyrano De Bergerac"

Rostand's Immortal Story of a Beautiful and Pathetic Love Offered in Fine Italian-made Film

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Edmund Rostand's beautiful love drama "Cyrano De Bergerac," a classic of literature and the stage, has reached the screen in a production made in Italy and offered in this country by Atlas Distributing Corporation.

There is probably no more touching story in all literature nor one with greater beauty of lines or delicacy and cleverness in its shafts of wit, and it has long been a favorite vehicle with the world's greatest actors in all civilized countries as a supreme test of their ability both because of the possibilities and the limitations of the role.

Frankly a whimsical story, a clever creation of the author's brain, it has as its hero a man who is pictured as one of the greatest swordsmen of his times who was also a poet, a wit and a philosopher and altogether a delightful character but who had one great handicap, a large mis-shapen nose that rendered his appearance grotesque. Like other men he loved, but because of this deformity refrained from declaring his love, and it is hard to conceive of a more pathetic situation than that which the author has devised wherein he takes the opportunity offered by the infatuation of a handsome but dull-witted young nobleman for the same girl. Through this man he poured out second-handed his tremendous love.

The original story has been faithfully followed and the unhappy ending preserved, for Cyrano, even after the young noble has discovered his great love and sacrificed his life, feels honor bound to keep silent through the years and only when he is old, poor and mortally wounded does he betray what has always been in his heart. But no other outcome would be in keeping with the whole spirit of the story.

Although it is a costume picture, laid in Paris in the seventeenth century its theme is one that is confined to no period or race in its deep tug at the heart strings and correspondingly even though the entire cast is composed of French and Italian players whose names mean nothing to the box-office, the magnificent performance of Pierre Magnier in the title role is one that any one who likes fine acting will enjoy. Despite the handicap of the exaggerated make-up so sincere and altogether superb is his work that he makes this whimsical character real and keeps you absorbed in his portrayal.

The entire film is photographed in color and apparently a hand-colored or stencil process was used, but aside from being out of the ordinary and resulting in a few scenes of real beauty, it adds litle to the attractiveness of the film and even at times is disconcerting when the color does not register with exactness.

Those who have seen the stage play or read the original story will naturally miss the absence of the voice and much of the beauty of the lines although some of the latter have been used as subtitled. While there are big battle sequences and mob scenes with thousands they are overshadowed by the story.

This is an ambitious undertaking and thoroughly creditable reults have been achieved. While it is a question as to whether it will be appreciated by the masses it should prove a delight to intelligent patrons.

Story

Cyrano, one of the greatest swordsmen in Paris in the seventeenth century was pretty much of a bully and everyone was in awe of him. Brave, a poet, wit and gentleman, he was of actually grotesque appearance because of a misshapen nose. His cousin Roxanne was the belle of Paris. Cyrano loved her but realizing his deformity hid his love. The opportunity came to pour out what was in his heart when a handsome nobleman, Christian, who was bashful and slow of wit sought to woo her. Cyrano taught him clever phrases and wrote his love letters for him and finally Christian married Roxanne. Christian and Cyrano were sent to the front during the war and Roxanne visited them. Christian learning of Cyrano's love urged him to confess it and allowed himself to be killed. Honor, however, sealed Cyrano's lips. Years later, Cyrano still as brilliant and clever as ever was reduced to poverty. Once a week he visited Roxanne. Finally although set upon by enemies and nearly killed by exercising supreme will power he managed to get to Roxanne. In reading out loud Christian's last letter, Roxanne realized that it was Cyrano's words and pretty phrases that had won her love. Cyrano, feeling the approach of death struggled to his feet and with sword in hand and wit on his lip fought the grim reaper until he finally succumbed to his wound.

Fox Announces Release Dates on First Fifteen 1925-26 Supreme Attractions

PARDONABLE pride is evident in the announcement by Fox Film Corporation of the exact release dates for its "supreme attractions" to be distributed to exhibitors during the first four months of the 1925-26 season.

Totaling fifteen, the releases for August, September, October and November will stand comparison with any lineup of pictures in the history of the industry for entertainment value and box-office promise, Fox insists.

Starting on August 23 with "Lightnin'" a John Ford production based on John Golden's record-breaking stage play, these fifteen attractions seem to exclude the possibility of duplication in anything that goes to make success.

Following "Lightnin'" is a Tom Mix starring vehicle, "The Lucky Horseshoe," which Tom is now making for release on August 30. This is Tom's first picture following his sensational tour of Europe and the United States. It is from an original story written by Robert Lord, and like all Mix pictures for the coming season it has an exceptional cast of screen luminaries in the supporting roles.

Billie Dove has the leading feminine role in "The Lucky Horshoe" while an unusual novelty is the appearance in the cast of Ann Pennington of Follies and dimpled knee fame. Others are J. Farrell MacDonald, Malcolm Waite, Clarissa Selwynne and J. Gunnis Davis.

"Kentucky Pride," a romance of the race track and the Blue Grass country, is the third Fox release, with September 6 as the date set. This is another John Ford production. In addition to a great cast of human actors, it brings to the screen in their first dramatic picture such equine heroes as Man O' War, Negofol, Morvich, Fair Play, The Finn and the brood mares of these great stallions and their offspring. J. Farrell MacDonald, Henry B. Walthall and Gertrude Astor have the leading roles.

"As No Man Has Loved," the screen version of the literary classic, "The Man Without a Country," by Edward Everett Hale, which was directed by Rowland V. Lee and had a Broadway run, is the Fox release on September 13. This production has been nationally advertised and has been endorsed by almost every veterans' organization in the country.

"The Wheel," another of the John Golden Unit of Clean American Productions, follows the Lee masterpiece on the release schedule. Victor Schertzinger directed "The Wheel" with a cast of unqustioned merit, including Harrison Ford, Claire Adams, Mahlon Hamilton, George Harris, Clara Horton and Margaret Livingston and David Terrence. The release date is September 20.

A Buck Jones starring vehicle, either "Timber Wolf" or "Durand of the Bad Lands," will share September 20 with "The Wheel."

The concluding September release, on the 27th, month is "Havoc," another Rowland V. Lee production. It is based on the international stage success of the same name and was adapted to screen form by Edmund Goulding, who made an extensive tour of the battlefields of France in order to assure realism in the battle scenes.

"Havoc" is a story of trench life and high London society in the stress of wartime. George O'Brien, Madge Bellamy, Margaret Livingston, Walter McGrail and Leslie Fenton have the leading roles.

After many successful pre-release runs which have caused it to be anxiously awaited, "The Iron Horse" will be released for first runs on October 4. Exhibitors are thoroughly familiar with this production and nothing further need be said at this time.

On October 11, Fox will release two productions which deserve more than passing attention. The first is "Thunder Mountain," from the Golden play, "Howdy Folks." This is being directed at the Fox West Coast Studios by Victor Schertzinger, with Leslie Fenton, who has recently been awarded a long term contract with Fox, in a prominent part. Alec Francis is playing a mountain minister.

The other release on this date is a Tom Mix picture, as yet untitled, which will be directed by Emmett Flynn.

John Griffith Wray's first picture for Fox will be released on October 18. It is titled "The Winding Stair," from the successful novel of the same name by A. E. W. Mason.

Another Golden, "Thank You," also directed by John Ford, is scheduled for release on October 25. George O'Brien has the leading role in this production, which marks the debut of Jacqueline Logan in Fox pictures. Alec Francis plays the role of the impoverished minister. An all star cast supports the principals.

"Smiling" George O'Brien's first starring vehicle for the coming season, "The Fighting Heart," is the November 1 release. This is based on Larry Evans' story, "Once to Every Man," and Billie Dove supports the star. This is still another Ford production.

A distinct novelty will be offered exhibitors by Fox on November 8, the date set for the release of the screen version of Owen Davis' stage play, "Lazybones." In this production, Charles (Buck) Jones, Fox Western star, enacts the title role.

Incidentally, "Lazybones" is Frank Borzage's first production under the Fox banner. The cast includes Madge Bellamy, Leslie Fenton, Jane Novak and Zasu Pitts.

The screen version of Channing Pollock's play, "The Fool," which was directed by Harry Millarde, is the last of the early season releases, with November 15 as the date set for distribution. This production is another that scored tremendously during pre-release runs on Broadway and elsewhere.

To Direct "Dance Madness"

Harry Rapf, associate studio executive at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, has just announced the signing of Irving Cummings to direct "Dance Madness," an orginal story by S. Jay Kaufman and Max Marcin.

Howard Greer (left), creator of Paramount fashions, takes the foot measurement of Patsy Gribble, one of the twelve shoe models who appear as one of the features of "The Trouble With Wives," which Malcolm St. Clair directed for Paramount with Florence Vidor, Tom Moore, Esther Ralston and Ford Sterling in the featured roles. Ford Sterling (right) searches for the Cinderella foot among the Models, who, reading left to right are: Maracaline Ferrar, Margaret Francisco, Marcella Arthur, Opal Evans, Billie Wilding, La Verne Lindsay, Nita Cavalier, Thelma Barron, Barbara Clayton, Viola Marvelle, Patsy Gribble and Ludmila Daiger.

Corinne Griffith, Kenneth Harlan, Nita Naldi and Edgar Norton in "The Marriage Whirl," a First National picture.

Richard A. Rowland Gives Two "Unknowns" a Chance

IN accord with his recently announced plan to encourage obscure talent, Richard A. Rowland, General Manager of First National Pictures, has picked two unknowns for the cast of the new Milton Sills starring picture, "The Knockout," which is now in production in the Canadian logging camps at Beauchene, Canada, about 150 miles north of Ottawa.

They are Lorna Duveen, formerly an extra and now Milton Sills' leading woman in "The Knockout," and John Philip Kolb, one-time electrician and cable-hoister, who was snatched from the wheel of a truck to assume the role of "Black Jack" Ducane, one of the most prominent roles in this picture.

Lorna Duveen's meteoric rise overnight from extra to leading woman is another astonishing shift of fate. After bits in two comedies which never were released, Miss Duveen came to First National Studios as an extra in "The Necessary Evil." Later she was cast in Milton Sills' first starring picture, "The Making of O'Malley"—merely as a "walk on."

But she attracted notice in both appearances. When the search started for a leading woman for Sills' next vehicle, Richard Rowland and Earl Hudson, after a preliminary test, decided to give Miss Duveen a chance.

John Philip Kolb was driving a truck when Rowland discovered him. Kolb's advent in pictures reads like a fairy tale. Discharged from the Biograph Studios, where he was employed as electrician, because he was continually loitering to watch the actors, Kolb secured a job hoisting cables with the New York Edison Company. Just when the casting directors had despaired of finding the type the script called for in "The Knockout," that of a young Titan, Rowland happened on the six-feet-seven giant by the merest chance, and tendered him one of the most important roles.

No Appointments Now

There has been much speculation in the business end of the industry as to whom E. A. Eschmann of First National would appoint to fill the district managership vacancies in his field force. Information now comes from Mr. Eschmann that he will not make these appointments until the fall. In the meantime he will leave the business matters that customarily devolve upon the district manager, on the shouders of the branch managers in the districts where there are vacancies, giving their acumen and administrative ability full play.

Shows Dare Devil Riders

United States Cavalrymen are the most amazing dare-devil riders in the world, better even than the famous Italians and Boudoin horsemen it is proved in International Newsreel No. 52 in which are shown exclusive pictures of U. S. Cavalrymen in their new and thrilling stunt riding.

After years of training, culminating in world's supremacy Uncle Sam's riders have, for the first time, afforder the public an opportunity of witnessing their amazing exploits.

Humes Starts First Picture

Freddie Humes, famous star of many a rodeo and holder of several titles in such events as the Pendleton Roundup, Salinas Rodeos and western classics, has started his first picture as a full fledged Western star for Universal. Humes is one of the Universal Ranch Riders whose consistent work was rewarded with stardom following the recent visit to Universal City of Carl Laemmle.

Humes' first picture is a Mustang Production, "Taking Chances," which William Crinley will direct with Nancy Deaver, leading woman in "The Circus Cyclone," recently made, in the principal feminine role. His second picture will be "Buckin' Through" with the same leading woman and same director.

If Not Baseball What Is It?

There is a good deal of real, but unintentional comedy going on at a ball lot near New Brunswick, N. J., where Glenn Hunter and his team of motion picture actors are trying to play baseball as part of "The Pinch Hitter." Glen tried for five hours last week to smash out a home run, and Antrim Short, fielder and captain of the celluloid nine of which Hunter turns out to be the star, has let so many balls bound away from him that Joseph Henabery is going to provide him with a net. Soon after Hunter hits his home run and Short learns how to field, the picture will be released by Associated Exhibitors.

Whaling Expedition for Warner-Barrymore Film

WARNER BROS. have decided to make the biggest production in their history out of "The Sea Beast," the whaling story, announced last week as the forthcoming John Barrymore picture for the company. The cast is being assembled, two ships have been chartered and as soon as arrangements are completed several hundred persons will sail out of Los Angeles harbor bound for the coast of Java, where they will pursue the sportive whale in an effort to obtain several of the big thrills of the picture.

Mr. Barrymore's role in the forthcoming production will be that of a harpooner of an old time whaling ship, and the Warners promise a sensational sea epic dealing with the pioneers of the whaling industry.

Bess Meredyth, who has written the scenario, has provided a tremendous drama with thrilling climaxes and the story will give Barrymore a vehicle different from anything ever attempted by him.

Priscilla Bonner has been selected as the star's leading woman and will accompany the expedition to Java for about as exciting an adventure as she ever will have in her career.

From Java the expedition will cover several points on the other side of the world, finally joining the whaling fleet off the coast of Africa, where most of the sea mammoths are obtained in these days.

The expedition will go out fully equipped for a cruise of several months, and will take along a complete laboratory so that the film can be developed as soon as shot and the daily rushes viewed the same as at the studio.

Director Millard Webb has been busy during the last week assembling his cast, which will number among its personnel several old time tarry travelers of the tearing tide summoned from New Bedford, the home of the whaling industry, who will keep the company straight on technical matters.

Chicago Likes "The Lost World"

Originally booked for a four weeks' run at the Roosevelt, Chicago, the First National-Rothacker special, "The Lost World," which Earl Hudson supervised, has been held over for a fifth week, as a result of the great business it has been doing there.

The attendance during the fourth week kept at such a large figure that it was evident it would attract big business for a longer period and arrangements for holding it over were made by Balaban and Katz.

"The Lost World" will soon begin its extended engagement at Grauman's Million Dollar in Los Angeles.

Sol Lesser to Release on United Artists Program

HAROLD BELL WRIGHT'S greatest novel, "The Winning of Barbara Worth," which Sol Lesser will produce, is to be released by United Artists Corporation, it was announced yesterday by Hiram Abrams, president of the distributing organization.

This ends a contest in which every big distributing concern took part, the explanation of which is the fact that "The Winning of Barbara Worth" has been the biggest seller of any American novel ever written. Its sales have passed well beyond the 2,000,000 mark.

Lesser expects to start production around the 1st of August. The actual locations, as described in Wright's book, will be used as the setting. This means that the magically fertile Imperial Valley in California, and the sun-blazed expanses of Arizona, will be seen on the screen just as Wright envisioned his romance in traversing them.

To produce "The Winning of Barbara Worth" on a scale which will do justice to the American reading public's best-loved novel, Lesser estimates the production cost as at least $500,000.

Money will not be spared, and the filming will have the further advantage of the personal guidance of the author. This Western romance is Wright's favorite, of all his novels, and for this reason, he has agreed to work with Lesser in preparing it for the screen.

The alliance with United Artists Corporation was announced by President Abrams with much elation. Abrams said:

"It is a real coup for the United Artists Corporation to win Mr. Lesser's agreement to the release of the film version of "The Winning of Barbara Worth." It is a picture which the public has been wanting to see on the screen for years. The association with a writer of Mr. Wright's great popularity and a producer of Mr. Lesser's calibre is in keeping with our aim to offer the greatest in film plays."

In confirming Abrams' announcement, Mr. Lesser admitted that he had been besieged by every big distributing concern for the releasing rights.

"In finally determining on the United Artists Corporation," said Lesser, "I was actuated by my friendship for Hiram Abrams, its president; Joseph M. Schenck and the distinguished artists who contribute to the organization's program."

Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the directorate of United Artists Corporation, took occasion to extend his personal praise of Lesser.

"I have known Sol Lesser since his rise from exhibitor to producer," he said, "and I am confident that he will give 'The Winning of Barbara Worth' as great a success in its film form as it has won as a work of fiction."

Pathe Gets "Heir-Loons;" Made by Spitzer and Jones

"Heir-Loons," a feature-length comedy drama now being produced with an all-star cast by Spitzer-Jones Production at the F. B. O. Studios in California, will be released by Pathe Exchange, Inc., according to an announcement made this week.

Nat H. Spitzer and Grover Jones, executive heads of the Spitzer-Jones Productions, are both well known in cinema circles. With the exception of the past few years, which he has devoted to other interests, Spitzer has been connected with the motion-picture industry in various capacities since its earliest days. Jones is widely recognized as a scenarist as well as a director of marked ability. He is handling the megaphone on the firm's productions.

The producers state that "Heir-Loons" will be full of rapid-fire action. Thrills of the story include a raging flood, a broken dam, a fight for life in a helpless balloon, an explosion which wrecks a bakery shop and a comedy railroad wreck. There is also a well developed love theme and a thread of sentimental beauty.

"Heir-Loons" is a comedy drama of the society type. The Brockton family, its central characters, are pseudo aristocrats living on the memories of past glories. They are described as the sort "who monopolizes the Mayflower."

The cast is an all-star one. Wallace MacDonald is cast as George Brockton, the only one of the family who works for a living. Other members of the Brockton clan are portrayed by Stuart Holmes, Snitz Edwards, Frank Campeau, Martha Mattox, and Emily Gerdes. Edith Roberts plays Mary Dale, the adopted daughter of the Brocktons. Cecile Evans is cast as Marjie Trenton, the small town vamp. Others who have promient roles are Sam De. Grasse, Ralph Lewis and Max Asher.

The verdict of the exhibitors and others who saw it was that if the thirty-nine others of the Warner Forty keep up the pace set in this one, the Warners are certain of a banner year. Already contracts have been made for most of the foreign markets, though the official release is still several weeks in advance.

"How Baxter Butted In" Wins Praise from the Newspapers

"HOW BAXTER BUTTED IN," the latest Warner release starring Matt Moore and Dorothy Devore, is off to a fine start, newspaper reviewers in Chicago and New York, where the special has just had runs, giving it high praise.

Under the heading, "Need A Laugh? Then Be Sure to See This," the Chicago Tribune critic, wrote in that paper:

"The Baxter picture is a PIPPIN! I laughed like a fool through it, and so did everybody else in a crowded house. Matt Moore is, without question, taking his place in the comedy sun. His dreams as the absentminded youth are wows, and guaranteed to hand you the sort of laughs progressive M.D.'s declare are better than medicine. This picture is a peach. A pippin, did I say before? Well, let's do a Luther Burbank and make it a cross!"

Said reviewer of the New York Evening Journal: "A corking good comedy! There's lots of enjoyable nonsense in the film, and is very well acted. You'll like the picture. You may even find it inspiring."

The Morning Telegraph Critic said: "The picture is an appealing mixture of pathos and humor and gives Matt Moore ample opportunity for the sort of thing he does best. Dorothy Devore is well cast and plays with a great deal of sparkle."

The Daily News: "Some new jokes, mighty good sub-titles, the pleasing Matt Moore, the vivacious Dorothy Devore, an entertaining plot. Pretty fair average, isn't it? Matt Moore fits snugly into his role."

The exclusive California Yacht Club on Los Angeles harbor, the home of some of the most expensive pleasure craft in the world, appears in "Keep Smiling," Monty Banks' new feature comedy-drama for Associated Exhibitors.

For more than a week the Banks company took complete possession of the club and its attaches. Yachtmen stood by and watched while Banks enacted some of the marine sequences which go to make up the delightfully amusing story.

As a background for many of the scenes, expensive yachts of California millionaires swung at anchor. Yachts belonging to E. L. Doheny, the oil magnate; Hal Roach, Mack Sennett and the Christie Brothers, comedy producers; Cliff Durant, automobile builder and racing driver; Tom Mix, screen star; the late Thomas H. Ince, Cecil B. DeMille and many others appear in the film.

The Ince yacht was chartered by Banks and used for many scenes. Interiors of the luxurious cabins and views of the decks are interspersed through the picture.

Banks is supporting in this Associated Exhibitors' picture by a strong cast including Anne Cornwall, petite leading woman and Wampas baby star, Robert Edeson, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Naldo Morelli and others.

John Ford, who directed the first of the Golden unit to be finished, the record breaking "Lightin'," wielded the megaphone for the filming of "Thank You." According to the West Coast reports, he maintains the high standards of his previous directorial efforts in making the Golden stage success.

An excellent cast headed by George O'Brien, Jacqueline Logan and Alec Francis made Director Ford's task, as far as acting was concerned, an easy one. The other members of the cast are: J. Farrell MacDonald, Cyril Chadwick, Edith Bostwick, Vivian Ogden, James Neill, Billy Rinaldi, Maurice Murphy, Ida Moore, Robert Milasch, Lillian Lawrence, Frankie Bailey, William Courtright, Mark Fenton, Richard Cummings, Jack Ganzhorn, Francis Power., Marion Harlan, George Fawcett and Aileen Manning.

Directors Assigned to Three Warner Pictures

AS work proceeds steadily on the preparation of the Warner Forty, forming the 1925-26 release schedule, and with several production units constantly at work, information comes from the studios almost daily respecting the selection of players and directors for pictures on which work is soon to start.

Announcement was made this week of the assignment of Roy del Ruth to direct "Hogan's Alley," a Gregory Rogers story. Darryl Francis Zanuck has finished the scenario, and the following have been selected for the cast: Kenneth Harlan, Patsy Ruth Miller, Louise Fazenda, Willard Louis, Eddie Gribbon, Francis Bond, Max Davidson, the "Texas Kid," Charles Conklin and Nigel Barrie.

Alan Crosland will direct Jay Gelzer's "Compromise," whose cast includes, to date, Irene Rich, Louise Fazenda and Clive Brook. E. T. Lowe, Jr., in preparing the scenario, has the co-operation and assistance of the author.

"The White Chief," by Gregory Rogers, has been selected as Monte Blue's next starring vehicle. The scenario is by Will Lambert and Erle Kenton will direct.

Lucille Ward has been added to the cast of Harry Leon Wilson's "His Majesty, Bunker Bean," the production of which is under way, with Harry Beaumont directing. She has been assigned the role of the nurse.

Fox Supreme Attractions in Keith's Cleveland Theatre

A TRIBUTE was paid to Fox Film Corporation by E. F. Albee and J. J. Murdock, executives of the Keith-Albee Circuit of Theatres, when they booked eight Fox Supreme Attractions with which to inaugurate their new policy of presenting a bill divided between pictures and vaudeville at their monumental Palace Theatre in Cleveland.

That these men, recognized as the master showmen of the American theatrical world, should select the Fox releases exclusively for eight successive weeks, is regarded as unqualified recognition of the worth of the Fox Supreme Attractions for the forthcoming season.

Recently the Keith executives annouced that they intended to change the policy of their Cleveland house from straight vaudeville to bills divided between pictures and variety, and that they were in the market for the best pictures avaiable.

Three of the productions booked by the Keith executives have already proven their box office values. These are "The Iron Horse," the John Ford production which ran a year in New York, four record-breaking months at Grauman's Egyptian Theatre in Hollywood, one month at the Princess Theatre in Montreal and was hailed by Chicago critics as the greatest production ever made; "As No Man Has Loved," Rowland V. Lee's adaptation of the story classic, "The Man Without a Country," and Harry Millarde's screen version of Channing Pollock's drama, "The Fool." The last two pictures had successful runs at the Central Theatre on Broadway.

The other five productions include three of the John Golden Unit of Clean American Productions which Fox is releasing for 1925-26, The three Goldens are "Lightnin,'" from the record-breaking stage play of the same name, "Thank You" and "The Wheel." "Havoc" and "East Lynne" round out this sensational initial booking. They are both adaptations of international stage successes.

To Shine Again

Florence Turner, the first star of the silver sheet, is returning to films. Her comeback will be made at Roma in George Fitzmaurice's production of "The Dark Angel."

Miss Turner's return will be welcomed and eagerly watched by her countless admirers, who will remember her from the old Biograph days.

Besides Florence Turner, Director George Fitzmaurice has assembled a noteworthy cast for this feature production, with Ronald Colman, Vilma Banky, the beautiful Hungarian miss recently discovered and brought to America by Samuel Goldwyn; Wyndham Standing and Frank Elliot.

"The Dark Angel" is scheduled for release in early fall by First National Pictures.

Three in One

Three famous authors, in three distinct lines of writing, have had a hand in making the finished product of "Seven Days," Al Christie's latest laughing feature which has just been completed for early release through Producers Distributing Corporation.

First, the plot was written in book form by Mary Roberts Rinehart under the title "When a Man Marries." Next, Avery Hopwood together with Mary Roberts Rinehart, wrote the stage farce version which was called "Seven Days," and then Frank Roland Conklin, famous screen scenario writer, took the work of the Rinehart-Hopwood combination and turned the piece into its film version which is said to be the funniest feature yet produced on the Christie lot.

Warner Brothers Announce Casts of New Productions

WARNER BROS. this week announces the full cast of "The Clash of the Wolves," now in production. The famous dog actor, Rin-Tin-Tin, has the role of Lobo, leader of the wolves, while June Marlowe has the leading woman's part and the cast further includes Charles Farrell, Charles Conklin, Will Walling and Bob Thurston. The story and scenario are by Charles Logue and Noel Smith is directing.

Matt Moore and Dorothy Devore are the principals in "His Majesty Bunker Bean," with George Nichols, Henry Barrowes, Dave Butler, Helen Dunbar, Norah Cecil, Frank Leigh, Charles Farrell and Gertrude Clair in their support. The picture is an adaptation of Harry Leon Wilson's famous novel and play, with scenario by Julien Josephson. Harry Beaumont is the director.

Much is promised in Monte Blue's "Red Hot Tires." Patsy Ruth Miller is the woman lead and in the cast also are Frederic Esmelton, Lincoln Stedman, Tom McGuire, William Lowery, Jimmy Quinn and Malcolm Waite. The story and adaptation are by Gregory Rogers and Erle Kenton is directing.

The full cast in support of Lowell Sherman in "Satan in Sables," his first picture for Warner Bros., includes Pauline Garon, John Harron, Gertrude Astor, Frank Butler, Otto Hoffman, Frances Raymond, Francis J. McDonald, Richard Botsford, Richard Barry and Don Alvarado. James Flood is directing this production, the story and scenario of which are by Bradley King.

In "Ranger of the Big Pines" are Kenneth Harlan, Helene Costello, Eulalie Jensen, Will Walling, Lew Harvey, Robert J. Graves, Eugene Paulette, Harvey Clark and Joan Standing. Hope Loring and Louis Lighton wrote the scenario from Hamlin Garland's story, "Cavanaugh, Forest Ranger." W. Van Dyke handled the megaphone.

Another announcement from the Warners says that Monte Blue, instead of Kenneth Harlan, will play the leading man's role in "Hogan's Alley," and that after finishing this production Blue will star in "The White Chief," for which Will Lambert is now writing the scenario. This will be Erle Kenton's first production for the Warners, this director having recently been signed to a long-term contract.

"Lost World" Has Brilliant Opening in Los Angeles

THE Los Angeles opening of the First National-Rothacker special, "The Lost World," produced under the supervision of Earl Hudson, took place on June 18th, at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre and was a most brilliant affair. Half of the seats in the house at the first showing were reserved for motion picture stars and the line-up of patrons eager to see the picture was so great that a special squadron of police was called out to reserve order and keep the streets free for vehicular traffic. "The Lost World" at once became the talk of the town. It was preceded by a comprehensive and thorough campaign and the reviews were of an unusually enthusiastic character.

Florence Lawrence, critic of the Los Angeles Examiner, wrote: "Cinema celebrities paid homage last night to initiative and ingenuity. In attending en masse the opening of 'The Lost World,' the notables of screenland gave their tribute to mechanical art and science, and to something quite new in the making of photoplays. No famed beauty or idol of the fans has ever received greater attention than that bestowed by wondering and amazed crowds as the parade of prehistoric animals marched across the screen. No impassioned love story or domestic complications has ever intrigued an audience more keenly than did this strange tale. Tremendous crowds assembled outside the theatre, where a whole platoon of policemen kept order."

On the same page of the Examiner was a signed review by Gregory Coss. He wrote: "'The Lost World' is a brontosaurus of a picture, and First National's production is pterodactyl. Formerly it might have been described in terms of 'whale' and 'bird,' but the picture at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre brings a new basis of comparison. The scene following the eruption of the volcano, where hundreds of these huge creatures are hemmed in a narrow valley, is so awe-inspiring as to deceive the very elect. Everyone connected with 'The Lost World' is entitled to the highest praise for putting out a novelty on so gigantic a scale." On the same page was a signed article by Cholly Angeleno on "The Notables Who Were Present."

Edwin Schallert in the Los Angeles Daily Times, wrote: "The season for new faces on the screen has at last reached its summit. In 'The Lost World' there must be nearly a hundred who have seldom before been seen in the films, but that doesn't make their debut any the less thrilling. 'The Lost World' has been one of the most widely heralded of the screen's features, and it is one of the most amazing that has ever been shown. Probably more than any other picture that has ever been made. 'The Lost World' discloses the cleverest film technical devices and the magic of the camera. It is far and away the most adventurous feature that I have ever seen. There are many splendid effects, a dinosaur running wild in the London streets is just about as exciting as anything that has happened in a long time." Mr. Schallert then goes on to give fine praise to all of the leading players in the cast.

Kenneth Taylor in the Los Angeles Record: "To the eye of the camera all things are possible. Thus 'The Lost World' shows huge monsters of millions of years ago moving about so naturally that the picture might well be called 'Haunts and Habits of the Brontosaurus.' It is little short of marvellous what has been done with these prehistoric monsters. A compelling example of good workmanship, 'The Lost World' is a novelty that you won't want to miss. The picture boasts a cast that will be difficult to improve upon,

Orlando Northcutt in the Los Angeles Evening Express: "An exceptional fantasy. Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's story becomes doubly interesting in celluloid. 'The Lost World' has thrilling dramatic action in abundance and clever moments of comedy. Too much praise cannot be given to Harry C. Hoyt, director, and Willis O'Brien, who invented the creatures which appear so lifelike on the screen."

Los Angeles Illustrated Daily News: "'The Lost World' is a remarkable photoplay. Of course, the tricks of the camera have been resorted to, to make the picture, but these tricks defy detection and so marvelously are the animals constructed that to all appearances they are alive. In fact, so well is the picture done, it is only by an effort of the mind that one realizes the animals are artificial."

Fox Preparing to Meet Great Demand for "Shorts"

ONE of the first of the big production companies to hop to it and act on the realization that short subject films are going to play a far more important part on theatre programs than hitherto, was Fox Film Corporation and the farsighted officials of this company deserve a heap of praise for the manner in which they went about building up and strengthening their various short subject units.

In an open literary market the Fox Company acquired the very cream of potential short material in the form of the entire works of O. Henry, America's greatest short story writer, and Mabel Herbert Urner's delectable tales on "The Married Life of Helen and Warren," which have been running in serial form in over five hundred of the biggest newspapers in the country for fifteen years.

The picturization of sixteen carefully selected stories from the works of the above mentioned writers will supplement a new series of Van Bibber Comedies from the stories by Richard Harding Davis, twenty Imperial Comedies of the very highest standard, twenty-six Fox Varieties, and one hundred and four issues of Fox News, which make up the short subject novelty chest Fox will offer to exhibitors during the 1925-26 season.

This gives the Fox Company as imposing a list of short subjects as ever has been announced and one which any number of exhibitors have already booked 100 per cent.

In addition to acquiring the very best material with which to make its short reel films the Fox Company has created a new short subject production unit which will function under the supervision of George E. Marshall, master of the art of packing entertainment value into two-reelers, as is proven by the current Van Bibber releases which were made under his direction.

The Marshall unit will be divided into four companies. One will continue making the Van Bibber successes under the direction of Robert Kerr, another under the direction of J. G. Blystone will adapt to the screen the Urner Stories, a third will make the Imperial Comedies, with such directors as Lew Seiler, Ben Stoloff, Bryan Foy, while the other, under the direction of Daniel Keefe, will bring to the screen the incomparable humor and pathos of the great master O. Henry.

While assuring perfection in its two-reel releases the Fox Company did not overlook its one-reel production units, namely, Fox Varieties and Fox News, and both these branches of the organization have been immeasurably strengthened.

Under a new production head every preparation has been made to assure that the twenty-six Fox Varieties to be released during the coming season will be program gems worthy of the highest class theatres and indispensable to the average motion picture house. Ray Hall is the new director of the Varieties unit and his long experience in the short subject field at the head of the list as regarding judgment of what is one-reel entertainment material.

Truman Talley is continued as director-in-chief of Fox News with an editorial staff that time has proven its worth in all sorts of emergencies and which is responsible for beats on some of the most important events and happenings of the past year.

Additions to the camera staff of Fox Varieties and Fox News have given these units protection at every stragetic point in the world, the near and the far being covered with the same thoroughness.

At the present time Mr. Hall has five expeditions penetrating hitherto unexplored regions in search of the unique and unusual for Varieties short subjects. Those travelers are under the guidance of some of the best known researchers and explorers and the celluloid records of their discoveries are expected to cause world-wide comment, comparable with that caused by the late Lord Carnarvon.

Another boon to the exhibitors in connection with the Fox short subject films is the simplified release schedule that has been devised. By this arrangement all short subjects are released at regular intervals thereby avoiding confusion and allowing exhibitors to put their hands on forthcoming releases without waste of time or undue research.

Gilbert to Play in "La Boheme"

John Gilbert has been chosen to play opposite Lillian Gish in "La Boheme," which King Vidor is to direct for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer from the classic story by Henri Murger, adapted to the screen by Mme. Fred Degresac. Gilbert will, accordingly, play the role of Rudolph, one of the four Bohemians about whom the story centers and lover of the frail heroine, Mimi.

Flora Le Breton as Victorine Bicket in "The White Monkey," a Sawyer-Lubin production directed by Phil Rosen, adapted from the novel by John Galsworthy, with Barbara La Marr, Charles Emmett Mack, Thomas Holding, Henry Victor, George Marion, Tammany Young, Colin Campbell. Adapted by Arthur Hoerl. A First National Picture

Edna Marion Steps Up

Century Comedy Star to Have Role in "The Still Alarm"

Edna Marian, who has been featured for the past year in Century Comedies, is to make her bow in feature productions. She has been signed to play the second feminine lead in "The Still Alarm," the famous old stage melodrama which Edward Laemmle is directing for Universal.

Miss Marian has had a phenomenal success in pictures since her start on the screen, a litlte more than a year ago. Officials of Century Comedies were so impressed with her work in her first picture that she was given a long-term contract to star in two-reel comedies. She was loaned to Universal for "The Still Alarm."

Helene Chadwick and William Russell are playing the featured roles in the picture.

Miss Marian's work in "The Still Alarm" is not expected to interfere with her work in Century Comedies. She is slated to make twelve two-reelers for the coming season. Several of them already are completed and in the exchanges. Others remain to be filmed.

Florence Vidor, Matt Moore and Louise Fazenda in scenes in "Grounds for Divorce," a Paramount June release in which Harry Meyers also is seen.

"The Beautiful City"

Kenneth Webb Will Direct Richard Barthelmess in an Edmund Goulding Story

Richard Barthelmess in "The Beautiful City," an Inspiration Pictures production for First National release, will be directed by Kenneth Webb, according to an announcement just received. Elmer Clifton had been engaged to direct the picture, but he asked to be relieved in order to devote his entire time to the cutting of several motion pictures filmed upon his recent tour of the Orient.

Mr. Webb, a graduate of Columbia, has directed for Vitagraph, Famous Players, Realart, William Fox, Whitman Bennett and other producers and more recently with the historical productions of "The Chronicles of America" by Yale University.

"The Beautiful City" is based upon an original story by Edmund Goulding and is a drama of the East Side of New York City. Mr. Barthelmess will play a young Italian boy, Tony Gilardi, a distinct departure for this versatile young star.

Gloria Swanson Coming East

Having finished her latest production, "The Coast of Folly," which required several weeks of arduous work, Gloria Swanson is spending her time more leisurely at her Beverly Hills home.

Much of her "vacation" between pictures is being devoted to her business affairs which had been neglected while her latest production was in the making.

Miss Swanson plans to remain in Los Angeles for about two weeks before returning to New York.

"The Coast of Folly," which she has just completed, was directed by Allan Dwan for Paramount. Dwan is in New York with members of his staff, cutting and editing the new production at the Paramount Long Island studio.

Wyndham Standing Engaged

Wyndham Standing has been engaged to portray the debonair role of Gerald Shannon, in the forthcoming George Fitzmaurice production of the famous stage play, "The Dark Angel," to be sponsored by Samuel Goldwyn. Ronald Colman is to play the leading male role, Hilary Trent, another English officer.

Vilma Banky, the Budapest discovery recently brought from Europe by Samuel Goldwyn, will make her American debut as Kitty Vane, opposite Colman.

Added to "Parisian Love"

Hazel Keener, Wampas baby star and Los Angeles beauty contest winner, has been added to the cast of "Parisian Love," a B. P. Schulberg Production now being filmed under the direction of Gasnier. Also signed for a principal role is Lillian Leighton, popular character actress who is scoring a hit in "Beggar on Horseback." Other players taking prominent parts are Clara Bow, Donald Keith, Lou Tellegen, Alyce Mills and James Gordon Russell.

Mae Murray's Next

Harry Rapf, associate production executive at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, announces that Mae Murray's next picture will be "The Masked Bride," by Leon Abrams, and that Josef von Sternberg has been chosen to direct the production. So excellent a vehicle for Miss Murray is "The Masked Bride" that star and director and studio officials are equally enthusiastic over the announcement.

Douglas Fairbanks as "Don Q, Son of Zorro," the United Artists' success.

"The Last Frontier"

Stromberg Completing Production Planned by the Late Thomas H. Ince

Hunt Stromberg dispatcched three cameramen to Prescott, Arizona, recently, to film the great ceremonial of the Hopi Indians gathered there from all parts of the West.

Stromberg detailed the cameramen that they might obtain pictures of the ceremonial in all its phases for inclusion in "The Last Frontier," the special production that he is soon to make for Producers Distributing Corporation. The Hopi ceremonial is considered the most remarkable and picturesque of all Indian rites, and is held but once a year.

Thos. H. Ince, who originally planned "The Last Frontier," had intended to film the scenes which Stromberg secured and which will form an incident in the picture which Stromberg is completing as a testimonial to the famous producer.

Mildred Ryan Chosen

C. C. Burr has selected Mildred Ryan, blonde, seventeen-year-old girl, to play the leading woman's role with Johnny Hines in his first production for release by First National Pictures, "The Live Wire," from Richard Washburn Child's story, "The Game of Light." Mr. Burr, who is ever on the lookout for promising screen material, saw Miss Ryan play a small role in "Java Head" and was so struck by her talent that he kept her in mind. She had a personality that got across on the screen. She has recently played in "The Little French Girl," in "Zaza," "The Wild, Wild Girl" and has just completed a part in Booth Tarkington's original screen story for Thomas Meighan, "The Man Who Found Himself."

Schulberg Signs Star

Marguerite De La Motte will play the feminine lead in Gertie D. Wenthworth-James' novel, "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work," for B. P. Schulberg, the producer has announced. She will be co-featured with Lionel Barrymore who left New York last week for Hollywood where the picture is being filmed. This will be Marcel De Sano's initial production under his new contract with Schulberg. The supporting cast includes Henry B. Walthall, Lilyan Tashman and Forrest Stanley.

Boyd Assigned

Dashing Young Leading Man Has Role in Cecil B. DeMille's New Picture

Cecil B. De Mille has granted William Boyd the opportunity to follow in the footsteps of the cinema immortals by giving him a featured part in the first De Mille-directed independent production, "The Road to Yesterday," work on which starts within a few days.

Boyd, a strapping six-footer, typically American in appearance, will play opposite Vera Reynolds in this picture, adapted by Jeanie Macpherson and Beulah Marie Dix from the stage success. A few months ago he was getting only small parts, but De Mille saw his ability and realized how well he would fit in with the theatre-going public's idea of the young American—a type which has superseded the "Sheik" in popular favor.

Boyd was signed to a long-term contract as a member of the De Mille Cinema Stock Company, and will make his first appearance under De Mille's independent banner in "The Road to Yesterday." Joseph Schildkraut will play the male lead in this production.

Virginia Valli Going Abroad

Virginia Valli has announced her intention or going abroad for a rest following the completion of "The Man Who Found Himself" with Thomas Meighan. She will leave early next week accompanied by Carmelita Geraghty, who is now on her way from the Coast to join her. They will tour France, England and Germany.

While abroad Miss Valli may decide to take advantage of one of several flattering offers she has received to make pictures there. If so, she will probably accept the offer of the Gainsboro Pictures, Ltd., a British company with studio facilities at Munich, Germany, to star in "Pleasure Garden," adapted from the story by Oliver Sandys. She does not expect to remain in Europe longer than two months.

"Man from Red Gulch"

Harvey Gates, who recently signed a new long-term contract as Scenario Editor for Hunt Stromberg, is writing the adaptation of "The Man from Red Gulch" in a cabin in the San Fernando Mountains, where he is recuperating from the effects of a nervous breakdown. "The Man from Red Gulch" is the screen version of Bret Harte's novel, "The Idyll of Red Gulch," and Stromberg will star Harry Carey in it for Producers Distributing Corporation release.

Special Field Men

Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces this week the appointment of thirteen Special Representatives whose duties will center around the intensive promotion of Harold Lloyd's newest feature comedy, titled "The Freshman." The announcement is significant of the unusual importance which Pathe attaches to its new Harold Lloyd production.

To Write Continuity

Frances Marion was engaged by Fox Film Corporation to write the continuity for the screen version of the John Golden stage success, "Thank You."

Besides writing the continuity for "Thank You," Miss Marion also has written the scenarios for three others of the Fox Pictures. They are "Lightnin'," "Lazybones" and "The First Year."

ADDITIONS TO GROWING MEMBERSHIP OF UNITED ARTISTS CORPORATION

Samuel Goldwyn will release his productions through United Artists Corporation on the completion of his current First National contract. Reading left to right are: George Fitzmaurice, noted Goldwyn director; Vilma Banky, Viennese-Berlin beauty and now a Goldwyn star; Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the Board of United Artists Corporation; Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists; Henry King, Goldwyn director, and Ronald Colman, Goldwyn star.

Goldwyn Joins United Artists; No Change in Programs Planned

SAMUEL GOLDWYN has joined the reorganized United Artists Corporation.

The annexation of the Goldwyn producing strength was one of the first subjects of comment by Hiram Abrams, United Artists Corporation president, on his return from a tour of the Middle West.

It brings to the organization an additional output of $2,000,000 in feature productions, and the further strengthening of the releasing program by the series of elaborate box-office attractions planned by Mr. Goldwyn for the coming year.

The switch from First National carried with it the services of George Fitzmaurice and Henry King, who comprise the Goldwyn directing staff. There will be no change in programs already arranged by these producing directors.

Players under contract to Goldwyn and the complete production personnel remain unchanged. This brings the strength of the Goldwyn featured players, Ronald Colman, Vilma Banky, Belle Bennett and Lois Moran, into affiliation with the great array of ranking stars who form the center of the United Artists Corporation expansion.

President Hiram Abrams voiced enthusiasm over the acquisition to the forces under his command. "The addition of Samuel Goldwyn and the benefit of his experience as a box-office producer, is in line with the plans of United Artists Corporation," said Abrams.

"Our aim is to provide exhibitors with films that will bring the public into their theatres. The stories announced by Mr. Goldwyn for current production, I can say with assurance, are of this order. With Samuel Goldwyn's prestige in the industry and his experience in all the phases and problems of film play production, I am happy to welcome him into the United Artists Corporation organization."

Samuel Goldwyn took occasion to voice his satisfactions with the new arrangement in confirming the announcement of his entrance under the United Artists Corporation banner.

"My production program for the coming year will be the greatest of my career as a producer, and will measure up in every way to the high standard set by United Artists Corporation in the past," said Goldwyn. "If I were not certain of their standing on their own merits as individual successes, I would not have joined.

"We will spend over $2,000,000 this year in George Fitzmaurice and Henry King productions. My first two selections, 'Stella Dallas' and 'The Garden of Allah' are indications of the pretentiousness of the others to follow. Both in expenditure and production scope the coming year's program will be the biggest of my career as an independent producer."

Donaldson with De Mille

General Manager Fred Kley of the De Mille Studios announces the appointment of R. M. Donaldson as the unit manager for the Cecil B. De Mille Picture Corporation. Mr. Donaldson will take immediate charge of the business affairs of the Paul Sloane unit making Rod La Rocque's first starring picture, "The Coming of Amos." He will later be assigned to other units as they go into work. Mr. Donaldson is well known in the picture business. He was recently assistant general manager for Cosmopolitan Pictures and assistant to the studio manager of the William Fox studio. Previous to that time, he was connected with Ben Hampton, Universal and Triangle.

Quimby Has Special Staff Selling Short-Reel Films

FOX FILM CORPORATION, in strengthening and upbuilding all its short production units, did not overlook the important departments of sales and distribution, and under the direction of Fred C. Quimby has organized a special department, functioning independently, to take to the exhibitors of the country the exceptional short reel films it will release for the coming season.

In line with this, Mr. Quimby and G. A. Hill, another expert on short subject sales and distribution, have organized a special staff of field men to concentrate solely on the short film output, with nothing whatever to do with the dramatic offerings of the company.

In this manner the exhibitors, through the medium of these specialists, are given the opportunity to weigh and consider with as much care as is generally given their feature offerings, the short subject part of their programs. Through Mr. Quimby's field men the exhibitor is fully informed of every phrase of the little features and therefore is allowed to know beforehand exactly what he is booking, doing away entirely with the "hit or miss" system often in vogue in selling two-reel pictures.

"The day of saying to an exhibitor, 'with these features goes so many comedies' is past," says Mr. Quimby. "The exhibitor today demands to know just exactly what comedies they are, their standard and everything else about them. They have come to realize that good short subjects and a well balanced program are just as essential to success as good feature offerings, and they are just as finicky about booking their short subjects as they are about their features. In many cases I have found exhibitors paying most attention to short subjects.

"The cause is obvious. If 'punk' short reel films follow a good feature, any audience will forget all about the good feature and leave the theatre feeling that they have been buncoed. One hour of entertainment is not sufficient for the blase movie-goer of today. They want to be entertained every moment they are in the theatre and the success or failure of an exhibitor depends on seeing that they are.

"For this reason I predict a demand for comedies and the other high class short subject films that will be unparalleled in the history of the industry, and for this reason the organization to which I am attached is making every preparation to be 'Johnny on the spot' to meet this demand with an unsurpassable selection of comedies and novelties."

Titles Chosen for Gump Comedies

Titles for three of the new series of twelve Andy Gump Comedies, now being made at Universal City for Fall release, have been selected, according to advices from the coast. The three titles are "Andy Takes a Flyer," "California Here We Come" and "The Found World." The Gump Comedies are two-reelers and will reach the market as Special Universal short subject releases. They are being made by Sam Van Ronkel.

To Play Opposite Barrymore

Priscilla Bonner, who was acclaimed one of the season's cinema finds by the New York newspaper critics because of her remarkable interpretation of the role of Sally May, the wistful little drudge in the Associated Arts Corporation F. B. O. Gold Bond production "Drusilla with a Million," which played the Capitol Theatre, New York, some weeks ago, has been rewarded for her splendid work with a role which makes her the most envied girl in Hollywood.

Priscilla has been selected by John Barrymore to play the leading feminine role opposite him in "The Sea Beast," a story which deals with the whaling industry in New Bedford around 1840.

Six Features and Six "Shorts" on F. B. O's August Schedule

THE August schedule of Film Booking Offices boasts twelve releases, six of which are features and six short subjects. The feature releases will be headed by "Jack O'Diamonds," a comedy mystery drama, with Maurice B. "Lefty" Flynn portraying the role of a gentleman Raffles. An aquatic carnival will be an outstanding feature of the production. Harry Garson will produce and direct the picture, which will be Flynn's seventh feature for the distributing corporation. "Jack O'Diamonds" will be released on August 2.

The fifth Thomson production, as yet untitled, a romantic western replete with thrills, in which Fred and his beautiful horse, Silver King, dash through one exciting sequence after another, is set for August 9th release. The supporting company and director have not yet been announced.

"Drusilla with a Million," an Associated Arts Corporation production, and F.B.O.'s first Gold Bond picture will be distributed on August 16th. Barrie to Write Story for Famous

An original screen story by J. M. Barrie—a motion picture fantasy by that Scottish master of charming and poetic writing—is to be produced as a Paramount picture in the near future. After months of argument and many refusals, Barrie has at last consented to write his first original.

This news was brought to the offices of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation by Herbert Brenon, who arrived on the Paris from England, where he has been conferring with Barrie about the Paramount production of "A Kiss for Cinderella." This picture, with Betty Bronson, of "Peter Pan" fame in the leading role, will be Paramount's Christmas offering to the screen public this year.

The discussion of whether or not Barrie would write an original story ran through the many conferences that the author and Mr. Brenon had about "Cinderella," and is was only at the last talk that Barrie finally gave his promise. Just when he will write it, not even Barrie knows, for he is one of the few authors who depends on inspiration for his writing.

"No Hokum" in Mark Larkin's New York "Don Q" Campaign

ONE of the most effective advance publicity and advertising campaigns ever conducted was that which Mark Larkin, publicity director for the Douglas Fairbanks company, handled in connection with the New York world premiere of "Don Q, Son of Zorro," now showing at the Globe theatre.

This campaign attracted widespread attention because of the simplicity and directness of the advertising, and on account of the space given to the picture by the newspapers. The salient features of the work are set forth for the benefit of those exhibitors who have booked "Don Q," and who may find something that can be adapted to local conditions.

Perhaps the most important feature of the campaign was the policy under which it was conducted. Harry D. Buckley, special business representative for Douglas Fairbanks, who came to New York from Hollywood to handle the premiere showing, issued but one order. "No hokum," he said. "Run your campaign on a strict line of square dealing."

As a result absolute frankness featured the campaign. No attempt was made to hoodwink the newspapers with so-called exploitation stunt. No editor was tricked. The copy was written for its genuine news or feature value, and placed solely on that basis. The same held true of the art. Every effort was made to oblige the newspapers, and when requests were made for special stories they were supplied with despatch.

The advertising campaign consisted of outdoor display on billboards and in windows, and of paid newspaper space.

Eight days before the opening of the picture, a one-half motion picture showing, consisting of 100 24-sheet stands, was posted. A "motion picture showing" in New York means billboards situated at the most advantageous spots in the city, none of them being in the theatrical district.

On Wednesday of the week preceding the opening, advertising began in the newspapers with 35 lines—two and one-half inches—in the five leading morning newspapers. No afternoon papers were used until the day of the opening, when the principal "evenings" were given an even break with fifty along with the morning papers.

The opening was so strong, and the demand for tickets so great immediately thereafter, that the advertising was scaled down to ten lines in all papers, except for Sundays when it was raised to twenty lines, and on Mondays when it was increased to 35 lines in most of the morning papers, and to 80 lines on two columns in two morning publications.

One of the most extensive window tie-ups on record was arranged, and included "Don Q" photographs in 500 windows; also department store window displays of production costumes worn by Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Astor, his leading lady. Through the advertising managers of the stores, displays of these picturesque movie clothes were obtained for Fifth avenue and other principal shopping centers. One man devoted two weeks to the placing in advantageous store locations of 500 beautifully made, and highly artistic photographs, each hand-lettered with the billing, of the picture, the theatre name and opening date.

Several advance radio tie-ups were effected, including a talk on the Australian stock whip by Col. Fred Lindsay, who demonstrated its use in the prologue; also a description of the making of "Don Q" by Mark Larkin, and the rendition of the musical score by the theatre orchestra with Mortimer Wilson, composer of the score, conducting.

A most interesting feature of the campaign was the amount of newspaper publicity that was obtained. The first publicity break was made four weeks in advance and from the time it started until after the opening of "Don Q" there never was a lull. It is interesting too, to note that every press book story was used without any material change by editors.

Signs Alice Calhoun

Popular Actress is Given Leading Role in Gotham Picture "The Part Time Wife"

Alice Calhoun received substantial recognition of recent excellent work on the screen by being tendered the stellar role in the next and fifth Gotham production to be made this season, and which is entitled "The Part Time Wife."

Sam Sax stated, concerning Miss Calhoun, "I have been watching the work of Alice Calhoun for some time and have noted a steady and consistent development of her talent. I think the leading role in my next picture 'The Part Time Wife' offers this charming actress just the opportunity she needs to establish her as a star of the first rank."

Is Hart's Leading Woman

Barbara Bedford will be William S. Hart's leading woman in "Tumbleweeds," the star's first production for United Artists Corporation release, and upon which actual work is scheduled to start within the next two weeks, says an announcement by John W. Considine, Jr., general manager for the Joseph M. Schenck productions.

With the acquistion of Miss Bedford, Hart's arrangements are complete for his first starring film in more than two years. Camera work will begin within two weeks, and the picture is scheduled for release in September.

King Baggot will direct the picture.

"Wild Justice" a United Artist Release

"Wild Justice," a vivid, thrilling and exceptionally fast-moving story of the Northland and featuring Peter the Great, a specially trained German police dog actor, has been taken by United Artists Corporation for general release.

"Wild Justice" is a Chester M. Franklin production. The story is by C. Gardner Sullivan, and Peter the Great is presented by John W. Considine, Jr. The photography is by Ray Binger.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

All Wet!

A man who signs himself "A Constant Reader," writes from Sacramento, California, as follows:

I have been reading the Department. The projectionists who talk so much about warning signals and change-over cues are all wet. Why blame the innocent men? The exchanges are as much to blame as the projectionist or machine operator, as they will not adopt a uniform system.

The projectionist wants to put the picture on the screen and keep it there, but the exchanges don't want their films mutilated. Well here is a remedy which I think would solve the matter if the exchanges would adopt it.

Let the exchanges place at the end of each reel a slow fade-out. Let the fade cover at least fifteen feet. This will give the projectionist or machine attendant (operator) his cue, unless he be sound asleep. I use a signal and have them set for about twenty feet. With that distance by the time I light my other lamp and get ready the change time is there. As a matter of fact I don't wait for the warning, because I know by instinct when the time for change over approaches. If all exchanges would adopt this plan I think film punching would cease.

Brother "Constant Reader," you must not have named yourself quite right, for if you were really a constant reader you would have seen this scheme discussed in this department several times.

It is perhaps as feasible a plan as any thus far presented, but it has its faults in that we still have many machine operators, and a machine operator naturally cares little for anything but his "machine." These men join the reels into two thousand footers, and when they again separate them they just whack them in two somewhere near the right place—probably within fifty feet of the right spot anyhow, with result that the fade-outs are in the wrong place and undependable.

You also err, friend Constant Reader who don't read quite constantly, in saddling the exchanges with the task of appending the fade-out at the end of each reel. That could only be done by the producer, and if you or any other living man can get the producers as a whole to do anything directly calculated to help projection and the projectionist, I would very much like to watch you do it. Of course individual producers have done individual things tending to and calculated to help projection, but they have been few and far between, and in this I am speaking of all producers, because to be really effective it would have to be a universal practice.

A. P. S.

E. J. Rhynes, Gulfport, Mississippi, wants information concerning the A. P. S., as follows:

After having been lost somewhere in the field of projection for half a year or so, I am coming back strong, this time backed by Hattisburg, Mississippi, Motion Picture Projectionist and Stage Employees Local Union 615 I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. Am writing to ask information as to the American Projection Society. Am anxious to learn everything possible about it.

I think it will not hurt to again briefly set forth certain salient points concerning the A. P. S. for the benefit of those not already acquainted with them.

The A. P. S. was formed several years ago by a small number of the best men in the projection field of New York City at that time. It was and is not intended to in any manner usurp any function of the union. It was and is merely designed to bring the better class of projectionists together socially, hold lectures tending to improve the projectional knowledge of the members, and provide a club room or rooms where they might meet for clean, wholesome amusement, and for friendly talk and discussion.

Here in New York City it has done all that. Every member of the A. P. S. is a member of the I. A. T. S. E. & M, P. M. O., and his application cannot be considered unless he is a member of the I. A., except in isolated occasional cases where a high class small town man is so situated that joining the union is impracticable. He must, if accepted by the A. P. S., however, in such cases agree to make application to the union having nominal jurisdiction over the town he works in as soon as the local is willing to receive him into membership.

It is also necessary that men admitted into membership in the A. P. S. be of good character—men one can meet socially and enjoy their society. This does NOT mean that A. P. S. men are in any sense snobs, but that they desire, and I hold rightly desire, to confine the membership to membership to men other than what we style "rough necks." So strict was the line drawn in the beginning that one black ball served to reject an application, but this was found unjust, because it gave the power to one man who might, without just cause, have a dislike for a worthy man and a high grade projectionist, to keep him out. The lines still are pretty tautly stretched, but not quite that tight.

The A. P. S. has its legitimate field, just as has the I. A., BUT unless a sufficient number of men in any city really wish to follow along the lines laid down, the rough outline of which I have indicated, then there is no place for a Chapter (branch) of the organization in that city.

The A. P. S. must not be permitted to interfere in matters coming properly under the jurisdiction of the union. In a city of considerable size the union cannot, in the very nature of things, fill the entire want. This is primarily for the reason that the union is often forced by circumstances to admit to membership men who have no right place in the profession of motion picture projection. They are men who cannot possibly make any social appeal, except to what is known as the "rough neck element." You cannot mix them and really high grade men any more than you can mix oil and water. In the union they must perforce meet for strictly business purposes. They call each other "brother," but the fact remains that there is no "brotherhood" possible, except in the strictly union sense.

The high grade men will, in the end, be the salvation of the profession, and they want some organization open ONLY to men who they feel to be in every sense their "brothers." The A. P. S. fills that want, and does it without in any weakening or interfering with the union, except insofar as the better class of men, in meeting together, may talk over various things, and consciously or unconsciously co-operate to the extent of guiding the union they also belong to along better lines, through a somewhat concerted Question No. 326—Upon what law is the action of an electric dynamo based.

Question No. 327—Give us an explanation of the action of an elementary dynamo armature—an armature carrying but one wire.

Question No. 328—Describe a dynamo armature. By this no particular type of generator is meant. Just tell us what you know about the general build and operation, or electrical action of an armature.

Question No. 329—All dynamo armatures generate alternating current. Explain to us just why this is.

Question No. 330—Just what is an "armature coil" anyhow?

Note: Here is a chance for some "practical questions," such as brothers Thoreau and Clark have suggested. These men, in a recent letter, ask if it is permitted that the asker of the question himself answer it; that such course might give men a chance to ask a question and then "air" their knowledge by answering it.

Well, what harm will that do? We don't care how much a man "airs" his knowledge. All we are interested in is him HAVING the knowledge. Anyhow such "airing" would indicate a pride in the knowledge possessed, and that kind of pride I like to see. It is evident that he to some extent anyhow, values his brains and is using them.

I would therefore suggest that as many of you who have questions dealing with practical operation of motor generator sets, motors, or other electrical appliances for that matter, send them in. Very likely you will propound some I won't know the answer to myself, but when it is all done and finished we will ALL know the answer. Get busy. Good chance to help your brothers to knowledge, without in the least degree working any possible injury to yourself.

action—a thing which no man who has the welfare of the profession and the union truly at heart could legitimately object to. And anyhow that is never either the official or semi-official action of the A. P. S. itself. If it ever happens, and I think it does, it is merely the result of informal discussion caused by these men meeting together in the club rooms of the A. P. S. The A. P. S. as a body permits no discussion of union matters at its meetings.

Foolish

There is a diversity of projector magazine spindle diameters in Europe. The Ernemann, Kalee, Kamm, Motiograph, Omnia, Powers, Pathe and Ross projectors use spindles 13/32 inches in diameter, while the Gaumont uses ⅛-inch spindles and the Simplex 5/16-inch.

I do not understand that there is a difference in the Simplex and the Powers and Motiograph magazine spindle diameters as put out in North and South America. Certainly the same reels are used for them all, and they all, so far as I know, fit all right. At least I do not remember having heard complaint to the contrary, though as used in Europe there is a 3/32-inch difference—the Simplex is that much smaller.

Well, anyhow the diversity of diameters is causing much trouble over in European countries. In North America, and as I remember it in South America too, of late years, films are shipped to theatres on reels, as they should be. In European countries films are shipped to theatres in the roll in tin cans, without any reel.

Of course the first thing the projectionist must do over there when they receive the films is to rewind the rolls on to reels for projection, which we would consider as wasted labor. This is at least partly because of the fact that the three projector magazine spindle diameters make it impracticable to use any reel having a standard diameter spindle opening, hence each theatre must have its own reels which fit its own projectors. Rather silly, don't you think?

Seems a bit worse that foolish for the industry to tolerate three diameters for a thing which must receive the reel upon which films are projected. Why not effect a standardization of such an important item, gentlemen of Europe? You have a body which corresponds to the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. What is it doing that it has not adopted a standard as fundamentally important as this?

That the situation is recognized as distinctly objectionable is proven by the fact that one Hogg has invented a reel which has a contrivance enabling the projectionist to change the diameter of the central, or spindle hole, to any one of three diameters by moving some sort of a duhickey in the side of the reel, and First National Pictures, Ltd., whose headquarters is in London, England, has placed an initial order for 6,000 of them.

European moving picture nomenclature and "film talk" is sometimes a bit puzzling to our western ears. Here is an excerpt of the circular letter being sent out by First National, Ltd.:

Full British letters patent, and full patent rights in all principal countries of the world have been taken out. (Referring to the Hogg reel patent.—Ed.) The advantages of the Hogg spool (Our reel becomes a "spool" over there.—Ed.) offers to both renters and exhibitors is obvious. (They don't seem to think the "spool" offers any advantages to the projectionist—who, by the way, they dub an "Operator" where he is referred to in the circular of instruction which accompanies the reel, thus declaring to all and sundry that they consider the European projectionist as merely the operator of, or attendant upon, a machine.—Ed.) The shipping of film on spools which is made possible by the interchangeable core means protection and support of the reels (Yes, they said reels." How come?—Ed.) in transit cases, the scrapping of film tine (Cans in which the films without reels—beg pardon, "spools"—are shipped.—Ed.) minimum rewinding and handling, prevention against scratching caused by pulling and loosening of the coils of the reel (Coils of the film are presumably meant, since a reel or spool has no coils.—Ed.), protection of the sprocket holes against the damaging effects of thumping to get the reels level, and so on.

There is no doubt but an enormous amount of damage to films which reflects upon the renter, and, of course, on the exhibitor, is caused either through tightening up reels, or through thumping them to get them level, in one case bad scratching being caused, and in the other serious injury to the sprocket holes.

We may, I think, assume that "Tightening the Reel" really means what we call "pulling down," which is not tightening the reel at all, but tightening the layers of film on the reel. Just what "Thumping the reels to get them level" may mean is something else again, and you are as much entitled to guess as I am. Will one of our European readers be good enough to explain why they "thump" a reel, and whether or not there is film upon it when they do; also why the aforesaid thumping of a reel injures the sprocket holes in the film thereon, presuming there is film on it when the thumping takes place. It probably is all very clear and understandable when one understands what is meant, but I am unable to think of any procedure practiced in the United States or Canada by comparison with which "thumping the reels" could be understood.

You will also observe that in this case even a producer seems to have woke up, because he makes the assertion that injury to film "reflects upon the exhibitor," plainly meaning that it reacts upon him in the form of higher film rentals—a gospel this department has been preaching for YEARS, though never once in all those years has a single producer, so far as I have observed, given us the slightest encouragement in our attempt to wake the projectionist and exhibitor up to that fundamental business FACT.

Oh well, all things comes to him who waits—but keeps right on scrapping while he does the waiting—and I guess bye and bye they will all wake up, and then this IDIOTIC waste in and of prints will be STOPPED, and thus the overhead of the industry reduced by huge sums of dollars a year, and the BOX OFFICE RECEIPTS INCREASED BY FROM HALF A MILLION TO A MILLION DOLLARS A DAY.

How It Is Done

Jack Levine, who signs himself "Cinema Projectionist," (which, bye the way, is "not so bad") who shoots stars, starlets, bureaus, buildings, railroad bridges and things such as "bathing beauties" (who might die of fright if ever they happened to get really into the wet water, and whom some of us suspect are not "bathing beauties" at all, and perhaps not beauties at all if their legs and bodies had the usual draperies) at the screen of the Rialto Theatre, Leominster, Massachusetts, says:

There are many men who would like to find out how to do the "Better Projection"—the sort which really pays both them and the boss—but who would not ask for information, or take any adequate steps to find out.

You hear these wiseacres say: "Bill runs a good show, yes, but he gets good fillums, and lookut what his boss gives 'im!"

Let us follow "Bill" to his job and once over his procedure. We find, first off, that he arrives at his projection room an hour or more before show time on change days. His first act is to remove all lenses from the projector and carefully and thoroughly clean them. Laying the lenses aside he oils the projector machine, NOT squirting oil on until it runs over and out of every oil hole, but just one or two drops on each bearing.

When he has finished this he permits each projector to run at maximum projection speed for a momemt or two, after which he wipes them clean and replaces the projection lenses, focusing each lens on the screen by means of a bit of mica with lines scratched on it, or he may do it by a carefully made small hole in the dowser, which will just let through sufficient light to illuminate a bit of film, when the projector is standing still and the fire shutter raised, without danger of firing it.

The projector mechanisms are now threaded up and are ready for use. Next he proceeds to clean the lamphouses, trim his lamp, making sure that the wires and carbon contacts are in good condition. He removes all carbon dirt and examines the vent screens to make sure they are free and clear. He replaces the condenser lenses which he has cleaned and laid aside previously. His projectors are now ready for business.

HELP WANTED

WANTED, MANAGER, Motion Picture. State age, qualifications, where last employed—give particulars first letter. Own handwriting. Only seasoned men need apply. Same will be treated confidentially. Special opportunity for good man. Address, K. L. Corp., c/o Moving Picture World, New York City.

He has probably consumed twenty minutes of his time doing these various things, for "Bill" does not dally around, but works energetically when he is working. He next proceeds to the rewind table and uses both the rewind and his head. Assuming that he uses 2,000 foot reels, he removes the trailer of reel one and the leader of reel two, placing them in prepared and marked compartments in a metal box or drawer. He joins reels one and two and removes the trailer of reel two (unless it be a proper one), affixing in its place an opaque trailer four to six feet long, examines the last scene and writes down his warning and change-over cues on the cue sheet. He then rewinds slowly, watching for punch marks, stickers, loose splices and other faults. This procedure Bill follows through all the reels of his show. It may require more than an hour, but BILL IS PREPARING FOR HIS "GOOD PROJECTION," and when he has finished he IS ABLE TO DELIVER IT.

We find "Bill's" projection room to be clean, and things therein in order. His tools were NOT scattered on a bench, the floor and wherever he used them last. The floor is NOT dirty. There is a film splicing block on the rewind table. The rewinder units are in perfect line with each other, and the motor driven rewind is geared down to slow speed. His tool kit does not consist of merely a ten cent screwdriver and an ancient pair of pliers, but he has all those things necessary to his work.

Bookshelf

Over the workbench is a shelf with books, NOT dust-covered either. The following were noticed: "The Bluebook of Projection," by F. H. Richardson; "Hawkins Electrical Guides," by Hawkins; "Wiring for Light and Power," by Terril Croft; "The American Projectionist," the Moving Picture World, and every copy of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers Transactions.

From all of which we gather that perhaps there is a reason why Bill's boss "lets him have things," and why Bill's boss may add a few dollars over the union scale to his wage, and WHY BILL HAS "GOOD PROJECTION" ON HIS SCREEN, and wouldn't be caught dead with any other kind, except it be due to faults in the production itself—poor photography, silly posing of the Cow Eye or idiotic directing—things over which he has no possible control, but concerning which he uses language no decent printer would print, becaues they spoil his show he has labored hard and well to make a good one!

"There's A Reason"

There, gentlemen, I agree with brother Levine. I can almost guess exactly why "Bill" has "good projection," and why his boss is ready to give him anything within reason that he asks for, though at that there are some "bosses" who actually do not seem to have the slightest appreciation of careful work which places the productions they pay good money for before their audiences at 100 percent box office value. We still have exhibitors and theatre mis-managers who will spend money cheerfully, or at least liberally, on productions, ventilation, nice carpets, advertising and everything else UNTIL it comes to the projection room, when bing! Hey, I paid a hundred dollars for this production, what d' yuh mean by wastin' that inch of carbon, n' why can't yuh use that condenser just because there's a cuppla cracks in it and its face bunged up a li'l!

But thanks be they are slowly but SURELY weeding THEMSELVES out of the business, in which they are terrible misfits.

What brother Levine has tried to show you is that "Bill" has good projection because he is not too shiftless and LAZY to do the best he possibly can with what he has to do with, and when that is true I will say that any theatre MANAGER will respond at least reasonably in the matter of giving such a "Bill" decent things to work with. The others—oh well, they are an unfortunate condition and can't be helped, so "Bill," respecting himself and his profession, either leaves them flat, or if circumstances prevents that, then he does HIS part as best he may, with pity for the bone-head "manager" who is his misfortune, but not his fault.

Not Mere Glass

CINEPHOR Projection Lenses and Condensers are made from select optical glass

CINEPHOR Projection Lenses are regarded as the work of precision optics—the division where the measurement of a millionth of an inch is not left to the imagination. CINEPHOR Condensers, made of clear, white, heat resisting optical glass, supplement and should be used with CINEPHOR Projection Lenses. The CINEPHOR Optical System, providing approximately 50% more illumination (when used with Mazdas) than any other combination of commercial lenses, is invariably recognized by impartial critics as superior.

Welcome Guests

Joseph Basson, Projectionist Criterion Theatre, New York City, his squaw (who really is his boss) and Princess Dorothy, their friend daughter, visited the Editor at his summer home, Point O' Woods Beach, South Lyme, Conn., July Fourth, and remained over Sunday.

Joe is President of New York City Motion Picture Projectionists Local Union 306 I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. of the U. S. and C., but when one can manage to pry his mind loose from the affairs of state for a moment or two, he is nevertheless very excellent company; also he is the undisputed champion arguer of the U. S. and Canada.

During his stay we discussed and argued everything from the German reparations payments to and including the probable time of the next total eclipse of the sun, settling most things to our entire satisfaction.

On Saturday, July Fourth, our conversation went something like this: "Well (bang) you see, Frank, (Zip) you (poppity pop) are entirely in (Zip) the wrong (Whang) on that (Whee zip!).

Hon. Self: "Wrong? (Bangety bang!) What d'y mean wrong? (Crash) I'm never wro(Zip)ng! Not me! (Whangze bang pop pop) Not me, (Zzzzzzip) Joe! Not (Zam whang) me"!

Well, anyhow I enjoyed the Bassons' visit, and hope they will come again real soon. Arthur Gray, Boston, Massachusetts, and his better. 51 per cent. is coming to pay a visit July 17, and maybe perhaps Joe, his better five-eighths and the Queen of their tribe, Princess Dorothy, will come again then. I shall thoroughly enjoy Gray's visit either way, but hope the Tribe of Basson can get here, too.

Chief Projectice

C. B. Burkhardt, Director of Homer Park, Homer, Illinois, asks certain information concerning his optical system, which he paid to have answered by mail. In the course of the letter, friend Burkhardt, who has consulted this department intermittently for many years, says:

I don't get to read very much of your dope these days, but this morning the flies were so bad I couldn't sleep, hence put a weight on my feet early, and as a copy of the World lay at hand I looked it over and found the place where you insisted that even the small town show ought to have two projectors.

That may read very well, but lemme tell you, friend Richardson, that the price of a first class projector makes you set right smack up and take very noticeable notice these days. Well, anyhow I am ordering a Powers this morning—something like seven hundred of those hard-grubbed dollars gone plumb bluey. Just think what a swell Ford that 'ud get me, and here am I still driving my old 1917 Dodge.

Below you will find what I want to know. Haven't had time to look it up lately, so my check is attached for sufficient to pay for your time in getting it together and sending it along. I only have a man who knows how to close the switch. I am the "Chief PROJECTICE—the other chap just "runs the machine." Now you and Griffin know what the fellow in the Cozy Theatre out in Oklahoma really is."

Again I remark, Haw, haw! Well, anyhow you must have thought what I said sounded like good reasoning, else you would not have laid the World down and grabbed an order blank, huh?? Your definition of Chief Projectice is distinctly good. I will remember it!

Bluebook School—Answers 296 to 300

Question No. 296—If a circle be twenty-four inches in diameter, how wide will one degree of its circumference be?

My Gawd, what a bum lotta figerrers! Some of you are even worse than I, and that's entirely useless. Arthur H. Gray, Boston, Massachusetts (Yes, Gray is here again!), C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; T. R. Guimond, Mobile, Alabama; W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, Long Island; Charles C. Colby, Santa Fe, New Mexico, and G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois, made good. The answer is .20944 of an inch.

Budge says:

"This question took me more than three hours hunting through the Bluebook and other books. At last I found what I wanted in the Starrett Tool Catalogue. It was the constant 3.1416. If it is anywhere in the Bluebook, please tell us where to find it.

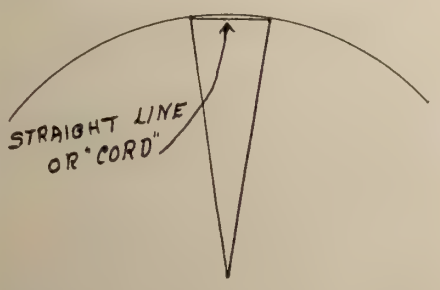
To answer this question, we must first find the circumference of the circle, which is found by multiplying the diameter by the missing link, or constant, which is 3.1416. This gives us 75.3984, which divided by 360 gives us .20944 as the answer."

Note: Guilty, Brother Budge! So far as I know it is not in the Bluebook, but you may gamble four cents and a toothpick that it will be in the next printing. Anyhow I'll bet you won't soon forget how to find the length of the circumference of a circle in one big hurry! So your effort is or was not wasted.

Gray says:

"The circumference of a circle 24 inches in diameter is equal to 24 times the constant 3.1416, and $24 \times 3.1416 = 75.3984$ inches. Since there are 360 degrees in the circumference of our circle, and since its circumference measures 75.3984, it follows that one degree will be one three hundredths and sixtieth (1/360) of that measurement, or $75.3984 \div 360$, which equals .20944 of an inch, as measured on the arc of the circle. However, it may be well to add that this is not the straight line distance (the width) between degrees at the points where lines representing the degree touch the line representing the circumference. The straight line distance—the cord—is about .0002 of an inch less."

Gosh! I had not thought of that myself, but I think the right answer is the distance on the arc of the circle. What Gray means is shown in the drawing I have made to illustrate.



Question No. 297—Describe a B. & S. wire gauge. Tell us what tool other than a wire gauge may be used to measure wires.

Budge, Gray, Hanover, Colby, Guimond, Doe, Wm. A. Burnett, Newton, Iowa; Glenn G. Wallace, Muskegon, Michigan; H. E. Hurlbutt, Oshkosh, Michigan, and Thoreau and Clark made good on this one, though some of them certainly did not waste much language in their description.

Gray says: "A., B. & S. (Brown and Sharpe) wire gauge is a flat circular piece of steel varying in sizes from about 2½" to perhaps 4" in diameter. Around the edge of this disk are slits of varying and closely graduated widths. Each slot is numbered and will just permit a wire of a gauge corresponding to this number to be easily pushed along through this slot and into a hole at its base. These B. & S. gauges may be had in several sizes and prices, the difference being (if genuine B. & S., of course) not in quality or accuracy but in the wider ranges of gauges provided for in the larger sizes. It is difficult to accurately measure wires of very small size with this gauge (especially if the wire be of soft material) because as wire becomes smaller in size the difference in diameter between successive gauges becomes less, and consequently, unless considerable care and skill be exercised in measuring a wire it may be forced into a slit smaller than the proper one and will result in an incorrect reading. For very accurate measurement and where it is necessary to distinguish between wires or objects that differ only slightly from each other in thickness, it is perhaps advisable to use a reliable micrometer caliper. I think these calipers will record to an accuracy of 1/10,000 of an inch.

Which seems to me to be about as excellent a description as any one could give, so we will just let it go at that.

Question No. 298—Tell us what a horsepower is—what it represents. What is an electrical horsepower?

Again Gray gives a most excellent answer, though Doe gives him a close race. Gray says:

A horsepower is the standard theoretical unit of the rate of work. It is equal to 33,000 pounds raised, or lifted, a distance of one feet in one minute.

We are informed that this value or standard was obtained and established by Boulton and Watts, who observed that the average strong dray horse, such as were used around the London breweries (?????What's that???? Ed.) was able to work continuously on a whim-gin (Also something used in connection with breweries) at an estimated rate equal to raising 22,000 feet pounds per minute. It was reasoned that a horse working but one minute at a time would be able to exercise a much greater power during that period of time, so they arbitrarily increased the figure 22,000 to 33,000 foot pounds, which has remained the accepted standard ever since.

It might be assumed from the above account that the study of electricity might not be as dry as one would expect! (Wonder what Gray means! Is it possible he has breweries in mind? He and his squaw will visit me at my summer home in the midst of this month (July), and I'll find out then. I'm looking forward to that visit.

P.S.—When I read that last in correcting copy I saw it looked suspicious. I assure you I'm not expecting Gray to bust the XVIIIth amendment to the Con-sti-tu-t-ion. I'm just looking forward to Gray's visit because he's the kind of chap I shall enjoy having visit my house. Then, darn your suspicious hides.—Ed.)

An electrical horsepower is rated at 746 watts. It is calculated to represent the electrical power required to perform the same amount of work as outlined above, and in the same space of time.

Doe says:

Thirty-three thousand pounds is sixteen and one-half tons, and of course, no horse ever built could lift that on a straight pull. However, work performed is the product of time and energy. You could not yourself lift one thousand pounds a foot high on a straight pull, but you could lift it a foot high, however, by using a series of pulleys and ropes. To pull or lift it straight up, if it could be done, would require probably a few seconds. To lift it by means of pulleys would take a few minutes. It is one application of the trite saying, or law, that what we gain in power we lose in motion.

If a series of pulleys be attached to a weight of 33,000 pounds, and the pulley train be such that an average strong horse could just walk away with the other end of the train by exerting his full power, and would by so doing raise the weight one foot while walking one minute, then the power applied to the rope by that horse would represent and be equal to the standard "horsepower."

One horsepower is the unit of power established. It is equal to the power necessary to lift 33,000 foot pounds a distance of one foot in one minute of time.

An electrical horsepower is the amount of electrical energy necesary to lift 33,000 foot pounds a distance of one foot in a space of time equal to one minute. This power has been fixed at 746 watts, which at the prevailing line voltage of 110 would be approximately 7.75 amperes of current, or half that amount at 220 volts pressure. It would be a many amperes as the line voltage is contained time into 746.

Not so bad, Brother Doe—not so bad! Gray's has points of excellence, and is very good indeed in that it gives us the origin of the standard, but he goes and mixes beer up in it, and I hate the cursed stuff so much that I'd utterly destroy any (It's a hot day) that was placed before me.

Question No. 299—In calculating the resistance of our projector arc circuit, in what way do we make allowance for the resistance of the arc?

Hanover says:

"In calculating the resistance of a projector circuit, when an electric arc is the light source, it is customary to use a constant to represent the voltage drop across the arc, which same of course, represents the resistance of the arc, the constant suggested by the Bluebook (Page 58 being 55 for a sixty ampere arc.

The constant is substracted from the line voltage, thus: 110 volts minus 55 volts drop across the arc equals 55. The resistance of the rest of the circuit, including the rheostat, then is 55 divided by 60 equals .91666 ohms.

To check this we divide the line voltage (110) by the amperage (60), which gives 1.8333 as the number of ohms resistance in the entire circuit, including the rheostat. We now divide the difference between the line voltage and the arc voltage drop by the amperage (55 divided by 60) and get .91666 ohms as a result and .91666 plus .91666 equals 1.8333 plus, which is the same as the entire circuit resistance, less a slight fraction of an ohm, due to not carrying the decimal out.

However, Brother Richardson, in this I disagree with the Bluebook, because I believe we should have gotten past the use of such rough and ready methods. There is but one way of knowing the exact voltage of an arc—especially one which varies as does a projection arc—and that is to measure its voltage with a reliable voltmeter. Having done this we may then proceed as per the above, using the actual measurement instead of a more or less inconstant "constant."

Certainly, Hanover. No one could dispute you on that proposition, BUT what is the chap to do who has no voltmeter, or if he has one and had no way of testing its accuracy? Granted that the constant is not very constant, still I am of the opinion that it will be found very close to as accurate as the average voltmeter to which a projectionist, save in exceptional cases, would have access for measurement purposes. I therefore go into a clinch with you on that point, and together we will roll on the mud, or in a dry place if one can be found out doors—it is raining hard as I write this.

Doe says:

"The average projectionist does not have a reliable voltmeter available, hence his only possible course is to arrive at values as closely as he can by calculation. He knows that the line voltage divided by the amperage at the arc is equal to the total resistance of the entire system and all its accessories, in ohms. A circuit pulling 55 amperes from a 110 volt line would have 110 divided by 55 equals 2 ohms resistance. Looking on page 400 of the Bluebook he selects the voltage drop according to his amperage, and whither it be D C or A C he is using at the arc. He then subtracts the constant so selected from the line voltage, and divides the remainder by the amperage. The final result will be the approximate resistance of the entire circuit, including rheostat, if one there be, except the resistance of the arc itself. He may then check against error by dividing the constant representing arc voltage drop by the amperage and adding the two results together. If the final result is the same as the result had by dividing the line voltage by the amperage, then he knows all is well, and his figures are correct.

Question No. 300—Tell us how you would calculate the resistance in ohms, voltage and amperage being known.

Burnett says:

"To calculate resistance in ohms, it is only necessary to divide the voltage by the amperage. The result is the total resistance of the circuit, in ohms." With which every one agrees, so that's that.

Note—When this lot was all finished correct replies to them all were received from A. L. Fell, Collingswood, N. J. His answer to 298 was exceptionally good.

Childish Talk

From no matter who, who is no matter where (he requests that his name be not published) comes this:

Dear Brother Richardson: I ask that you keep my name and address to yourself if you use this in our department, because what I have to say will step on the toes of men, and those men may have the chance to "get back" at me. I don't in the least fear a fair, even fight, but "getting even" is not always a fair or even fight, as you know.

I have traveled quite a bit since last you heard from me, and on my way have had occasion to visit many theatres. I was surprised to find a considerable number of men projecting pictures (Machine attendants, or machine operators they were in truth. Just that and nothing more) who knew nothing about yourself, your books or the Projection Department. Often when I told them of your work, they could see no possible good in it. Many could see no sense at all in reading or studying.

One chief Projectionist, whose name I will supply if you wish it, who has been an active union man for years, said to me: "I don't think anything of Richardson's dope. It don't help me any in my position, as I never expect to get any higher than I am now; not with this company especially, because they have men for the best places already, and a man placed as I am will never get a chance at the bigger JOBS."

"Jobs"

You will observe that I place emphasis on the "jobs." That is because a "job" is as high as the aspirations of such a man ever soar. It is surprising, and a bit discouraging to find a man in his position, who seemingly has capability and energy and who is a strong union man, possessed of such low grade ideas. In the course of conversation I asked him what spherical aberration is. He did not know—and he is handling and using lenses every day.

I am now working for one of the largest amusement companies in the south. I have a Chief Operator (Pardon the title, but that is precisely what he is) whose lack of knowledge of technical matters pertaining to projection is amazing. While I was standing by I saw him drive an intermittent sprocket on the shaft with a carpenter's claw hammer. Yet that DUB is a member of the union! How do men of that sort get into the organization anyhow? And if they are taken in, then why in the name of Heaven don't the union force them to learn at least something besides trimming the lamp and threading the projector?

This company—the one I am working for—doesn't seem to realize the value of expert knowledge in the projection room; also it is not much in favor of the union. For this latter I don't so much blame them, when I see members pulling the claw hammer-sprocket stunt. I have found that as a rule the non-union man is better posted in technical matters—has better knowledge than the union man.

I AM FOR MAKING OUR UNION AN ORGANIZATION OF HIGH-CLASS PROJECTIONISTS. I AM FOR SETTING UP A CONDITION WHERE THE THEATRE MANAGER WILL KNOW THAT A UNION MAN IS AN EXPERT PROJECTIONIST."

So Am I

So am I, brother, but that is a process of evolution, and a slow one. You must understand that while admitting only expert men is theoretically sound practice, still right there theory butts into practice as she is, and gets bumped off the track.

The union is, and until such time as more attention to impressing the exhibitor with the value of theoretical knowledge and expert skill in projection matters will continue to be forced to take in incompetent men. This is for the simple reason that as matters now are the only weapon the men have is the strike, and if the union refused to accept only expert projectionists, the woods would soon be full of the half-baked sort, many of whom would be perfectly wiling to "get back" at the union for refusing to admit them. They might not be competent projectionists, but they could and would serve in a pinch—a strike—and THAT is the why and wherefore of the admission of the half-baked variety.

Deeper Cause

But still back of all this is a deeper cause of the condition, and that is the almost total lack of any competent apprenticeship system. Any squarehead may "go to school" for a few weeks, or dub around a theatre a month or so, and then suddenly blossom forth as a "machine operator." He don't have to serve any sort of an apprenticeship at all. In most places where he must be licensed he is "examined" (?????) by an official who knows no more about projection than a crawfish knows about a Christmas Tree, is given a license, and is thus foisted upon the motion picture industry by some brother squarehead theatre manager, who "gives him a job" because he likes the color of his hair, or because he says "please, sir" and humbly asks permission when he wants to blow his nose, or because he will "work cheap." He then is a full fledged "operator" and is permitted to work his sweet will upon the finished product of the industry.

Two Years!

NO MAN OUGHT TO BE PERMITTED TO TAKE CHARGE OF PROJECTION IN ANY THEATRE UNTIL HE HAS SERVED AT LEAST A TWO-YEAR APPRENTICESHIP. You gasp at that, but I DEFY ANY LIVING MAN TO ACCUMULATE THE KNOWLEDGE NECESSARY TO EXPERT WORK IN MOTION PICTURE PROJECTION IN A LESS TIME! I served five—yes, nearly six—years before I was permitted to run a locomotive.

As to the union and the non-union man, there is a certain amount of truth in what you say about relative ability. This is for the simple reason that many stop dead still the moment they get into the union. They saddle the union with their membership, and proceed to ride in that saddle, EXPECTING THE UNION TO LITERALLY CARRY THEM. They make absolutely NO effort to advance in knowledge, once they have "got in." "The union will get me a job" is often their open boast, "so why should I work my head off trying to learn things!" I have had that remark made to me by union men a number of times! Perhaps not exactly in those words, but that was what they said in effect.

As to the "Chief Operator" who "doesn't believe in Richardson's dope," why he merely displays his own weakness and non-progressiveness by such CHILDISH TALK. By his assertion that he never expects to get higher, he merely, in another form, says: "I am too damned lazy to try to get ahead, unless getting a bigger, better job is guaranteed him before I start to study."

Would Fail In Big Job

Boiled down you will find he is of the do-it-the-easiest-way, and-that's-good-enough type. In a big job he would NOT succeed, and he would not be able to understand why he failed. I can tell him in advance, however. It would be because once he had the bigger job he would STOP DEAD STILL. Again he would have "reached the top," therefore why work? To him work is a horrible thing anyhow.

And so I could go on with this sermon indefinitely, but the high grade man doesn't need it, and I sometimes get fearfully tired of preaching to the dumb-bells. They don't believe in Richardson's dope! Well, Richardson most certainly does NOT believe in theirs, in any degree, so there you are and that's that! But all the same year by year "Richardson men" increase in numbers, so I guess his "dope" must have some merit anyhow.

Don't Give Up

S. Glauber answered one of the Bluebook School questions in such manner that I took him to task for not having made his meaning clear. In the course of the reply he said:

If one does not believe in a theory, that is his privilege. From your letter I can see how badly I must have crippled up my previous letter. Were I a good writer such a thing could not possibly happen. It reminds me of the small boy who, after being spanked by his big brother, said: "You just wait 'till I grow up," after which he shook his fist and ran immediately away from there. HE KNEW HE WAS LICKED, BUT DIDN'T GIVE UP HOPE.

There is much of the philosophy of success in that small boy's angry remark, and its implied hope. Getting "licked" means nothing in particular, unless the licked one accepts the thrashing as final. Any man or woman who never "gets licked" more or less soundly in and by the affairs of life, most certainly never tried to do anything really worth while.

Down But Not Out

One is never "licked" until one thinks he is. He may be beaten for the moment, but there are other moments, and the "you just wait 'till I grow up" represents faith in oneself and the future. If you ever get the worst of it in anything, just emulate the little boy, shake your fist defiantly at whatever it was that got the best of you for the time being, and say, out loud or to your own soul: "You just wait awhile. I'll first cure the bruises of this scrap, and then I'm going out, climb on top of the world, sit down there and get busy making a ladder to climb to one of the stars! Licked? Yah! You're all full of prunes. I haven't only just begun to fight!"

The final safeguard for success—

EASTMAN POSITIVE FILM

To make the most of a picture from the box office view point you carefully plan the publicity notices, newspaper advertisements, lobby displays, tie-ups.

But one more safeguard for success remains—photographic quality. Look in the film margin for the black-lettered identification "Eastman" and "Kodak" and you know that the screen will show all the quality of the negative.

Looking 'em Over

AND then we come to First National. A tough job. A mighty tough one. Because I find it difficult to work up the same enthusiasm that I have previously expressed when discussing Fox and Metro-Goldwyn.

But after that I find it just as hard to analyze my own lack of enthusiasm. It's a muddle.

First of all, the fact must be registered that, aside from some tapering off towards the end of the season, First National delivered a consistently high quality of product last season. That is on the records. It must be considered.

Secondly, I have to admit that when Eddie Eschmann talks to me about the coming season he comes pretty close to convincing me that it will see a higher standard of releases. Not so much by what he says as by the way he says it—by his CONFIDENCE.

Then we turn back to the list and find our confidence oozing.

PERHAPS that isn't entirely fair. Earl Hudson has shown that, given the right material, he can make pictures that are right. Colleen Moore is still on the list. Milton Sills is still there. Sam Goldwyn has been lost for the future, but he will be represented on the next group. Sam Rork was lost, but has returned to the old homestead for one picture.

That doesn't shape up so badly. So where is our quarrel?

We've got it!

It is with the majority of the titles, and back of the titles, the feeling bred by them that no one seems to have been thinking SHOWSHOP thoughts when the Winner Group was laid out.

That is where all our troubles come. The list, as a whole, doesn't seem to "strike the spark." We like Colleen Moore as a bet for any picture theater any day—but we groan when we read "Colleen Moore in 'Clarissa of the Post Road.'" Isn't that sweet?

There is no brighter "comer"—if she holds to last year's pace and doesn't allow old "Tempurament" to grab the reins—than Corinne Griffith. But how far will a title like "Ashes" get if the house across the street is shouting "Lightnin'?"

Richard Barthelmess? Who knows? Dick is experimenting, and despite the glowing reviews on his last "comedy-drama" there is many a mile between the reviews and the box office. Dick is neither a Douglas McLean, a Reginald Denny, nor a Wallace Reid. If he isn't going back to the stuff that made him he may as well decide that in the experiments he is playing second fiddle to men who know their game.

Norma Talmadge? Constance Talmadge? You write your own ticket.

Milton Sills in "The Knockout." I like that. Johnny Hines in "The Live Wire." That too. Colleen Moore in "Irene." There's a bearcat. Johnny Hines in "Rainbow Riley." Right again. Leon Errol in "Clothes Make the Pirate"—apt to be one of the season's big surprises. Corinne Griffith in "Forever After." Sounds good.

And then we drop. "Joseph Greer and His Daughter." "The Beautiful City." "A Husband For George-Anne." "Joanna." "The Love Link."

SOMEONE in the audience is going to arise and remind us that it isn't entirely fair to take a long advance look at a program and not acknowledge that titles are often going to be radically changed before pictures reach the screen. Granted. Righto! But the way it looks to us a list worth announcing to the exhibitor is worth selling to the exhibitor, and a list worth selling is worth having right. And who is going to guarantee that there will be any greater amount of SHOW thought in the changed titles than there was in the SOLD titles?

So there you have it. Except for this.

The prophet is always allowed to use that word "except." When he is attempting to forecast a program and is discussing one that looks great to him he is privileged to add, "IF they make pictures that measure up to their opportunities." Likewise, when he glances over a list that leaves him in a state of apathy, it is merely using the inalienable ace in the hole to add, "BUT they may make pictures out of these titles that will overcome all apparent weaknesses."

And that is what they will probably do.

The South Vouches for the Saengers

New Orleans Item Pays Sectional Leaders Great Tribute

THEY say—and it's true—that the motion picture industry is like the Klondike gold rush. In the beginning, quick, large profits lured reckless men. There was turmoil. Then leaders with vision began to bring order out of chaos.

Each section of the country has its motion picture leaders. They are steadying the development of the industry. The leaders in the South are well known to the trade. And certainly their identities are no secret to the general public, for the New Orleans Item, a newspaper with the highest of editorial ideals, has come out with a remarkable editorial tribute to the motion picture brains of the South—the "Saenger boys."

What does New Orleans think of the Saengers? Under the heading of "A Theatre," the Item devotes more than a column on its editorial page to a survey of the esteem in which they are held. The occasion is the opening of a new Shreveport, La., theatre. The editorial follows:

Great insight, hard work, and high practical ideals, are all embodied in the opening today of the greatest theatre in the South. It is doubly creditable to Louisiana because in Louisiana and built by Louisianians. It is the new Strand, dedicated to its purpose in Shreveport by the Saenger interests, which are the formative and dominating influence in the motion-picture business of the territory surrounding New Orleans, and extending into Florida and Texas, and southward into Latin-America.

We say nothing descriptive of the Shreveport Strand. It has been described in the news columns. But the dedication of it presents angles that give it genuine significance in noteworthy respects.

It was in Shreveport that accident turned the Saenger boys aside from a successful pursuit of the drug business, launched them "into the pictures," spread their names and their associations and activities over half a dozen states, and finally lodged in New Orleans the establishment from which an ever-expanding business is planned, managed, and generally directed. It was in Shreveport too that their connection with E. V. Richards was formed; and thence his unusual showman's insight into human nature in general, and his peculiar talent for business organization, coupled with rare ideals for the great, new, unshapen, business of the screen, have radiated their influence, with the Saenger enterprise, through the whole Saenger territory.

It must therefore be a source of particular pride and gratification to the working heads of the Saenger organization to go back in person to Shreveport today to present the city of their beginnings with the magnificent temple of clean amusement they have builded there.

We don't doubt the occasion is a source of great congratulation among the people of Shreveport too. For Shreveport is itself almost unique in the rapidity of its growth and in the genuinely astonishing surplus of prosperity and progressive industry that native talent and hard work have enabled its people, in the half of a single generation, to work out of their fine farming background and the happy accident of its mineral wealth. The Saenger Company, with its Shreveport impetus, and its Orleans organization, has kept pace with Shreveport, abroad, which is much. And it must be immensely gratifying to the persons and the communities concerned to note today an occasion signalizing the fact that the Saenger interests have kept pace with Shreveport at home. For the Strand is worthy of Shreveport, as Shreveport is worthy of the Strand. And this adds to our pleasure in observing that an Orleans architect, our own friend Weil, conceived and supervised it.

We give special point to the dedication of this theatre because we believe it to be a mark of the development to be expected here, and throughout the Saenger territory, in this important field of public amusement, as New Orleans and the other communities in the area progress. We are shortly to see something of the sort ourselves in Canal street.

We feel that a word for public understanding and appreciation should be said of the character of the underlying enterprise. The titanic structure of "the picture business," towering, in its vast investments, among such ancient leaders at the top of the commercial pyramid as banking and railroading, has reared itself to that immense magnitude in little more than 20 years. And the structure rose on the infirm foundations of the little "penny-arcades" and the picture boxes of the bootblack stands, barber shops, and saloons, just before them.

It is obviously impossible that such a vast and complicated mushroom can have taken its final form in so brief a time. Despite the civil wars this short period has seen within it,—and the revolutions which have taken place in the status and functions of its producing and selling and exhibiting departments, its artistic and its commercial elements,—the "picture business" is still unshaped. It has still to find a final form, as it has yet to attain its fullest usefulness in entertainment and education.

Countless petty operators of low ideals, scant responsibilities and no purposes but to get the money, get it quick, and get it any way you can, became suddenly rich in the Klondike epoch of the movie business. Poor men don't usually change very much merely because they get rich. When they do, the change is often for the worse. If they were irresponsible before, wealth increases their capacity for damage.

So the picture business has been a continuous struggle within itself to find itself, a conflict between the impulses of the best and worst elements that one of fortune's spectacular accidents flung together less than 25 brief years ago. It has been a war such as every other business in the world that approaches the present magnitude of the picture industry had fought out to more or less fixed methods and standards while the world was thousands of years younger.

And throughout the turmoils of the young, green-sick, but ever-growing, picture world, the Saenger influence, under the insight, foresight, and force of Richards, has been wielded steadily for the expression of higher ideals in the correction of abuses, the improvement of moral standards, the strengthening of educational values, and the general advancement of the idea that the clean, the constructive, and the useful is what the business of the screen should cultivate.

The superficial reader, observing this exhibition or that, in this territory as in all other territories, may scoff at this assertion. The zealot may sneer at the suggestion that there is any such tendency at all, anywhere at all, in the picture business. But they scoff and sneer in the zeal of ignorance. They know nothing of the confusions and disorders attending the rise of this business, nor of the internal revolutions that have carried it through complicated organizations and reorganizations, for combinations and competitions. But the war to retrieve it from

A Dollar For Each "Short" That "Saved" the Feature

By C. L. GRANT

And Wm. Smalley's Bankroll Would Be Considerably Larger

WILLIAM SMALLEY of Cooperstown, N. Y., today has a chain of fifteen picture theatres. Nothing so very wonderful about that, you say? But wait a moment. William Smalley owns fifteen theatres today instead of the 300-seat house he started with because he was business man enough to study both his audiences and his program, and when he found he lacked something he played up his short subjects.

In other words, by more generously advertising his short subjects when he found they merited it Mr. Smalley's chain of one link became one of fifteen, encircling a territory which contains tens of thousands of persons for whom he provides the sort of entertainment that has brought him business that begins with a capital "B," and which is synonymous with banking, which also begins with a capital "B."

Maybe you have no hankering for a chain of houses. All right, if such is the case, but why not take advantage of what Mr. Smalley has proved fact rather than theory and use it in your own theatre? Not a bad idea, for none of us are in business for our health.

If Bill Smalley, and we might just as well begin right here in getting a bit chummy and call him "Bill," can do it so can you.

There are altogether too few "Bill Smalleys" among the exhibitors of today, and altogether too many of the sort who never go farther than to spend a few minutes in blocking out the same old type of advertising, the into-the-rut sort, a big splash for the feature and then an "and also a comedy and a news reel." But why not let Bill, who isn't a bit bashful, stand up and speak his piece?

"You ask how I came to give so much prominence in advertising and exploiting my short subjects? Simply because I found out that it brought more business. Stop and figure out for yourself why you favor this or that restaurant and the same answer that fits the eating place fits the theatre.

"Your stomach, just as your eyes or your brain or your very make-up, demands variety and you go where you are sure of getting it. Don't you realize that you have not only got to offer these days a diversified, balanced bill of fare, but what is far more important, you must advertise your menu?

"Perhaps I may be getting a bit reminiscent for the moment to state that when I first bought my 300-seat house in Mount Upton fourteen years ago, following an apprenticeship as an operator—if you want to call it such—I was inclined to let things drift alng the ordinary channels, a common everyday newspaper advertisement, a few single or three-sheets, and then wait for the people to find out what I had to offer.

"Then came a day when, lo and behold, I discovered that I wasn't in a business that would run itself and which would keep on turning in the dimes and quarters without using a bit of gray matter. So I took an inventory of things generally and started in to study my audiences. I was still under the impression that the feature was the whole thing and became all worked up every time when I started writing my newspaper advertising as I enumerated the old time hokum to the effect that the heroine had been 'tossed from a life of luxury to a bitter struggle for existence.' After this was out of my system I wound up my advertisement by adding those time-honored words 'a mirthful comedy' and a 'news reel.'

"I completely overlooked the fact that there are comedies and comedies, and that comedians can have a following whose money is just as acceptable and goes just as far toward meeting one's bills as that which comes from the most temperamental star.

"I completely forgot the fact that the millions today read the newspapers and when they visit the picture theatre they never let their eye wander from a newsreel and are often heard to remark that they wish there had been more of it.

"Try this experiment, Mr. Exhibitor, while your news reel is running: see how many patrons you can spot who are indulging in idle chatter or whose eyes are roving about the house.

"One more thing, and it's important. Know your community. If there is a boy from your home town who is taking part in the collegiate boat races, don't be afraid to advertise the fact. The chances are that he has many relatives and hosts of friends.

"Every place has its baseball fans. They are legion. Don't get writer's cramp when you show a reel containing a few shots of a game.

"On more than one occasion—and I am mighty glad when I look at my bank book that I have done it—I have featured the short subject above the feature itself, of course knowing beforehand that the short subject was a good one, having pulling power, for there are poor short subjects just as there are weak features.

"I would like to have a dollar for every weak feature that I have bolstered up with a short subject. I want to say right here that I give my short subjects just as much thought as my features from start to finish, and by that I mean when I buy them, when I advertise them and when I play them.

"There was a time when I would see men and women leaving some one of my theatres just about the time the feature went on.

" 'What's wrong?' I would ask, knowing full well that they hadn't seen what I thought was the very reason they had come to the theatre.

" 'Oh, we just came to see the newsreel and the comedy,' was the invariable reply, an answer that set me to thinking and which eventually led to a decision on my part to play up my short subjects.

"And you can bet your bottom dollar that I do. I have featured many an 'Our Gang' over a seven-reeler, one of the kind, and you all know them well, that are advertised as 'gripping affairs that hold the audience spellbound' and which prove so 'gripping' that a portion of your audience drops into blissful slumber and the rest wriggle around in their seats. I have found that Ben Turpin, Charlie Chase and a whole lot of others have box office values far superior to many a feature. I have found out that it not only pays to spend money in advertising this fact, but also to go the limit in exploitation.

No Felix Cat, Much Weeping

A MAN and woman stepped into the Bellingham Theatres Co., Bellingham, Wash., offices one evening. They led a small boy who was howling lustily. Addressing Fred Walton, Company manager, the aggrieved father demanded to know whether any faith was to be placed in the theatre advertising, or whether it was all "the bunk" and merely used to get patrons into the house under false pretenses. Soothing him tactfully until he could learn the cause of the complaint, Mr. Walton between the child's suppressed whimpers learned that:

"You advertised a Felix Cat cartoon. John here has been teasing all day to come and see it. We like these cat comedies ourselves so we came down to the American for an evening's pleasure. We sat through the rest of the show, saw the whole thing through until it began again, and you didn't show what we came expressly to see! How about it?"

An inquiry disclosed the fact that the projectionist to make up a few minutes of lost time had elected to omit the comedy. The ruffled parent was soothed, passes were issued for the next day's show and apologies accepted all around.

This one little incident shows how very much some patrons like short subjects. Mr. Walton's policy is always to build around his feature, according to its length. He states that the majority of features are still too long to admit of a well balanced program of short subjects, and that it is difficult to get enough good one-reel comedies to supply the demands of several houses in one town. With the average picture he presents a comedy and newsreel, and if the feature happens to be within six to seven reels, he also uses a novelty. Scenics do not appeal to the people of Bellingham for the simple reason that they are surrounded by some of the most beautiful natural scenery on the continent.

Says Smalley

"There are a whole lot of us who are inclined to think that the feature is better simply because it's longer. And I am inclined to think that there are a whole lot of us who sometimes feel that if the seven-reeler had been cut to two, we would have been a whole lot better when we counted up not only the day's receipts but the impression that has been left in the community and which can not help making itself felt in the days to come.

"Exploit the short subject? Why certainly. I have gone so far as to banner my newsreels on subjects that have been carried heavily in the newspapers, and these items become to me, as they appear on the screen, just as important to may house as any story that may have appeared on the star of the feature.

"Do you realize that few if any news reels disappoint? Give them more thought and the space they deserve.

"When it comes to comedies I avoid the slapstick variety, as I firmly believe that such cater to a rougher element, while a good, clean comedy possesses a general appeal and one that brings back your crowds.

"And so, believing as I do—and I only need a glance at the old bank book to reassure me if I ever should get a bit wobbly—I advertise my short subjects as business-getters, for they are the shortcake and the cherry pie to the Smalley circuit."

Whistling Boys His Orchestra

ARTHUR S. THORNTON, who runs the Walden Theatre in Williamstown, Mass., boasts of a 300-piece orchestra and then explains that it consists of 299 whistling students from Williams College and the piano. The theatre, which seats 530, has been run by Mr. Thornton for four years and is generally referred to as the "student theatre," for its patronage in the main is made up of college boys. They are allowed to razz a picture if they see fit or indulge in a bit of by-play. Mr. Thornton charges 15 and 30 cents

When Mr. Thornton took over the house the first thing he did was to stop the students smoking. There was no great objection on the part of the boys. Mr. Thornton says that he has never had a mean answer from any of them.

When a picture portrays a fight, the chances are that all the students will start battling. It is impossible for the villain to creep up knife in hand and stab the hero, for no sooner is he shown on the screen than the boys yell a warning. One night this past spring, when the picture showed the star in her bath tub, and her maid appeared with a robe, the boys got up and demanded their money back.

The Saengers

confusion, and from the worst of the ideas, ideals and methods of its beginnings, has for years been in progress. The results begin to appear.

In the phalanx that has stood fast and fought steadily through to the front for good pictures, clean pictures, and useful pictures, and has studied, reflected, planned, schemed, and spent money, to make that kind of pictures also entertaining—to make them pay,—to improve a public taste that in large part needs improvement as badly as putrid pictures needed it,—Richards has been a pioneer. He has borne an unfaltering part, with the Saenger influence solidly at his back in every national or regional council.

And his personal abilities have won him a place in these councils that the relative importance of the sparsely settled areas of "The Saenger territory," in cash values to an amusement enterprise, would never have gained. It is matter of knowledge with us that this Orleanian, scarcely known by name to most of his fellow citizens, is one of a very, very, few dozen men at the very top of the inner coterie whose counsels sway the course of the prevailing policies in this vast industry covering our continent,—notwithstanding that thousands on thousand of others are concerned in it equally directly and that hundreds and hundreds of them have a far greater cash interest in it than he has.

Richards is a national influence in his chosen business, in his own right. And his influence has been steadily used for the benefit of the people in the amusement that they need, as well as for the benefit of the business that seeks its profit in supplying this amusement.

We think the occasion pertinent for saying these things. We wish space permitted an appreciation of some of the methods by which the Saenger interests operate and amid the difficulties of conflicting pulls to which all large picture enterprises are necessarily subjected. Lacking that, we congratulate them on the happy nature of their present return to Shreveport, as we congratulate the public that an enterprise so actuated makes the progress that the occasion for it betokens.

Hays Reports More Progress On the Greater Movie Season

"THE entire country from New York to Los Angeles stands organized for the national Greater Movie Season, beginning in August," says a statement from Will Hays. "Field representatives of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., of which Will H. Hays is president, have developed, in conjunction with exhibitors and exchange executives, ninety cooperative campaigns all territorial in scope. Cincinnati, Baltimore, Spokane, Schenectady, Akron, Houston and Birmingham, Ala., adopted the national plan last week, with William A. Clark of the Palace Theatre, general manager for Cincinnati; Sam R. Abrams of the Rialto Theatre, for Houston; James Roach of the State Theatre, for Schenectady; Ray Grombacher, Liberty Theatre, for Spokane, and L. J. Callinan, assistant secretary of the Akron Motion Picture Theatre Owners Association, for Akron.

"Officers and committee-men elected at a meeting of theatre owners in Birmingham are: B. H. Morney, Trianon Theatre, chairman; R. M. Kennedy, Capitol Theatre, secretary; D. R. Faunce, Strand Theatre, finance. E. A. Vinson, Loew's Temple Theatre, director of publicity with the duties of general manager.

In almost every center parades will announce the opening of the season. Besides the exhibitors the principal producing and distributing companies will be represented by floats built in accordance with standard designs that the New York offices are sending to each exchange. Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Chicago and Salt Lake City are among the cities that will hold movie balls. Chicago merchants have donated $100,000 in prizes for the Greater Movie Season newspaper contest there. Also in Chicago the amount of cooperative advertising is estimated at $500,000 over and above the $50,000 constituting the exhibitors' campaign fund.

"In the New York campaign Wells Hawks has appointed Bessie Mack of the Capitol and George Morris of the Piccadilly in charge of radio-work; Terry Turner of Loew's and Edward Olmstead of the Rialto, to look after parade organization; Fred Hamlin of the Strand Theatre, to assist in the advertising and Glen Allvine of the Criterion, to control publicity. Other committees will be named later.

"Through arrangements effected by the Hays office, the National Jewelers Publicity Association has linked that industry into the movement.

"Kalamazoo and Pontiac have embarked on vigorous campaigns under the leadership of H. L. Dean of the Orpheum Theatre, Kalamazoo, and A. J. Kleist of the Rialto, Pontiac."

Famous Buys Ottawa Property; Trade Expects a New Theatre

A NUMBER of years ago Famous Players Canadian Corp., Toronto, started the construction of a large theatre in Ottawa but operations ceased at an early stage because of labor difficulties. The partly built theatre was offered for sale but there were no particular developments until July 7, when announcement was made at the Canadian capital that Famous Players had purchased a large adjoining property, this comprising a 104-foot frontage on Sparks street, the city's most important store thoroughface, the purchase price being $225,000. This gives Famous Players just about double the original area and it is expected that immediate work will be started on a huge picture palace on the whole property.

The new frontage is added to a 28-foot property on Sparks street which had been bought several years ago for the entrance to the theatre on Queens street, the other side of the block. A considerable number of stores and business firms will now have to move.

Last summer, Famous Players made an important bid for the Marcus Loew Theatre seating 2,600 people, in Ottawa, offers being made by N. L. Nathanson, managing director, and Clarence Robson, director of theatres, at Toronto. The bids were unsuccessful, however, and the Loew house was acquired by the Keith-Albee people, being renamed B. F. Keith's Theatre. Following this, Famous Players announced that steps would be taken in Ottawa for the erection of a large new house to compete with the Keith Theatre. It is believed that the policy of the new Famous Players Theatre will be to give a combination program of photoplays and Pantages vaudeville, Mr. Nathanson having control of Pantages bookings in the Dominion.

Famous Players already have one important theatre in Ottawa, the Regent, which was acquired from the assets of the defunct Allen Theatres, Ltd., Toronto. This is leasehold property, however, and has only a year or two more to run, it is understood. Harold Hitchinson of Toronto, supervisor of theatres for Famous Players, has been in Ottawa for several weeks past but declined to make any statement about current developments.

Coming and Going

Mark Larkin will soon go to New England to start a publicity campaign on "Don Q."

J. C. De Strelecki of Paris has arrived in New York with a feature picture and a one-reeler. His headquarters are at 135 West 44th street.

Lois Wilson has returned to Hollywood after a month's vacation in New York.

Paul Bern is back from Mexico City where he sought locations for Pola Negri's "Flower of Night."

Jack Cohn of Columbia Pictures is back at his desk after a business trip to Chicago.

W. J. Morgan, sales head of Producers Distributing Corp., returned this week from a sales tour.

Henry Ginsberg, president of the company which bears his name, is expected back in New York the latter part of this month. On his return trip, after cleaning up office details he intends to visit the key cities and exchange centers where his product is being handled.

Frederick Wynne-Jones, American representative for U. F. A., has returned from a two months' business trip in Europe to complete details for opening "Siegfried" at the Century Theatre, New York.

Greater Movie Season Is Flivvering in Albany

The Greater Movie Season in Albany, Schenectady and Troy, N. Y., has apparently flivvered despite efforts on the part of Tony Veiller, who was named to handle the campaign and bring about greater co-operation among the theatres in the Albany Zone. According to Mr. Veiller, he has attempted to hold four meetings of exhibitors in Albany, but with little or no response, one of the meetings having been attended by just one lone exhibitor who runs a couple of small residential houses. Similar attempts in Schenectady and Troy were likewise productive of no results.

As a final effort to enlist the co-operation of the exhibitors, E. J. Farrell came here last Wednesday from New York, planning to see the exhibitors at a meeting at the Albany Film Board of Trade rooms, but no one showed up other than Mr. Veiller and Uly S. Hill, with whom Mr. Veiller is associated in handling the Strand group in Troy.

As a result of the lack of interest shown by exhibitors in these three cities, it is generally conceded that no further attempt will be made toward putting over the Greater Movie Season in the three places.

Seider Dares Will Hays to Debate Arbitration Before U. S. Justices

Seek Managers

One of the largest theatre circuits in the Chicago territory is advertising in the classified columns of the newspapers for men to join their organization and work up to be managers. This is the first time that such large space has been used to secure men for the business.

It places the age limit from 28 to 38, and asks applications from men with college education, good personal appearance, pleasant address, clean habits and unblemished records. The work, it says, will appeal to single men, as there is more or less traveling. Theatrical experience is not essential as the houses are operated along strictly business lines.

M. P. T. O. of Ontario Is Opening New Club Rooms

The monthly luncheon meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Ontario for July, held at the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, announced that appropriate club rooms are being opened in Toronto for the use of all members of the association or those who were in sympathy with the organization. This will serve as a club and business center for all M. P. T. O. people and independent distributors.

The Ontario M. P. T. O. has adopted a new fee schedule for out-of-town independent members that is considerably more attractive than the old fee-per-seat plan. The new fees, which are considerably lower, are: $5 a year for each independent theatre in villages under 2,500 population, and $10 a year for theatres in cities and towns over 2,500 population. It was felt that the new scale would encourage a much wider membership among exhibitors outside of Toronto.

Cordial greetings were extended to Canadians who have been elected to the new executive committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. These are: J. C. Brady, owner of the Madison Theatre, Toronto; A. D. Denis of Montreal, president of the Quebec branch of the M. P. T. O.; H. Alexander of the Park Theatre, Toronto, and Ray Lewis of Toronto, secretary of the Ontario Division. Mr. Brady, who is president of the Ontario M. P. T. O., was chairman of the recent luncheon at Toronto.

PICQUET NATIONAL COMMITTEEMAN

At the request of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of North Carolina, National President R. F. Woodhull has designated C. W. Picquet of Pinehurst, N. C., as national executive committeeman from that state in the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

High Jurists Would Render Decision on Merits of the Arguments—M. P. T. O. A. Did Not "Tip Off" Dept. of Justice

THE controversy between exhibitors and Will Hays over the so-called uniform contract, arbitration and Film Boards of Trade has taken a surprising turn. Joseph M. Seider, chairman of the Arbitration and Contract Committee of the M. P. T. O. A., has written Mr. Hays asking for a debate on these subjects, decision to be rendered by three United States or State Supreme Court Justices on the merits. Incidentally, Mr. Seider charges that statements of C. C. Pettijohn, Hays' attorney, to Department of Justice agents that 95 per cent. of theatre owners are satisfied with the situation have no foundation in fact. He adds that "we did not refer this situation (the Film Boards of Trade controversy) to the Department of Justice for investigation."

Mr. Seider's letter to Mr. Hays follows:

"The statement made by your office that 95 per cent. of the theatre owners of America are pleased with your Film Boards of Trade and arbitration as practiced in this industry, is clearly disproved by the attitude of the theatre owners of America in refusing to ratify your contract at their Chicago convention in 1923 and again at Milwaukee in 1925. At the latter convention a demonstration against the Film Board of Trade, the contract and the arbitration system was made when these subjects were placed before the theatre owners.

"We are for arbitration. The arbitration system in our industry, however, controlled by your Boards of Trade, is not arbitration but litigation. It is a convenient collection agency for your members.

A Weak Foundation

"The contract itself is inequitable. Predicated on a contract such as this, no arbitration system, no matter how honest, earnest and sincere the arbitrators may be, can be fair to the theatre owner.

"When a theatre owner becomes enmeshed in your arbitration system, he not only loses his right to trial by jury but also the possibility of having his matter reviewed by a court of competent jurisdiction. Instead of the award of the arbitration board being made a judgment of the Supreme Court, upon proper motion, and collectable through its legal officers, as provided by law, the members of your Film Boards of Trade refuse to deliver pictures to exhibitor defendants. The exhibitor must either pay or close his theatre.

"The individual cannot take advantage of the protection afforded him by law. Injunctions are expensive. A review without injunction cannot be had because of the refusal of all the distributors at the same time to deliver him pictures. And if he can protect himself, wherein is the benefit or advisability of arbitration?

"To be compelled to arbitrate after agreeing to do so is one thing. To be forced to sign a contract providing for arbitration is another. Where the theatre owner deletes the arbitration clause from his contract the contract is rejected. And every distributor at the same time does the same thing to the same theatre owner.

"We are pleading for a short, clear, fair contract, in simple language, so that all our members will know the extent of their obligations.

"We demand the right to appoint 50 per cent. of the arbitrators instead of their being appointed for us.

"Since the Film Board of Trade are the nucleus of the arbitration system, why not actually separate it from your organization? Then form a Film Board of Trade composed of distributors and exhibitors. Thus would the Arbitration Boards cease to be absolutely controlled by your organization.

"We did not refer this situation to the Department of Justice for investigation. We believe that our interests in our industry are interlocked. For the protection of our industry we must make every effort to adjust our differences within the industry. Outside investigations should be our last resort.

"Pease permit me here to reiterate that the statements of your Mr. Pettijohn to the Department of Justice Agents that 95 per cent. of theatre owners are satisfied with this situation has no foundation of fact.

"Most of the eighty writers of letters are arbitrators. Naturally, a judge feels that he decides fairly. And in a sense he does, the best way possible under existing conditions.

"Therefore we respectfully offer to debate the existing contract, arbitration and Film Boards of Trade problem, with you personally, at time and place to be mutually agreed upon, decision to be rendered by three United States or State Supreme Court Justices on the merits.

"To both winner and loser will go an equitable contract, real arbitration, mutually protective rules and a give-and-take, a live-and-let-live policy of doing business."

Connecticut Defers Enforcement of Picture Tax and Censorship

ENFORCEMENT of the new Connecticut tax and censorship on motion pictures has been suspended pending the decision of the courts as to whether or not the statute is constitutional. Attorneys for the film interests and the state have been ordered to file briefs in the case in New York on or before July 20.

A hearing took place in New Haven on July 10 before Judge Henry Wade Rogers, Judge Henry Goddard and Judge Thomas Thacher, all of the United States Court for the southern district of New York. The specific cases, the first to be brought in the fight of exhibitors and distributors of Connecticut against the new law, were those of the Fox Film Corporation of New York and the American Feature Film Company, Inc., of Boston. George W. Wickersham appeared as counsel for the film interests and the state was represented by Arthur L. Shipman.

Mr. Wickersham argued that the law violates "freedom of commerce among states" and violates interstate commerce regulations; that it is too arbitrary to be practical and that the authority to enforce censorship vested in one man might cause harmful results. He quoted from an affidavit that the product of the Universal Film Company (headed by Carl Laemmle), produced a revenue from exhibitors in the state of $8,057, and further that if they are compelled to pay the tax, $6,360 from the gross revenues would be taken for taxes. A gross rental of $51,000 accruing from films distributed during a year by the Fox company would pay a tax of $8,630, the attorney asserted.

Attorney Shipman, answering a question by Judge Goddard, stated that the censorship clause of the new statute, which rules that a license to present a film may be revoked and the tax confiscated without a hearing being given in the event the subject should be found objectionable, might be unconstitutional "if the clause stood alone." He argued that the entire law, however, is constitutional; that Governor Trumbull had conducted a hearing on the bill before he had signed it. Attorney Shipman contended that the law should be enforced inasmuch as it had been passed and the governor had signed it He said a film could travel indefinitely within the state without incurring more than the initial tax, which, according to the law, is to be paid by the distributor.

John J. Splain of New Haven, appointed agent for Tax Commissioner Blodgett to enforce the law, will not attempt to do so until its status has been settled. However, he has ordered exhibitors to keep a record of all films they show; also the footage and nature of the subjects. If the law is found to be constitutional the tax will be collected on these pictures.

WELL, WHO KNOWS?

In attacking American films one Britisher has said a picture purports to show the German fleet surrendering to the United States Navy. This story was taken up at the weekly meeting of officials of Will Hays' organization with trade paper men, as part of a report on foreign conditions by Major Herron. C. C. Pettijohn said that it was a dream scene in a comedy. John S. Spargo of the Exhibitors' Herald declared that a distributor, "Not an American," had bought this picture abroad and altered the continuity. Treasurer Platten reported on a campaign to end illegitimate film stock selling. Courtland Smith presided.

A Ten-Strike

Dunno whether it was William Fox, Winnie Sheehan or Jimmie Grainger —but someone up at the Fifty-fifth Street organization made a ten-strike when they prevailed upon Henry Buxbaum to take over the post vacated by Louis Rosenbluh's promotion. "Bux" knows New York's exhibitors; New York's exhibitors know "Bux." "Bux" gets results, and what's more—according to reports on his last year with First National—"Bux" gets these results at a lower selling cost than the office figures have previously shown. And one thing certain, "Bux" gets these results for his employer while still retaining a wealth of exhibitor good will.—R. E. W.

Mark Strand Interests Plan New Theatre in Albany

In one of the biggest deals that has characterized local motion picture circles in many months, the Mark Strand interests have acquired the old municipal building in Albany, N. Y., and will erect a picture theatre costing $500,000 and seating 1,500. The deal was consummated after several weeks' negotiations. Moe Mark of New York City, president of the Strand company; Walter Hays of Buffalo, vice-president; Eugene Falk of Buffalo, treasurer, and Joseph Levenson of Boston, secretary, were present in Albany when the purchase was made. The building was formerly the City Hall, but has been vacant for three or four months following the construction of a new municipal building. The site is regarded as the best one in Albany, from a theatrical standpoint, being located in the very center of business.

Following the purchase announcement was made to the effect that no time would be lost in razing the old structure and in constructing one of the finest theatres in this section of the state. The company will spend about $500,000 on the enterprise.

The Strand company now operates theatres in Albany and Troy, having the Mark Strand in Albany and the Troy, Lincoln and American in Troy. The construction of another new theatre in Albany by the Strand interests means the biggest kind of a fight with the Buckley theatres, managed by Oscar Perrin, a veteran showman, the Leland, a first-run house, being within 100 feet of the site upon which the Strand will now erect the new house.

PLAN THEATRICAL HOSPITAL

Incorporation papers were filed this week in Albany, N. Y., forming a $2,000,000 theatrical hospital at 2 East 63rd Street, New York City, formerly the town residence of William Zeigler, Jr. Louis Bevier of the law firm of Denman, Bevier and Scotti, 36 West 44th Street, filed the incorporation papers on behalf of Dr. Max Rohde, persons associated with him in the medical profession and others identified with theatrical interests of New York City. It is expected that the theatrical hospital will be in operation within six months.

Ashers, Coston, Karzas in Chicago Booking Circuit

THE long expected combination of the Ascher Circuit, Chicago, and several other of the smaller groups has taken place. Max Ascher, vice-president of the Ascher Circuit, has announced that the Ascher Circuit of fourteen theatres and four new houses building has combined in a booking agreement with the National Theatres Corporation of Cooney Brothers, the Jimmy Coston group of theatres and the Andrew Karzas Circuit of four theatres and two new ones building, under the probable name of the Motion Pictures Theatres Consolidated.

This may not be the permanent name of the new booking circuit and no permanent officers have been elected as yet. These will come at the subsequent meetings to be held during the next week.

The Ascher announcement said that the new booking circuit is a move to protect and increase the buying power of the associated houses, and that the number of theatres to start the new circuit will reach fifty houses, all in Chicago and suburbs. Inside of a few weeks, he expects, the circuit will be increased to more than 100 theatres.

The amalgamation of the Balaban & Katz interests with the Lubliner & Trinz circuit and the later projected deal of the Lynch theatres with the Lubliner & Trinz interests is said to have hastened the formation of the new circuit.

It is expected that the booking offices of the larger circuit will be housed in the Ascher Circuit main headquarters at 509 South Wabash Avenue, and that larger quarters and more employes will be taken on to do the work of the enlarged group of houses in the new circuit.

In a telegram to Moving Picture World, President J. J. Cooney, of National Theatres Corporation of Illinois, says: "Report that this concern has consolidated or merged with any other theatre organization is positively groundless."

Split Impends Between M. P. T. O. A. and Allied Group of the Northwest

Leader Steffes Threatens to Secede if Directors Meeting Isn't Called in Chicago— Woodhull and Cohen Away

AGAIN a split impends between the M. P. T. O. A. and the Allied group in the Northwest. W. A. Steffes, Northwest unit leader and a member of the Board of Directors of the national organization, delivered an ultimatum to National President R. F. Woodhull last week, demanding that Woodhull call a meeting of the board of directors of the association in Chicago not later than July 15 and threatening, if the meeting is not called, to secede and to make public "what happened" at the recent meeting of the finance committee.

Efforts to get in touch on Wednesday with National President Woodhull and Sydney S. Cohen, chairman of the Board of Directors, failed. At the national offices it was said that both were out of town and their whereabouts unknown. Wednesday was July 15 and it was asked if they were in Chicago.

"We do not know where they are," was the response.

Steffes' ultimatum covered three particular points. In the event of President Woodhull's refusal to call the meeting, he said he would ask six other board members to join with him in calling the meeting, to comply with the by-laws stating that seven directors must sound the call if the president refuses to do so.

The Northwest leader also promised to recommend the withdrawal from the national organization of the Allied group and other states "not in favor of politics within the organization."

The third promise was to notify theatre owners of what transpired at the recent meeting of the finance committee.

The session of the finance committee is a secret. All that has been previously known about it is that rumor reported differences between the committee members and an adjournment without the transaction of any business. Steffes is a member of the finance committee.

In the past the Allied group has charged the national organization with playing too much politics and thus interfering with any movements toward real exhibitor progress. Apparently the same "inactivity' now has inspired Steffes' ultimatum.

There is little question but that Steffes controls the confidence and therefore the balance of power among the Northwest exhibitors, that he is in a position to make good his threat to secede the Northwest group, that he can bring influence to bear upon at least a few other groups and that he will, as he threatens, "Spill the beans" about the finance committee meeting.

Boy's Firecracker Saves Receipts

A small boy and a toy torpedo saved Miss Margaret Towers, cashier of the Monarch Theatre, 1443 North Nineteenth Street, St. Louis, Mo., from three bold bandits on the night of June 29.

She was about to turn over the receipts when a small boy outside, who was prematurely celebrating the Fourth, threw a toy torpedo against the front of the theatre. The explosion of the torpedo unnerved the bandits and they fled, leaving all the money behind.

May Put Daylight Saving Up to Referendum

A STATEWIDE referendum upon the question of daylight saving in New York State may be sponsored at the next session of the State Legislature, as the direct outcome of a movement just launched in Syracuse, where Senator George R. Fearon has consented to introduce a bill next January, authorizing an official referendum for that city alone on daylight saving. Now that the movement has been started in Syracuse, it is expected that other cities around the State which have daylight saving and where there has been a serious question as to just how popular it is, will ask for similar measures. If there are sufficient of these cities, or if there is support from the Albany and the Buffalo Zones of the New York State M. P. T. O., there is no question but that instead of having a referendum on daylight saving for one or two cities, it will be a statewide measure and one that will undoubtedly pass during this coming winter.

Independent Producers Plan Tribute to Sydney Cohen

Prominent leaders among the Independent group of producers and distributors in New York are organizing a public tribute to Sydney S. Cohen, chairman of the board of directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. It probably will take the form of a banquet.

The arrangements committee is as follows: Chairman, Samuel Zierler, president of Commonwealth Film Corporation; Whitman Bennett; B. P. Schulberg, head of the company bearing his name; J. G. Bachman, treasurer of the same company; Fred H. Elliott, executive secretary of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America, and Ben Amsterdam of Philadelphia, vice-president of that organization.

Changes in Warner Branches

Sam E. Morris, general manager in charge of distribution for Warner Bros., has announced a number of appointments of exchange managers. E. P. Pickler is now in charge of the Charlotte branch. He is well known in film circles, particularly in the middle west where until recently he was in charge of the Indianapolis office of Film Classics of Illinois.

Paul J. Swift, formerly assistant manager of the Vitagraph, New York exchange, has become manager of the Warner branch office in New Haven. He was at one time manager of A. B. C. Booking Corporation and later held an executive position with Preferred Pictures.

Thomas E. Burke, newly-appointed branch manager in Minneapolis, enjoys a wide acquaintance with exhibitors in the middle west and is known as a sales executive of ability. For the last five years he has been selling Warner product as a special representative of Finkelstein & Rubin.

Modern and Capitol in Providence Go to Emery Chain

The Modern and Capitol Theatres in Providence, R. I., have passed to the control of Alton C. Emery, head of the Emery Amusement Corporation. Thus is the Emery Circuit increased to five houses in Providence. The other theatres are the Majestic, pictures; Emery, vaudeville and pictures, and the Rialto, pictures. The Le Roy Theatre in Pawtucket, while not owned by Emery, is controlled by him.

Max Nathanson, who has been in the theatrical business in Providence for forty years, has sold his entire interests in the Modern and Capitol.

The Modern, closed recently, will be renovated and reopened in August. Martin R. Toohey, assistant treasurer of the Emery company, will continue as manager of the Emery Theatre. Matt Reilly, pioneer Providence exhibitor, who has managed the Majestic, will reopen the Modern as manager. Sol Braunig, who has been in charge of the Modern, will assume the post as manager of the Majestic. The Rialto is in charge of William J. Mahoney and Walter Part is manager of the Capitol. Roger Ferri is publicity manager of all the houses.

Alton C. Emery, head of the concern that bears his name, became an exhibitor in Providence about twelve years ago with one theatre.

EDWARDS—SNOW

A film romance of several years' duration will reach its climax at Christmas in the marriage of Neely Edwards, Universal film comedy star, to Marguerite Snow, one of the screen's earlier stars who returned to pictures recently.

Announcement of the engagement was made by Miss Snow and her fiancee recently. They plan to make the coming Christmas their happiest one by marrying then.

Showmen Protest Led Lesser To Hold West Coast Theatres

LOYALTY to the field in which they toiled as pioneers were the prime factors in keeping Sol Lesser and Gore Brothers at the helm of West Coast Theatres and kept the circuit from annexation by other interests.

With the major share of an $8,000,000 sale offer, the biggest deal of its kind yet engineered, offered them, Lesser and the Gore Brothers decided to retain their hold on the syndicate of 118 theatres whose building up from a modest enterprise has been their life's work.

This admission was made by the principals in explaining their refusal to consummate the deal after Adolph Ramish, associate owner of West Coast had disposed of his interest to Fox.

In their final breaking off of negotiations Lesser and the Gores say they were persuaded by a storm of wired entreaties from exhibitors all over the country. These entreaties strengthened their reluctance to withdraw from an organization which today constitutes a monument to their efforts in developing the exhibition business on the Pacific Coast.

With its 118 links, West Coast Theatres is a bulwark of the independent cause. Ever since its inception, the circuit has been operated on this principle, Lesser and the Gores say, selecting the best product offered and upholding the independent movement through storm and calm.

New ownership arrangements will not affect the conduct of the West Coast chain along the course it has been following say the controlling owners.

Sol Lesser and Abe Gore, who participated in the negotiations with the William Fox representatives in New York, both expressed their satisfaction with the outcome of the deal. In a joint statement issued after announcement of the transfer by Adolph Ramish of his interest they said:

"We are more than happy to have as our partners William Fox and E. V. Richards of First National. An alliance with the strength of these men and their organizations brings added strength into West Coast Theatres.

"We know that perfect harmony will continue to prevail through our new association, and that the expansion program to which we have been holding will go on with fresh stimulus. We regret, of course, the withdrawal of Adolph Ramish, whose support and counsel has been a great factor in forging the West Coast chain.

"You can say for us that we are glad we did not sell out, in spite of the tempting offers held out. The announcement that we planned to sell brought wires from exhibitors all over the country urging us to stick with them. The blood of the showman was in our veins and we couldn't quit them."

Lesser has been a leading figure in the operation of West Coast film theatres since the opening of his first house in San Francisco in 1907.

Incorporations

The motion picture business in New York State, from the standpoint of companies incorporating, still shows evidence of the usual summer slump, this being especially noticeable during the past week when but six companies incorporated and these revealing low capitalization in each instance. Those chartered by the secretary of state during the past few days were: Fameart Attractions, Inc., capitalized at $10,000, with Morris R. and Isaac Weinberg, William Rakoff, New York City; Needle Theatre Corp., $25,000, Morris Needle, Louis W. Osterweis, Michael Bressler, New York City; Donwood Theatre Corporation, $2,000, Thomas E. Donovan, Vincent Paters, Joseph Tierney, New York City; Clearfilm Corporation, Pelham Manor, $10,000, with Leon Wagner, Sigmund Alter, B. Salsman, New York; Associated Animators, Inc., $10,000, Burton F. Gillett, Edgewater, N. J.; Richard M. Huemer, Stamford, Conn.; Emanudi Goldman, New York City; World's Fine Arts, Inc., $25,000, J. Harold Kay, New York; Joseph Lacetera, Brooklyn; Dominick Peparato, Newark, N. J.

Western Pennsylvania Showmen Charge Exchange Carelessness

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania held a grand rally and luncheon meeting at the Hotel Henry, Pittsburgh, at noon on July 8. About forty exhibitors were present as guests of the organization.

Out-of-town exhibitors complained they are receiving their film shipments with excess postage thereon. In some cases, it was said, the postage on the film cans was more than twice as much as was necessary, and these charges the exhibitor has to pay. It was pointed out there evidently is carelessness in the shipping rooms of the exchanges which the managers know nothing about. Accordingly, the organization's Arbitration Board has arranged to meet with the Film Board of Trade and endeavor to effect a remedy.

Fred Herrington, secretary of the organization, made one of his characteristic addresses. Fred scored the "slackers," the theatre owners who sit back and let "the other fellow" do all the work. He stated that a member who has paid his dues has merely done his duty, but the worthwhile member goes out and does real constructive work for the organization. Without him the body could not stand. He praised the work of the Arbitration Board, stating that the members of the board gladly give their time to battle for the exhibitors' rights, and in many cases they win their point for his benefit.

The greater part of the session was taken up in preparing for the celebration of Greater Movie Season. The principal speakers on this event were Lee Riley of New York, representing the M. P. P. D. A.; Harry Davis, of the Harry Davis Enterprises; D. A. Harris, of the Harris Amusement Company, and Milton D. Crandall, of the Rowland and Clark Theatres.

It was announced that Pittsburgh's first-run theatres have underwritten the expenses that will be incurred in putting over Greater Movie Season in the local territory. However, every theatre in Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia is expected to make voluntary contributions to the fund. The money will be expended chiefly in newspapers and on billboards. These advertisements began their appearance in the local territory on July 17. In addition to the billboard stands that the organization has contracted for, the Pittsburgh Billposting Company has donated several stands to the campaign.

Pittsburgh's first-run theatres are the Rowland and Clark Theatres, Harris Amusement Company, Harry Davis Enterprises, Cameo Theatre, Olympic Theatre, Cameraphone Theatre and Loew's Aldine Theatre.

Warner Shows "Something Different"

GOSH, boys, did you see that Warner Brothers insert up front? And, aside from the array of product presented, didn't you get a thrill to see someone stepping out and doing something new and different?

In these days of multi-colored inserts to the point of saturation, of art work and then more art work, of high-speed neck-and-neck competition among top-calibre advertising men, the Warner forty pages deserve a special mention. Watt Parker, Director of Advertising and Publicity, and his assistant, Matt Taylor, and George W. Bonte, artist, have secured a striking result with the use of but one color—black.

There is dignity, strength, clarity and all-around effectiveness to this announcement that measures up to the importance of the message it carries. The insert is a credit to the man who produced it and to the organization whose product it sells.

ROBERT E. WELSH.

OPENS DES MOINES BRANCH

Producers Distributing Corporation has opened a new branch office at 1003 High Street, Des Moines. This is the thirtieth branch in the organization and is in charge of E. J. Lipson, formerly Des Moines branch manager for Associated Exhibitors.

On August 1, Producers Distributing Corporation will open another new branch office in Portland, Oregon.

Balaban-Katz Stock Booming; Near High Record in Chicago

BALABAN & KATZ was active near its high record on the Chicago Stock Exchange last week on pool operations backed by the expectation of higher earnings, due to the opening of new theatres, and on reports of the continued expansion of the corporation in the motion picture field of the Middle West.

Last year the company earned around $5.30 a share on its common stock, but increased business and mergers during the current year are expected to add very materially to this figure, according to sources close to the management. The six Chicago theatres owned directly by the corporation are now showing to about 275,000 people a week. Early in August the new Uptown Theatre is to be placed in operation. This is the largest of the circuit and is expected to show to around 70,000 a week, bringing the local attendance to over 345,000.

In addition to the theatres directly owned, an interest has been obtained in Lubliner & Trinz, who control nineteen theatres and have five more theatres building. A similar co-operative agreement has been effected with the Kunsky Theatre Enterprises, Inc., which control a number of large theatres in Detroit with a capacity of about 50,000 persons a day.

Two additional ventures appear even more important in regard to the position of the Balaban & Katz group in the picture industry in the Middle West. One of these is the Balaban & Katz Midwest Theatres, Inc., with stock ownership in more than sixty theatres outside of Chicago. The second venture is the Balaban Investment Company, which was organized to handle the Balaban & Katz interest in the Associated First National of Illinois, Inc., the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., Delaware, the Second National Pictures of Illinois, Inc., and the Educational Film Exchange of Illinois, Inc.

Elliott Names Committee to Discuss Equitable Contract

AT the New Jersey exhibitor convention President Joseph M. Seider nailed Frederick Elliott, managing director of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America, to a pledge that his organization would within two weeks appoint a committee to confer upon an equitable contract. Now Mr. Elliott writes R. F. Woodhull, president of the M. P. T. O. A., that he has fulfilled this promise.

The letter follows:

"In accordance with my promise to you and your associates at the annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey, held at Asbury Park on June 29, I desire to advise that this association at a meeting held on the 8th inst. appointed a Conference Committee of three members to confer with a similar committee from the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America on the question of a new uniform-equitable contract fair to all parties concerned. This committee consists of Oscar Neufeldt, De Luxe Films, Philadelphia; Jack Bellman, Renown Pictures, New York, and Joe Klein, Chesterfield Motion Pictures Corporation, New York.

"Upon receipt of advices from you of the appointment of your committee, I will be glad to confer with you regarding arrangements for a joint meeting in New York at a place and date to be mutually agreed upon. I am forwarding a copy of this letter to Sydney S. Cohen, chairman, Board of Directors, M. P. T. O. A., also to Joseph M. Seider, chairman, Arbitration Committee.

"With assurance that it is my pleasure to convey the report of the action taken by our association, and trusting that the conference will be productive of an equitable agreement, of mutual benefit to the organizations which we represent, I remain

"Very truly yours,
"FREDERICK H. ELLIOTT."

Hannibal, Mo., Excited Over Proposed Universal Theatre

UNIVERSAL will build a 1,700-seat picture theatre to cost upwards of $250,000 at Hannibal, Mo. Announcement to that effect made by the St. Louis offices of Universal has caused a sensation in St. Louis and Missouri film circles.

"They locked us out of the town," was the explanation at the Universal office.

It is said that an option has been taken on a prominent downtown location as the site for the new house and that construction will get under way in the near future.

At present all of the theatres in Hannibal are controlled by Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Lilly. The houses are the Star, Orpheum, Opera House and a small popular price picture house. The Orpheum, closed for the summer, plays vaudeville and pictur s on Saturdays and Sundays during the regular season. The Opera House has not been operated for many months.

The decision to build in Hannibal is said to have followed unsuccessful efforts to close with the Lilly houses on the Universal product for the new season. The points of contention are said to have been the prices and number of pictures to be used. Negotiations on the new contracts have been under way for some time and resulted in a visit of a special representative from the home offices to Hannibal.

It is said that the Hannibal houses were willing to take some of Universal's Jewels and a large block of the program pictures, but that they wouldn't agree to meet the price set on the film.

State Rights Sales

Louise Auerbach, representing Export & Import, closed a contract last week with Warner Bros. for the distribution in Japan of the entire Warner output for 1925-1926. This includes the Warner Forty comprising the coming year's schedule. The deal is said to involve a record price.

William Skirboll, president of the Skirboll-Gold Seal Productions with headquarters at Cleveland has acquired the territorial rights for the state of Ohio for Henry Ginsberg productions, Banner Productions and Royal pictures.

A branch office of Skirboll productions has also been established at Cincinnati to facilitate shipments and service to exhibitors.

A distribution contract for the release of B. P. Schulberg Production's new program of Eighteen Preferred Pictures in the St. Louis territory, has been signed between J. G. Bachmann, general manager of distribution for the Schulberg organization, and Skouras Brothers, owners of the St. Louis Exchange.

Cohen Asks Exhibitors For Mailing-Cost Data at Once

United States Senator George H. Moses, chairman of the special committee considering the Postal Increase Bill for presentation to Congress next December, has written National President R. F. Woodhull of the M. P. T. O. A. that a hearing has been set for August 3 in New York City. At that time exhibitors will file a brief of objections to a continuation of the proposed increase. Other hearings will be held throughout the country.

In a letter to Moving Picture World, Sydney S. Cohen, chairman of the Board of Directors of the M. P. T. O. A., says: "We are at this time gathering statistics and facts as to the additional cost the increase has caused theatre owners, but it will be necessary for theatre owners to forward us at once data and information as to the effect of this advance in parcel post and mail costs has had on them in the operation of their theatres. Because of the shortness of time, we would appreciate this information being sent to us at once."

Fitzpatrick-McElroy Buy Valuable Chicago Site

Deeds have been executed transferring to Blair McElroy, treasurer of the Fitzpatrick-McElroy Company of Chicago, and to Charles Haas, pioneer business man of Blue Island, three pieces of property located at the main corners of Vermont Street and Western Avenue, Blue Island.

The title, taken in the name of Blair McElroy and Charles Haas, covers all the business frontage on Western Avenue and 150 feet on Vermont Street. The action of all parties represented in the transfer in merging this property into one extensive and substantial holding makes it one of the most—if not the most—valuable piece of suburban corner property in Cook County.

No announcement has been made as to the future plans for the development of this property.

Free Casting Bureau Formed For "Extras" in Hollywood

AT the directors meeting of the Association of Motion Picture Producers held July 15 at Hollywood, it was unanimously decided to maintain and operate their proposed casting bureau for extra or day employees on an absolutely free basis. Specifically, this means that the agents' commission that has been paid by the extra in the past is absolutely eliminated. Heretofore the extra has paid 10 per cent. and upward daily to an agency for securing his position. Under this new arrangement the full amount of the voucher will go to the employee.

The decision to maintain an absolutely free bureau is the result of a long thorough study by the association, a co-operative survey and helpful suggestions from the Russell Sage Foundation, and with the approval of the California State Labor Commission.

This is considered a most constructive step. The economic results of establishing this bureau may be more far reaching than anything yet done in relation to employees. It may wipe out of existence all questionable employment agencies, make-up schools, schools for acting, scenario schools and other pretended agencies preying on a gullible public and giving nothing in return.

The records in the office of the Labor Commission show that in the past ten years eighty-five agencies have been closed because of their questionable methods or have gone out of business through lack of support. This entire matter is in the hands of the executive committee of the association for execution, and in the near future they will arrange for the financing of this bureau and the establishment of its offices.

It is the determination of the producers to make the bureau the office of the extras, and it will be operated on a basis of absolute fairness. It is interesting to note that annually this industry has over 200,000 placements of casual labor, the largest number of casual labor placements of any industry, and these are divided among approximately 30,000 people.

Davis Sensitometer Hailed as Aid to Better Films

Selection of movie films, camera plates, and printing papers suitable to the work in hand is to be aided by an instrument for the testing and standardizing of light sensitive emulsions developed by Raymond Davis, Chief of the Photographic Laboratory of the Bureau of Standards, of the Commerce Department, and known as a sensitometer.

The emulsions with which plates, films, and papers are coated vary considerably in speed and contrast, and in sensitiveness to light of different colors. All of these properties affect the use to which the product can be put. A fast plate or film is needed for recording swiftly moving objects, a contrasty plate for use on cloudy days, a soft plate in brilliant sunshine. Brilliantly colored objects are rendered best by a plate and color filter combination giving the same color sensitiveness as the eye, while in photographing distant mountains or making airplane maps a greater sensitiveness to red is needed.

The Davis sensitometer will permit the exact measurement of all these factors, and the setting up of standards for them. It is, in effect, an instrument for giving a precisely known set of exposures to a strip of the emulsion, and for making these exposures with a light of known intensity and color. The darkness of the exposed strips is measured by means of a photometer to obtain values for plotting curves of the densities. From these curves the speed and other characteristics are obtained.

Philadelphia Critics May Review "Shorts"

The short subject exploitation work recently begun in New York City is spreading to other cities. Abe L. Einstein, director of advertising and publicity for the Stanley Theatres of America, recently was host at a luncheon in Philadelphia to the photoplay editors of the Philadelphia newspapers, to which various exchange managers handling short subjects were invited. Discussion centered around the advisibility of including with the criticism of features a review of the short subjects on the same bill. The critics agreed that it should be done.

The idea of such promotion work was conceived by Gordon S. White, director of advertising and publicity of the Educational Film Exchange, Inc. C. S. Goodman, manager of the Philadelphia Educational Exchange, assisted in planning the luncheon.

NO ACTION ON A. M. P. A. OUTING

Chorus girls, if they be pretty, still have the power of attracting a good attendance of men when they appear. This was again proved at the weekly luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at the White Horse Tavern on Thursday, July 9. The members of the "My Girl" chorus, playing at the Vanderbilt, were brought over by Lou Levenson, noted student of feminine beauty and press agent for the show, and introduced one by one to a numerous and highly appreciative audience.

The guest of honor and principal speaker was Elliott Nugent, youthful stage star and playwright who has recently attained stellar honors on the screen with "Headlines."

There was some talk started by Frank Conklin about a proposed big summer outing and show of the A. M. P. A. at a Long Island resort under consideration for the month of August, but no action will be taken until the matter has been gone over more carefully at a coming closed meeting of the organization.

The session was presided over by Vice-President Charles Barrell, who acted as barker in the absence of President A. M. Botsford.

BUYS CONTROLLING INTEREST IN CIRCUIT

The controlling interest in the Harlem Theatres conducted by Benj. Sherman and Jack Steinman has been purchased by Charles Steiner, Harry Blinderman and Jack Schwartz. Incidentally, Benjamin Sherman and Samuel Freedman will remain on the Board of Directors.

The theatres involved in the transaction include the Harlem-Grand, 125th Street; the Harlem-King, Third Avenue and 126th Street; the Stadium, Third Avenue and 119th Street; the Palace, 122nd Street and Second Avenue, and the Cosmo, 116th Street and Third Avenue.

Canada to Get Full Credit For Locale of Sills Film

Official confirmation that Canada is to receive full credit in the new First National release, "The Knockout," starring Milton Sills, was contained in a letter from Earl Hudson of First National Productions, New York, to Raymond S. Peck, director of the Canadian Government Motion Picture Bureau, Ottawa, portions of which were published in the Ottawa Morning Journal on July 9. This followed the suggestion in Canadian Parliamentary circles that legislative action would be recommended in the Canadian House of Commons if American producers intended coming into Canada for the use of Canadian scenery only to have the story of the picture indicate some other country. Mr. Hudson wrote:

"There is no occasion for anyone to feel any doubt or uncertainty about not only the willingness but the determination of First National to give Canada and that portion of its natural resources visualized in the production full and complete credit on the screen. We feel that the Canadian Government Motion Picture Bureau and its executive staff are entitled to this public expression of appreciation."

DENIES EXPORT AND IMPORT INJUNCTION

Judge Levy of the Supreme Court denied the injunction asked by Export & Import Film Company to restrain B. P. Schulberg Productions from negotiating with other sources for the foreign distribution of the twenty Preferred Pictures for 1925-1926. Export & Import handled the foreign sales of the Schulberg product during the past season and claiming a four years' contract, sought to prevent B. P. Schulberg Productions from offering the new twenty for sale elsewhere.

The affidavit filed last month by J. G. Bachmann, general manager of distribution for Schulberg Productions, answered the allegations by Export with the claim that the contract between them called for yearly options on the mutual agreement to advances based on a fair sales valuation. Mr. Bachmann's claims were upheld by the court's decision.

MOVIE MEN IN REALTY DEAL

Weiss Brothers, operating in concert with Nathan Lamport, Aaron Mintz and Samuel Lesselbaum of the Premier Amusement Company, operating a circuit of motion picture theatres in Brooklyn, N. Y., have bought the 112 acre Hillcrest Golf Course at Jamaica, L. I.

Weiss Brothers with Aaron Mintz and Samuel Lesselbaum have also purchased the old Batterman estate of 82 acres which directly adjoins the golf course. This property has been in the family of the famous Broadway, Brooklyn, merchant for a period of over twenty years.

The purchasers have made comprehensive plans for the complete development of this large and valuable tract. The Batterman estate will be cut up into individual home sites and will offer to the prospective purchaser a marvelous opportunity to participate in a very desirable development under the most modern and ideal conditions.

BUXBAUM GETS DIAMOND RING

Harry H. Buxbaum, the new manager of Fox Film Corporation's New York Exchange, received a fine tribute from his former coworkers in the New York Exchange of First National, of which he was manager until his connection with the Fox company.

As a token of their esteem the employees of the local First National Exchange gave Mr. Buxbaum a diamond ring, to the purchase of which every one in the office contributed.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Port Henry, N. Y., Coal Mines About to Reopen, Papers Say

Things are looking a little better for Lew Fischer, who has a theatre in Port Henry, N. Y., the newspapers announcing that the iron mines there are about to resume full blast. If such proves the case, it will mean hundreds of dollars to Mr. Fischer. For the past year or two, since the mines were closed down, Mr. Fischer, like many another business man in the little village, has gone along hoping against hope and making little or no money.

Little more than mere honor attaches itself to the selection of Fred Myers of the Mark Strand Theatre in Albany as delegate to the state convention of the Knights of Pythias. It's all right to be named as delegate, but not when the convention is scheduled to be held in one's home city. As delegate, Mr. Myers will have to walk just about two blocks to the convention.

The orchestra at the Strand in Schenectady has been dispensed with and an organ is now supplying the music. W. W. Farley, who runs this house as well as the State Theatre, is planning to install a large orchestra in the latter house when the season opens in the fall. Under the management of Mr. Farley, more newspaper advertising is being done in Schenectady these days by the Albany, State and Strand theatres than ever before. Instead of cutting down his newspaper ads for the summer, Mr. Farley has increased them three-fold.

Having completed the repairs on his residence, and with competent help throughout the house, Claude Fish, who runs the American Theatre in Schenectady, doesn't see any reason under the sun why he should spend seven nights out of the week cooped up in his ticket office. All of which is by way of explaining that Mr. Fish was enjoying himself in his automobile last Tuesday night. With summer in full swing in Schenectady, Thursday and Friday nights are better business getters these days than Saturday and Sundays, when thousands are motoring or spending the day in the country.

Miss Margaret Sullivan of the San Souci, in Watervliet, left Saturday for a week's vacation. Sh-h-h, they say that she took the train for Montreal.

Uly S. Hill looms up big in red letters on the banner stretching across the building recently acquired in Albany and which will be torn down and replaced by a $500,000 theatre owned and operated by the Strand interests, of which Mr. Hill is the managing director in Albany and Troy. The banner states that the theatre will be under the personal management of Mr. Hill.

Tom Thornton, who runs the Orpheum in Saugerties, was a welcome visitor along Film Row one day last week, incidentally meeting his relative, Arthur S. Thornton of Williamstown. The Thornton boys are good buyers and no sooner do they arrive along Film Row than the word speeds from exchange to exchange.

It was so hot in Schenectady one day a week or so ago that Miss Betty Feuer, who runs the Crescent Theatre in that city, stood outside of the ticket booth rather than remain in the rather tiny enclosure, where the mercury hovered around the 100 mark. From her position outside Miss Feuer passed out the tickets to the patrons, made the change and tried to keep as cool as possible.

Joe Braff, who is known along Film Row as "alias Mr. Proctor," and who has been running the Lyric in Albany and the Hudson in Watervliet, notified all the exchanges the past week that he had decided to close his houses for the remainder of the summer. There is a rumor to the effect that Mr. Braff is planning to re-enter the furniture business.

Take any warm evening and it's an almost sure bet that Walter Suckno of the Albany and Regent theatres in Albany is enjoying the bathing at Ford's Beach. The dip serves a two-fold purpose, giving Mr. Suckno plenty of pep when he returns in time for the nine o'clock show, and incidentally taking off a few pounds of avoirdupois.

George Cohen, with a chain of houses in Newburgh and Poughkeepsie and a new theatre in process of construction in Newburgh, also runs the Plaza Hotel in that city. All in all, Mr. Cohen is almost as busy as his namesake who, however, is a bit better known.

What do you suppose George Roberts, who used to run the Grand in Scotia and a couple of houses in Rotterdam and Burnt Hills, is doing these days to gather an honest dollar? Nothing more or less than running a gasoline station on the main trunk line near Amsterdam, and so successful has he been that he has erected a new residence nearby. And now comes in the old movie hankering, for he is considering the advisability of running a couple of reels a night for free entertainment of tourists spending the night on free camping grounds back of the gas station and hot dog stand.

E. E. Chase of Pine Plains and Frank L. Asher of Rhinebeck both well known exhibitors in Dutchess county, are busy these days in arranging for the annual county fair. The two have been running the fair for several years.

It's time that Ollie Stacey of the Majestic in Albany searched around and found a rabbit foot. Every time he has attempted to run the fight pictures this year, he has had a bad break with the weather man doing the trick. If it didn't rain cats and dogs on the night the pictures were shown, then the day became so hot that no one came downtown during the evening.

James E. Roach, recently named manager of the three Farley theatres in Schenectady, isn't a newcomer in the business by any means, although he hasn't been seen around Schenectady for several years. Until recently Mr. Roach ran the Idle Hour and the Globe theatres in Kansas City, coming east when he received word that one of his parents was ill. Mr. Roach certainly doesn't belong to any union, even if there was such a thing among theatre managers, for he has been arraving at the State, where he makes his headquarters, at 9 a. m., and remaining until midnight. He is using young men for ushers instead of women, in all three houses, claiming that they can hold their heads in handling a crowd better than women. Frank Hickey is still treasurer of the Farley interests in Schenectady.

Oscar Perrin has booked "The Iron Horse" for a straight two weeks at the Leland in Albany early this fall and may possibly use the picture as marking the opening of his fall season. The last picture to be run for a straight two weeks at the Leland was "Little Old New York."

What's Harry McNamara of Valatie trying to do? Shift some of the work over to Mrs. McNamara? Certainly looks that way, for whenever Mr. McNamara comes to Film Row these days the Mrs. is with him and what's more she carries the book containing the theatre's bookings.

Don't bother asking John Myers, who runs the Star in Schenectady and the Grand in Scotia, in conjunction with his daughter, as to his vacation plans. You will be wasting your breath. In the first place Mr. Myers works during the day as a guard for the Schenectady Trust Company, spends his evenings—and there are seven show nights to the week in Schenectady—at the theatres, and then if he has any time left on his hands gets busy as an organizer and district deputy for the Woodmen of America. There is one satisfaction, however, to Mr. Myers, and that is that both houses are now paying propositions instead of being the white elephants they once were.

George Dwore, who is assisting his father in running the Capitol and Cameo theatres in Schenectady, and who was recently elected as secretary of the Albany Zone, is spending considerable more time in Albany and along Film Row than in the past. Mr. Dwore is well qualified for his new position, and having recently graduated in law brings to the Zone a legal aspect.

It looks as though there will be many exhibitors in town on July 20 for the next meeting of the Arbitration Board. Something like thirty cases are scheduled.

The Loud Pedal

Here's one way in which any theatre should obtain publicity aplenty, providing the organist is willing. The other day Ted Meyn, organist at the Pantages Theatre, Kansas City, snickered at tradition and betook upon himself a permanent wave at a popular downtown beauty parlor. The next day all newspapers were literally "slopping over" with news of the event, the Kansas City Star using a front page column, while the Journal-Post did equally as well.

"If young Mr. Paris of Troy were asked to judge a beauty contest in Kansas City today he probably would pass up the goddesses, Venus, Juno and Minerva, and dump a peck of golden apples into the lap of Ted Meyn, organist at the Pantages Theatre," began the Star's story.

Moving Picture World's exploitation expert, Epes Winthrop Sargent, has no comment other than that the outlook for baldness never was brighter.

Arthur L. Skinner, manager of the Victoria, Buffalo, is spending a week's vacation at his new summer home at Point Abino, near Crystal Beach, Ontario.

The new Palace Theatre which Paramount has leased in Lockport, N. Y., will be opened on July 18.

The Shea Amusement Company has entered into an agreement with Barney Wohwinkle to lease the new picture house which the latter will build in East Genesee Street, Buffalo. The house will seat 1,700. A popular visitor in Ottawa, Ontario, has been Capt. Frank Goodale of White Plains, N. Y., former manager of the Loew Theatre at Ottawa. Capt. and Mrs. Goodale have been spending several weeks in the Northern Woodlands of Quebec for a vacation, but have made several trips into Ottawa to meet old friends. Capt. Goodale, who left Ottawa in August, 1924, now has charge of two Loew houses in White Plains.

The house will have 4,400 seats and represent an outlay of nearly $4,500,000. The Keith-Albee and Famous Players interests will operate the house with a de luxe picture policy similar to the Capitol in New York City.

The Gayety Theatre in Boston has closed for the summer and will be redecorated. Manager Tom Henry will supervise the improvements. Reopening is set for August.

THEODORE ROBERTS RECOVERS

Theodore Roberts "reports for work" at the Famous Players-Lasky studio.

It was just a year and a half ago that the famous actor was stricken in Pittsburgh during a vaudeville tour. Four weeks his life hung in the balance and it was months before he could be removed to his Hollywood home.

Slight gains, followed by discouraging relapses, have featured his illness during the last year but at last he is on the road to full recovery. He declared today that within two weeks he will be ready to resume his place under the kleig lights.

Kansas City

Two columns and a photograph were devoted by the Kansas City Star in a feature story on Milton Feld, former managing director of the Newman and Royal Theatres, who left with Frank L. Newman to become production manager of the Million Dollar, Metropolitan and Rialto Theatres in Los Angeles. The story was a farewell tribute to Mr. Feld, who was born in Kansas City and always boasted to his patrons that he was a native son.

"His friends can rejoice in his finding wider fields in which to exercise his talents, but the Kansas City movie public will miss the tall blond fellow who always kept things running smoothly and produced so many good prologues at the Newman," says the Star.

A three-day inquest in which sixty-seven persons were summoned was begun in Kansas City this week in connection with the explosion and destruction of the Gillis Theatre, combination picture and burlesque house, the other night. Baltis, who filed a petition of 160 property owners in the neighborhood in support of his request, which has been taken under advisement.

The World Realty Co., owning and operating the World, Sun, Moon, Muse, and Express theatres at Omaha, has announced that its big new theatre is to be at the northeast corner of Sixteenth and Douglas Street, on the site of the Bushman Block. This will necessitate tearing down the Bushman Block, one of the old landmarks on a highly valuable corner in the heart of the city. The World Realty Company already has two big theatres on this street, the World and Empress, and this new one will give them three huge picture theatres on the same street and in the same block. It will almost make a solid block of theatres owned and operated by the one concern.

Weinberg and Sacks, operators of picture theatres in Staunton, Lexington and Clifton Forge, have leased the new Virginia Theatre, which Mr. Wine has been operating since 1913. Mr. Wine is the original picture theatre owner in Virginia. He started the first picture show there twenty-one years ago when there were only two in Washington. The seating capacity of his first theatre was only 60, the building being located on West Market street. Later he opened the Edisonia, and following that he conducted the Palace. About twelve years ago the new Virginia Theatre Company was organized.

The site is the center of population for that district and will soon be improved with a fine modern movie house. The record rental is based on an average of over $3,000 a front foot.

The Lincoln Robey Theatre that Mr. Karzas is building on Lincoln Avenue and Robey Street will be ready for opening in October and will seat 2,800. The house is equipped with a large stage capable of caring for the largest acts and presentations, and the equipment is the finest that the management could secure. Recently work was started by the Karzas circuit on a 3,200-seat house for Hammond and the foundation work will soon be ready for the steel structure.

Another new picture theatre is projected for the West Side with the purchase of a site 125 feet by 250 on the south side of Ogden avenue fifty feet east of Crawford avenue. Frank C. EVEN if you have a poor opinion of motion pictures as a substitute for the stage, please go to Orchestra Hall and see "Black Cyclone." If you don't you will miss one of the oddest and most interesting films of the year. It's a great picture.

Horses are the principal players in this swift and spacious show, wherein the human actor serves only to point a parallel and bring up the tail. Hero wild horses play and plot and love and hate and fight and win, even as man in the melodramas. Here horses are as romantic as members of the Lambs Club, with all the chivalries, villainies, passions, treacheries and loyalties of their two legged brother—only presented horsily. It is a novel and fascinating picture show, and I feel that before the week is old it will be the topic of 5,000 dinner talks.

THE ebony stallion Rex is star of "Black Cyclone," and what a star is Rex! If ever "Hamlet" is filmed with an all-stable cast, I am for Rex as the Prince of Denmark. Rex has his Hamletish moments. In this piece—moments of lurking fear and receding courage, as when the bullying black-and-white stallion called the Killer has beaten him hoof to hoof and tooth to tooth, and made away with his mare, the gray and slightly placid Lady.

It takes time, and a little of the melodramatic taint of man, to screw Rex' courage up to the point where he will tackle the Killer and win back his Lady. And the time is all spent for your credence and pleasure, causing you to feel that Rex behaves as no ready-made leading man, but according to a definite equine psychology. It is easier to believe Maeterlinck's account of the stallions that were mathematicians after you have seen Rex play "Black Cyclone."

REX deserves a good notice, and I am doing my best by him. He needs it. Somebody gave him and his fellows a most unkind cut in Variety, saying, if you please, that they weren't horses at all, but only clever German toys magnified!

Now, if Variety had said that about the human beings who are occasionally employed in this picture, we might let it pass. But Rex a toy like one of the manufactured monster's in "The Lost World"! Well, if Rex isn't real, John Barrymore is a marionette and I am a typewriter

Good morning!

Everybody's going to say it, so I might as well travel right along with the crowd—Rex, the handsome horse star on the screen at Orchestra hall, acts with almost human intelligence.

He's a great, big beautiful black—the ebony wonder that made "The King of Wild Horses" a picture to talk about. Patient and continuous training has made of him even a more smooth and resourceful actor than he was in his first film, and in "The Black Cyclone" he hands you thrill after thrill.

Such a long legged, wistful-eyed colt he is when you first see him, ambling over the Wild Lands with his mother! A big rattlesnake gets busy and Mother is no more. The baby stands alone in a great big world that seems to be getting bigger every minute.

Timidly he essays to join a herd in the valley below, but the leader of the mares, a powerful paint horse with a pale, cold eye, doesn't want any weaklings to bother over and he shows the little black baby a pair of heels that send him scurrying up the hillside.

From then on Rex shifts for himself. He gets older and wiser. Such small mishaps as what happens to him when he tries to get honey from some bees before the bees are through with it teaches him to think before he acts.

He grows up into a sheik of a horse and has no difficulty at all in winning the Lovely Lady for his bride. He has trouble keeping her, though, for The Killer has also seen her and thought her fair, and The Killer is no rival to sneeze at.

Rex's affairs of the heart become exceedingly dramatic. So do those of the man who saves him from a tragic death, and through the latter part of the film the stories of man and horse are intermingled.

No two ways about it—if you love animals you'll be crazy about "The Black Cyclone." The is something graceful and wild and free at [illegible] ing about it—like a flag in the wind

Preceding the feature is a Grantland Rice sport movie that shows you how the animal stars are trained in Hollywood. There are regular schools for them. Rex is a pupil and you see him at his lessons, with his training. Interesting as the dickens.

BLACK CYCLONE GREAT LOVER AMONG HORSES

By ORLANDO NORTHCUTT

If you have a hankering to see a motion picture that is out of the ordinary and one that is packed with romance and thrills, glance at "Black Cyclone" at Orchestra hall. It is a horse picture, but it has a human appeal that is irresistible from the first scene to the last.

BLACK CYCLONE

Rex, who performed so creditably as the equine hero of "King of the Wild Horses," is cast as the principal character in "Black Cyclone" and he carries the honors with the aplomb of a matinee idol.

Hal Roach, who wrote the story and produced the picture, has fashioned an intensely interesting romance of a prancing, proud, impetuous wild horse in love with Lady, a lovely dapple gray mare. The humans in the photoplay are merely incidental to the unraveling of the plot.

Rex is left a motherless waif of the hills when his parent is struck down by a rattler. He shifts for himself and eventually meets Lady. It is love at first sight on the part of Rex and he proceeds to win her. He elects himself her protector and the two roam the hills together.

The Killer, the villain—and a mean pinto with a bad eye this fellow is—usually takes what he wants. He takes Lady from Rex. The latter follows her and is caught in the mire of quicksand. He is saved by a cowpuncher and scampers off to find Lady. He succeeds in getting her away from the Killer's herd and they live happily ever after.

Fred Jackman, who directed, has one one of the finest bits of direction for the screen has to offer. The patience he must have exercised to gain the effects that appear in the finished picture is unusual.

The battle between Rex and the Killer, the fight with a pack of wolves trailing the nearly exhausted Lady, the stampede of the wild horses are photographic and dramatic highlights of a film that will unquestionably prove one of the greatest box office successes of the season. It is an animal picture far above the average.

Unprogramed but worthy special mention is the comedy relief, the Pest, a moth-eaten little burro with a cynical expression. He is a clown by right of birth. The introduction of this fellow is a clever bit. "Black Cyclone" deserves the highest praise one can visit upon it.

NEW HORSE OP'RY

"BLACK CYCLONE" IS KING OF FILM THRILLS

By Grace Kingsley

Rex, the wild horse, runs away with film honors on the rialto and at the Rialto this week. "Black Cyclone" is a new thrill for the tired picturegoer.

We are being led slowly, surely, and painlessly to the day when real woodlore and animal lore are going to have as definite a place in film drama as the mushy love story and the slap stick. There are all Kipling's jungle stories and there are the Seton-Thompson tales to be done. What charm they will gain in the filming! Though, to be sure, I don't envy the patient and perspiring directors who have to put the animals through their paces. Why, ever, now the movement is gaining impetus in the revealing of "A Lost World," which opens soon at Grauman's Million Dollar Theater, following the run of "Beggar on Horseback," and which shows the tragedy and comedy in the lives of prehistoric animals.

In the meantime, "Black Cyclone" is making just a bit of headway in the revealment of animal psychology and animal lore. For instance, the human hero knows how to get a horse hero out of the quicksand. And we are shown the mighty fight between two beautiful horses for the leadership of a wild band of equines.

Also in the meantime "Black Cyclone" provides magnificent entertainment. One, never for a moment, sees the human guiding hand. Marvelously beautiful horses (and just the sight of a horse is a treat nowadays anyway) battle for the love of the beautiful mare, Lady. Wolves chase Lady, and the horse hero Rex saves her—bites, kicks, beats off the wolves. Rex kills a wild cat, too. Rex grateful, consents for once to be ridden by the human hero when the latter's own horse is shot under him as he rides to the rescue of the human heroine. The storm and stress of animal conflict runs all through the picture. And even where it is pretty romantic and far-fetched, it still has fresh thrill and appeal, especially as all the action on the part of the animals seems spontaneous. I hope that Fred Jackman will undertake to go a bit deeper into animal action and phychology. He is a genius along this line.

Quinn Williams, Kathleen Collins and Christian Frank do all that is necessary to bring out the talents of the equine stars, Rex, Lady, and the Killer. I don't know how they feel about being in these horse operas, but we are grateful to them for lending their talents.

The Moray girls yesterday afternoon were sweetly vocal, except when a bit sharp apparently from nervousness, and were a pr[illegible] stage picture. A Hal Roach kid comedy and other features added to the charm of the bill.

LAUGHING AT DANGER. (5,442 feet). Star, Richard Talmadge. A good stunt and athletic picture; will please an audience that likes that kind. No for Sunday. Town 1,800. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

MAILMAN. (7,150 feet). Star, Johnnie Walker. A picture that should go over well in any theatre, little old, but for a change this sob stuff is fine, and if you get it push it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, ninety per cent. Mining class. Admission 15-25. John Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre (175 seats), Glen Alum, West Virginia.

NO-GUN MAN. (4,522 feet). Star, Lefty Flynn. A very good program picture, one that will please the majority of the people. Sunday, no. Town 1,800. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

RIDING COMET. Star, Yakima Canutt. This was terrible, worse than the first one; if F B O thinks that it has another Fred Thomson here in this star, nothing doing. He may go over, but there is sure lots of room for improvement. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

SILENT STRANGER. (5 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. Nothing more can be said for these westerns; they are all good and have plenty of action. He and Silver King are drawing better each time. Pull all classes, town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

THUNDERING HOOFS. (7,187 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. A picture that suits. Nothing so different only a clean interesting story that any fan should enjoy. Silver King is the best thing yet in horses. Tone, excellent. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Farmers town of 600. Admission 10-25. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre (200 seats), Natoma, Kansas.

THUNDERING HOOFS. (6,915 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. With a better supporting cast, and with the experience Fred has gained, this picture is an improvement over previous ones, and patronage is gradually building up. Silver King acquits himself admirably, and is just as much a drawing card as Thomson. Tone, okay. Perhaps suitable for Sunday. Not a special. Great appeal. Rural class town of 300. Admission 10-30. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York

UNKNOWN PURPLE. (6,950 feet). Star, cast. Seemed to please all right. Enough mystery about it to make it interesting. Draw all classes, town 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

First National

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (9,759 feet). Star cast. A truly remarkable production that made us some real money. The schools gladly get behind this one. Tone. good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Very good audience appeal. Town and rural class town of 1,018. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (9,759 feet). Star, George Billings. Here is a real educational picture. Historically correct to the minute detail. I would recommend it for any theatre. You can boost it. There will be some that do not care for this type of picture, but they won't kick, as they cannot help but appreciate it. As far as audience appeal is concerned this picture appeals to a Southern audience just about as well as the "Birth of a Nation" appeals to the Northern audience. The Southerner of today does not hate Lincoln and will like this picture. Tone, one hundred percent. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Farmers town of 412. Admission 10-25. John C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (9,759 feet). Star, George Billings. Conceded by many to be the best picture we have presented to our patrons, from the standpoint of quality. While it is somewhat long, the scenes are not long drawn out or tiresome. It is decidedly refreshing to be able occasionally to present substantial entertainment of this type that has a decidedly beneficial effect on the industry as a whole, instead of the "frothy" mushy dramas that dull the movie appetite and yet fail to satisfy. Don't be afraid to talk about "Abraham Lincoln." It's there. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Exceptional appeal. Rural class town of 1,500. Admission 10-30. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

AS MAN DESIRES. (7,650 feet). Star Milton Sills. The best South Sea Island story I ever have had the pleasure of using. Best fight of any picture for sometime. Consider it good enough for anyone. Tone, questionable. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Good appeal. Rural class town of 1,500. Admission 10-30. D. C. Kennedy, Electric Theatre (400 seats), Glasgow, Missouri.

AS MAN DESIRES. (7,650 feet). Stars, Milton Sills, Viola Dana. Splendid picture and splendid acting. Believed it pleased everybody. Both stars always draw well. Pull classes, town 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

CHICKIE. (7,600 feet). Star cast. Don't promise them too much on this one. It will get you money at the box office, as so many people have read this in the newspapers, but don't raise your admission on this. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

CLASSMATES. (6,983 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. 'Tis too bad that the story called for the jungle scenes to finish the picture. Not that they are poor, but they detract from an otherwise intensely interesting exposition of the U. S. Military Academy at West Point. It seems that an opportunity to make a really big picture was lost. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. General appeal. Rural class town of 300. Admission 10-30. Charles W. Lewis, I. O O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York

FOR SALE. (7,840 feet). Very pleasing society picture. Fine photography, but the action was too slow for some. However, it's a good program picture. Fair tone and appeal. Maybe for Sunday; no as special. Draw from general class, town of about a thousand. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville. Louisiana.

LOVE'S WILDERNESS. (7,057 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. Undoubtedly the best picture in which Miss Griffith has ever appeared. Here's a photoplay that has been so well directed that it holds the audience spellbound from start to finish; and it has the added qualification of being suitable for low-brow as well as high-brow audiences. Many good comments heard as patrons departed after the show. More like this, Corinne, and your star will never set. Fair tone, very strong appeal. Maybe for Sunday; yes as special. Draw general class, town of about a thousand. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

DANTE'S INFERNO. (5,680 feet). Star cast. This picture is gruesome and repulsive. The acting is good; the sets are wonderful. While it sickened some of the ladies, they all agreed that it was a magnificent production that everyone should see. All of my regulars came out for it and also a big bunch of strangers showed up. The paper is good; it is easy to advertise; it got the money. Tone, okay. Good appeal. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw all classes in small town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

DESERT OUTLAW. Star, Buck Jones. About the same as all his pictures—good westerns. Will please where he is a favorite. Personally I do not like him a great deal. Tone, O. K. Good appeal. Good for Sunday but not special. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

GOLD HEELS. (6,000 feet). Star cast. Reports have been fairly good on this picture but I found it to be for me the first bad picture from Fox this year. It was all old stuff to my bunch. Even the horse race was just a horse race. Tone, okay. Appeal, none here. No as special. Draw all classes, small town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Straight From the Shoulder has achieved, besides exhibitor confidence, another thing of which it is mighty proud—and that is exhibitor loyalty!

The boys don't forget the reports even this time of year when a fan is mightier than a pen.

Some theatres are closing, and that lays a heavier burden on those houses which are still running.

And Roy E. Cline voices the exhibitor spirit when he writes:

"Van, In looking over the reports in the last issue, it looks like some of us old-timers are laying down on the job, which will not do!

"So—here is a batch to make up. JUST BECAUSE THE WEATHER IS HOT IS NO REASON TO QUIT SENDING REPORTS."

The old-timers aren't laying down in most cases; some are running one day instead of three—or two instead of six.

But if—like Roy—everybody will send in "a batch"—shorts as well as features, they're important parts of the program!—we'll not fall down. VAN.

CHEAPER TO MARRY. (5,921 feet). Star, Lewis Stone. A very good story of the jazz age which, however, has no drawing power in a small town. Acting of cast good but they simply do not draw. Tone, O. K. Fair appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

ETERNAL STRUGGLE. (7,374 feet). Star, Earle Williams. A good one; picturing some daring stunts; plenty of pep to this. Draw rural class, town 850. Admission 10-25. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (190 seats), Crofton, Nebraska.

HAPPINESS. (7,700 feet). Star, Laurette Taylor. This is a very good picture. Tone and appeal good. Yes for Sunday; a fair special. Draw rural class, town 850. Admission 10-25. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre, (190 seats), Crofton, Nebraska.

NELLIE, THE BEAUTIFUL CLOAK MODEL. (7,000 feet). Star cast. Good picture, pleased a hundred per cent. Full house. Metro-Goldwyn usually pleases audiences. Good tone. Yes for Sunday, no as special. J. J. Parker, Cozy Theatre (200 seats), Merom, Indiana.

RENO. (7 reels). Star cast. A very good modern drama. If you can get them in it will please. There is action, comedy, and good information. For the small town is just fair. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Hardly suitable for special. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Mining class. John Cleva, Enterprise Theatre (175 seats), Glen Alum, West Virginia.

ROUGED LIPS. (5,150 feet). Star, Viola Dana. This is a dandy program, which they do not charge a fortune for. Good tone, fine appeal. No for Sunday, yes as special. Draw rural class, town 850. Admission 10-25. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (190 seats), Crofton, Nebraska.

SINNERS IN SILK. (5,750 feet). Star cast. We received 5,000 of the advertised 5,750 feet of this picture. It certainly turned out to be a lemon. Any more like this we will have to close up for good. Business bad enough without getting junk like this. Tone, rotten. Sunday, no. Special, no. No appeal. Working class, town of 2,800. Admission, 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

SNOB. (6,513 feet). Star, Conrad Nagel. Good program picture, and well received by the audience. No complaints, no boosts. Box office medium. Just an ordinary picture. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, fifty per cent. All classes, town of 6,000. Admission, 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

SOCIAL CODE. (5 reels). Star, Viola Dana. Just a very ordinary program picture. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, sixty per cent. Farmers and town class, town of 800. Admission, 10-25. Firkins & Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

SO THIS IS MARRIAGE. (6,300 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Nice little program picture of domestic type. Everybody seemed to like it: no complaints and box office very fair. Metro pictures average better for us than the rest of the big three. Good tone. Appeal, ninety per cent. No for Sunday or special. Draw general class, town 6,000. Admission, 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre, (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

SO THIS IS MARRIAGE. (6,300 feet) Star, Eleanor Boardman. Some said "great" while others wanted to know when Tom Mix was coming again. My patrons are getting tired of this high life stuff; the colored scenes in this are beautiful and the acting is good. New print. Special—maybe. Audience appeal divided. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

THREE AGES. (5,500 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. This was good, though a few could not see the point. Tone and appeal fair. Yes for Sunday, fair special. Draw rural class, town 850. Admission 10-25. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (190 seats), Crofton, Nebraska.

WIFE OF THE CENTAUR. (6,586 feet). Star, John Gilbert. A good program for a high class audience. Pringle and Gilbert both liked here. Wouldn't class the story as anything wonderful but suits, of course, a certain class of patrons. Picture doesn't mean much to the average person. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, sixty per cent. General class, town of 3,600. Admission, 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Farmers and town class, town of 800. Admission, 10-25. Firkins and Laws, Crystal Theatre (200 seats), Moravia, Iowa.

Paramount

ADVENTURE. (6,602 feet). Star, Tom Moore. Very good south sea island story and as the name implies there is plenty of adventure and action in it. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. Mixed class, town of 1,800. Admission, twenty-five cents. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

ADVENTURE. (6,700 feet). Star, Pauline Starke. Above the average program. Plenty of action. Seemed to please. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Small town class, town of 1,000. Admission, 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

All Zane Grey's pictures are great and this one is no exception. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, fine. All classes, town of 3,000. Admission, 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

BORDER LEGION. (7,045 feet). Star cast. A very interesting western picture. Name has quite a bit of drawing power. It's entertaining. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Town and country class, town of 7,800. Admission, 10-25. Herbert Tapp, Hippodrome Theatre (460 seats), Sheridan, Indiana.

CODE OF THE WEST. (6,777 feet). Star, Owen Moore. A dandy Zane Grey story, well produced with real action. The fire scenes are especially good, although Constance Bennett wasn't very convincing. These wild and wooly flappers always seem out of place in the vast open spaces where a man's a man. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

CODE OF THE WEST. (6,777 feet). Stars, Owen Moore, Constance Bennett. A western romantic comedy-drama that will please most anywhere. Good print; flashy paper. Mean weather made receipts look sick. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

COMING THROUGH. (6,522 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. A very good picture but not not as good as some of his previous pictures. The ladies don't take to Tom in overalls. He is too good an actor for rough and tumble work. Box office fair. We ran it special. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special yes. Appeal, seventy-five percent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

Welcome Odell

Mr. O. G. Odell, of the Odelphi Theatre, Hughesville, Pennsylvania, sends in tips with this letter:

"I certainly like these tips and would have been sending in tips myself but I am a poor hand at that kind of business (you won't agree when you see his tips, Ed) and I do hate to write letters.

"Putting it off to the very last is the only reason that I have not sent in tips.

"Here are some; you can add such items as may be left out of some, such as size of town, etc."

Glad to. And mighty glad to see friend Odell coming in.

Better late than never!

ANYBODY ELSE?

DANGEROUS MONEY. (6,864 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Went over okay. My patrons like Bebe and they sure complimented this one. Didn't hear a single kick. Something unusual. Town of 4,000. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

DRESSMAKER FROM PARIS. (7,080 feet). Star cast. Patrons talked about this picture more than any in a long time. It seems to me that some one in the department surely slipped up on this one, because they failed to call it a "special" but it is better than any I have played from Paramount in a long time. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. All classes town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. J. E. Lewis, Everett Theatre (800 seats), Middleton, Delaware.

FEET OF CLAY. (9,746 feet). Star cast. Very good sex picture. Too much procession of the departed souls in the last two reels outside of that it was good entertainment for those that like that sort of picture. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fair appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20-10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

EMPTY HANDS. (6,976 feet). Star, Jack Holt. A picture of many good points, ruined by a mess of fast living, petting parties, scanty clothing and suggestive scenes. The type of flappers that patronize Mrs. Maxwell's daily columns will rave over this. If you are laboring, with pictures like "Abraham Lincoln," to build up good will of decent people, lay off "Empty Hands" for it will tear down in one showing the accomplishment of weeks of up-building. With me, "Empty Hands" was empty seats, and I was glad of it. Village and rural class, town 400. Admission 15-25. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

ENEMY SEX. (7,861 feet). Star cast. Did not think much of this one as it was too long and draggy. Story not much as it has no meaning. Do not promise anything for this. Tone, questionable. Not suitable for Sunday. Special, no. No good appeal. Rural class town of 1,500. Admission 10-30. D. C. Kennedy, Electric Theatre (400 seats), Glasgow, Missouri.

FEMALE. (6,176 feet). Star, Betty Compson. A fair program show. Compson was good drawing card but we lost fifteen dollars on this show. We are closing down on Wednesdays during July and August. No business. Tone, fair. Special, no. Fair appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

FIGHTING COWARD. (6,501 feet). Star cast. A fine picture that was enjoyed by the few that saw it. Did not do film rental at the box office. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, very good. Town and rural class town of 1,028. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

FLAMING BARRIERS. (5,821 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. A good little action picture that we are glad we played. Did fine at the box office. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. Town and rural class town of 1,028. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

GOLDEN BED. (8,584 feet). Star cast. A real honest to goodness picture. Suitable for any house big or small. Bad title as it does not mean anything to picture. Buy it and step on it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. Rural class town of 1,500. Admission 10-30. D. C. Kennedy, Electric Theatre (400 seats), Glasgow, Missouri.

HUMMING BIRD. (5,577 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. A mighty fine picture and the star does great work. It flopped at the box office, and yet we are glad we played it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Very good appeal. Town and rural class town of 1,028. Admission 10-25. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre (175 seats), Vermont, Illinois.

MANHATTAN. (6,415 feet). Star, Richard Dix. A mighty fine combination of box office and audience picture. A little old but a ringer just the same. Glad to recommend this. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fine appeal. Average American class town of 1,200. Admission 10-40-50. E. L. Wharton, Orpheum Theatre (335 seats), Glasgow, Montana.

MERTON OF THE MOVIES. (7,655 feet). Star, Viola Dana. This seems to be a little above the heads of a small town audience. It is not very entertaining. It is not even a good program show. Tone, good. Not a special. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

NIGHT CLUB. (5,721 feet). Star cast. A big time comedy with Griffith doing stunts as funny as any Chaplin or Lloyd ever attempted. It gets a laugh all the way and has a cast that helps make a real story, particularly Vera Reynolds who makes up as one of the best looking little ladies of the screen. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star cast. A real picture which pulled strong and pleased after they came. Better than "Covered Wagon" in every way but box office. Good tone. Appeal, a hundred per cent. Yes, both for Sunday and as special. Firkins and Laws, Crystal Theatre, Moravia, Iowa.

TOO MANY KISSES. (6,750 feet). Star, Richard Dix. One of his best; full of good comedy. Dix is a comer, in my opinion. Give him the stories and he will do the rest. Tone, O. K. Good appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as UNGUARDED WOMEN. (6,051 feet). Star cast. A good Saturday night program. Well liked by all. Film okay. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. Rural class town of 850. Admission 10-25. Helen Drexler, Star Theatre (195 seats), Crofton, Nebraska.

WAGES OF VIRTUE. (7,083 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Was considered here a very poor and illogical picture and a vehicle unfit for the star. Had many kicks from patrons who otherwise are followers of Miss Swanson. Played the picture at a loss. City of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND. (6,700 feet). Star, Jack Holt. A good picture and pleased nearly all. Outside of "The Hunchback," this picture brought me more money than any other picture this year. Good appeal; yes for Sunday. W. A. Simon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Fromberg, Montana.

WORLDLY GOODS (6,085 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. Fair entertainment. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, seventy per cent. Small town class town of 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre 249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

Special, no. Good appeal. All classes town of 1,800. Admission 10-25. Miss Zelma Campbell, Colonial Theatre (450 seats), Moulton, Iowa.

DYNAMITE SMITH. (5 reels). Star, Charles Ray. This boy seems to have lost all his drawing power; pulled the smallest crowd we've had in a week. Story weak; interpretation of leading man unconvincing. Will know better next time. Fair tone, appeal fifty per cent. No for Sunday or special. Draw all classes, town 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre 600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

ANOTHER MAN'S WIFE. Star, James Kirkwood. A picture with a good hour's entertainment attached of which there are very few nowadays. Something just a little different, not spicy as the title indicates. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Working class town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (205 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

CHARLEY'S AUNT. (7,245 feet). Star, Syd Chaplin. Paid a big stiff price for this, but my, how they did come and laughed. Small town class and farmers town of 1,800. Admission 10-30. R. Kuhn, Kuhn Theatre (250 seats), Lebanon, Oregon.

FOOL'S HIGHWAY. (6,800 feet). Star, Mary Philbin. One of the rottenest pictures and about five years old on the market. A few like this one and would have to close the theatre. Consider it a great deal better than the average program picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre, Jewett City, Connecticut.

K, THE UNKNOWN. (8 reels). Star, Percy Marmont. Fair program but too long. Name didn't mean anything at the box-office. This hospital stuff is very poor picture material. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. LAST LAUGH. Star, Emil Jannings. Splendid acting by star, but that's about all. Did not please and was not appreciated. Number of people walked out during show. RECKLESS AGE. (6,954 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Would not class this as an extra production and far from being as good as "Sporting Youth." Picture failed to get us the business we were expecting and almost fell flat second night. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, sixty per cent. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

A MINIATURE RAILWAY PLANNED FOR THE SIGNAL TOWER

Designed by Dave Morrison, of the Rex Theatre, Creely, Col. The train ran into a tunnel on the right and emerged from under the still panel on the left, and as usual it made no end of comment, particularly as the scene was so well made.

Here's a Good Stunt on Raymond Griffith

E. B. Roberts changed an old one slightly to put over Raymond Griffith in The Night Club at the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas.

He was giving a midnight matinee to put over the new star, and he played up an offer to admit free any man wearing a high hat such as is used as a trade mark for Griffith.

Although June in Texas is not conducive to high hat wearing, a lot of men turned out, glad that it was a midnight matinee and not a noonday showing. The entire crowd was interested and as each silk hat wearer came down the aisle he was the subject of much conversation. It will work on any Griffith picture.

The lobby was a Spanish inn similar to that at which Griffith met the fiery dancer. It was good atmosphere and helped to sell the play because it looked cool. A lighted six-sheet cutout of the star was one of the lobby decorations.

Here's a Vet

For Zander the Great at Loew's Palace theatre, Memphis, a number of stunts were used, including the one-piece coat and suit hanger "such as was used in the days of Zander the Great."

It has been some twelve years since this idea was first reported to this department from West Point, Ga., and it has been in almost constant use ever since. Nothing we ever dig out seems to have enjoyed such lasting popularity.

Pergola Box Office Gets the Patrons

Appreciating the value of cool suggestions, George B. Peck, of the Strand Theatre, Tampa, Fla., and city manager J. B. Carroll, worked out a pergola effect for the Strand lobby that has all of the value of a lattice and costs much less to build in a wide lobby, such as the Strand.

The box office is completely enclosed in a lattice, with trailing vines, and the lobby cards are painted to conform to the design.

In the case of the Strand a scenic backing has been added that completely covers the back wall, but a few festoons of colored paper will give much the same effect if the painting is too costly.

The main point is to make the box office look cool and inviting. No one likes to hand amusement money into a stove these warm days. Lattice the box office if that is all you can afford to do.

Sold a Sale

One of the real helps to The Crowded Hour at the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., was a Crowded Hour Sale, when special bargains were offered at one of the stores, bring crowded counters for the crowded hour. H. C. Farley generously contributed a set of slides in return for the lavish advertising, in and out of the newspapers, done by the store. He felt he could afford to.

Well, Which?

E. D. Turner used a clever interest ad for His Supreme Moment at the Imperial Theatre Asheville, N. C.

He used a number of single threes, scattered, reading: "What is the Supreme Moment? Is it the second before, a second after, or during? See His Supreme Moment, Imperial Theatre."

But he doesn't say what the final decision was. Personally we would vote for all three.

Handed Schedules

During the run of Up the Ladder at the Piccadilly Theatre, New York, a girl in a baseball suit handed out folders giving the schedule of "at home" games for the three teams representing the greater city in the big leagues. She worked Broadway mornings and evenings and afternoons she handed out the folders at the ball grounds.

The back of the sheet was printed up for the picture and carried the line: "Compliments of Virginia Valli, Universal star."

The Piccadilly must find the street workers of value, for they are used in some stunt on almost every picture played there.

Had No Zem-Zem

Here's a stunt that will be useful for Shrine events. It was used by the Owl Drug Stores, Los Angeles, during the recent session of the Imperial Council there.

Window pasters, ribbon badges and throw-away cards were printed up in red and green on yellow (the Shrine colors), all reading: "Nobles, having no Zem-Zem, we recommend a Chickie Sundae (saucy and spicy), just like the picture Chickie, now playing Loew's State."

Properly Zem-Zem is water from the holy well of that name in the sacred enclosure at Mecca, reputed to be the spring which saved the life of Ishmael, from whom the Arabs claim descent. In the Shrine it is anything to drink, and Zem-Zem is certain to get the Shriner's attention.

Try it when your local temple holds a ceremonial.

ANOTHER GOOD EXPLOIT ON THE GREAT CIRCUS MYSTERY

This was used at the Odeon Theatre, Canton, O., for the first issue of the chapter play, and was apparently worked by a clown who formed part of the vaudeville bill. Using the exercise wagon gave a fine ballyhoo at no extra cost.

Made a Production in a Lobby Niche

The accompanying cut shows how E. B. Roberts, of the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas, made a fine display at a very small cost for Mme. Sans Gene.

A Paramount Release

THE DISPLAY NICHE

This niche is built into the lobby and sports a small fountain. The water was cut off and the basin filled in with earth, sodded over. The back wall from the base to the gilded arch, which shows black in the photograph, was covered with beaverboard on which a typical landscape was painted and a small stairway was run up to the level, on which was pasted a small cutout of the star in character.

This gave a maximum of effect for a minimum of work and should be suggestive to other managers who have recesses of various sorts in their lobbies.

It will be recalled that Joseph H. Hanley, of the Kingsway Theatre, Brooklyn, makes his spare box office into a miniature stage for big features. This is along the same idea, but gives a more elaborate effect because the frame is larger.

ANOTHER EXAMPLE OF A RAILROAD LOBBY ON EXCUSE ME

This is from John B. Carroll, of the Victory Theatre, Tampa, Fla. It differs from most in that the rear ends of the Pullmans are not elevated. The left hand car bears a legend "Please don't disturb them. They were just married."

Uses Water Glass for Floor Posters

Pasting posters to the floor of the lobby has been a favorite stunt with Edgar Hart for a long time. Others who have tried the idea complain that the posters will not stick to the floor very long.

Edgar writes that the trick of getting the cutouts to stay put is in the adhesive used. The stunt is practical only on tiled floors, as the paste will stick too well to wood, but with tile it is a simple matter to get a poster to stand up for two to four days, according to the weather conditions and the traffic.

The poster is cut out and pasted on the reverse side with silicate of soda, better known as waterglass; a preparation used in preserving eggs for winter use. It generally comes in the form of a powder, which must be dissolved in warm water and should be available at any drug store.

The wet poster is put on a clean tile floor and patted into close contact with a cloth. Then it can be edged with a watercolor design or if you have no artist an ornamental border of wall paper can be used.

For his own house, Edgar bought a headlight from a wrecked Buick for $2 and writes that it works just as well as the more costly spotlights. That's another idea well worth while.

Edgar is hustling along in his new job, running the Colonial theatre, Portsmouth, N. H., and overseeing the other two Grey houses in that town, and he writes he will have more ideas as soon as he gets oriented.

Selling the Goose

Realizing that The Goose Hangs High is not an easy title to sell, Roy L. Smart, of the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala., got after the contest aids.

First he used the origin contest, recommended by the Theatres Advertising Department, and then he wrote one of his own. This was a "family" play, so he arranged with the Star to admit any family attending in a body for a coupon and one dollar, with a prize for the largest bona fide family, parents and children only.

The first prize went to a family of ten. The paper played up the family interest in the film and explained that the title didn't mean anything, and the result was a better business than was to have been expected.

Color Effect

Harry Hardy, of the Alhambra Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., seems to have been the first to use color for Riders of the Purple Sage. He used a compo board panel across the entire top of the foyer, with a six-foot opening in the centre, back of which was a cutout of Tom Mix and two others, taken from the 24-sheet. This was backed by a deep purple drape which was not only cheaper than a painted scene, but more effective through its contrast with the lighter purple of the board banner, on which the title had been lettered. It was striking and yet not at all gaudy and it gave him the best receipts he has taken in in the last six months.

PUTTING THE POSTERS WHERE THEY MUST BE SEEN

trimming the large cut. We believe this is the actual cut and not a trim, it was offered in the smaller sizes. This does not tell much about the picture, which evidently has been sold through other media. It merely gives the announcement of the showing for the opening, and this Directoire costume makes a striking attractor, though it does not suggest the play as well as would a picture of the laundress. But the drawing is striking, and you do not have to explain Sans Gene after the long runs of the play on the stage. This is 135 by 2, and makes a good splash without costing too much. More, it gives emphasis to the fact that Pittsburgh can give much better results than it did a year or so ago. It is only recently that the newspapers appear to have laid in a supply of good small faces, and it is well to remember that Milt Crandall set the pace by buying his own fonts in order to get just what he wanted. This created a demand the newspaper had to meet, so it really was Milt who dragged Pittsburgh amusement advertising out of the sub-cellar.

Second Week Ad is Better Than First

Although Fox's Terminal Theatre, Newark, put out a very nice display for Charley's Aunt, it was not as good as that for the holdover which is shown here. This is a little more than a four tens; larger than the usual space, but worth it to put over a business bringer. The two panels are the best sellers. Both are all written and read convincingly. There are several kickers in other parts of the space, but these two alone could have sold the second week. We like the moderate use of cut material. Cuts do not help materially, and a single cut is as good asa dozen. The big fact is that the comedy is still as funny as it was years ago, and this is what can be put over in type more effectively than in cut. One cut for an attractor is ample on this play. The big thing is the title. That is what sells, and it has been selling to the limit limit everywhere. The best line gets the smallest type. This is just above the title and runs: "The funniest farce the world has ever known. The funniest picture the world has ever seen." This is set in two sections, gaining strength through this simple device. Set as one running statement it would not have half the farce. You can see how this was done, though the lines will be too small to read.

Uses Full Cut to Tell About Sally

Generally Frank H. Burns, of the Beacham Theatre, Orlando, Fla., trims his cuts to get his white space, but he uses the entire First National three-column cut on Sally in this three nines. He did so much advance selling on this picture that he does not require much selling copy, but he does hook to his song-campaign in two small banks, and lets the cut do the rest. This example is interesting because most managers who use First National cuts seem fairly to wedge them in with type. Mr. Burns shows that the cut and little else can be made to sell. Tastes differ, but personally we do not particularly like that dirty faced kid. It's Sally in her early reels, but it is not the Sally of the bulk of the play, and it isn't Colleen Moore; at least not the Colleen Moore most of us like best. It really is not the Colleen Moore of Sally, for her make-up is not so pronounced as it necessarily is in the drawing. There is less type with this than with any First National cut we recall seeing used, and yet it goes over as well, if not better. Why not try the experiment of lay off the excess of words and let the illustration do some of the work? It can. It worked for Burns, though he backed this production with an unusual campaign because he wanted to get unusual results.

Jazzy Cut is Good for Melodrama Sale

There is a comparatively poor display for the title in this stock cut for Head Winds, used by the Hippodrome, Cleveland, but the title does not matter much with such a cut. That illustration is going to sell you to the point of looking for the title, if you are interested in the cut, and if the cut does not interest you, the title won't sell anyhow. Melodrama sells better on picture than on talk, because the lover of strenuous action responds most quickly to plenty of action in a cut. It is not easy to sell the melodrama lover with words. You have to interest him with pictures largely because the melodrama lover is a moron, and is best reached through the eye than through the mental appeal. This is a flashy cut that serves its purpose well, even though it does drown Patsy Ruth Miller in those cru-el waves. It takes a magnifying glass and a life preserver to bring her name up. It's just below Peters and just above the title, in case you wish to look for it. This is a four column cut and the space drops about seven and a half inches. That reverse strip at the bottom is not worth the cost of the cut, let alone the space, but the rest is well done.

Sells Griffith on Producer's Name

Most managers have sold D. W. Griffith rather than Isn't Life Wonderful, appreciating the fact that the name means a great deal more than the title. The Stillman Theatre, Cleveland gets a strong letter for the name and singing the title into a reverse which backs a purely conventional figure. This is only about half the display, for the ad drops well down the page, the remainder being given to the announcement of the supporting items. This is the essential section of the space and it works out very nicely. There is not much to the picture to sell and the reference to the earlier successes is better selling copy than talk about the potato tragedy, and we think that Mr. Malaney has handled his selling problem very cleverly.

Good—and Cheap

Something new, good and cheap was worked for Buster Keaton in Seven Chances when the comedy was played at the Allen Theatre, Akron, Ohio. A man and girl boarded the street cars, the man carrying an ear trumpet. The girl shouted into the receiver that she was sure they were on the wrong car to get to the Allen to see Buster, and she had to shout so loud that even pedestrians could hear her.

They always were on the wrong car, so they hopped off again. Evidently Akron does not use pay-as-you-enter cars or the stunt would be rather expensive.

WELL MATCHED

The cuts suggests action the centre sells the players and the panel at the right puts the title would then have come with more of a story in its most inviting light and in very few words. It packs a lot of punch in a space about 9 1/2 inches by three. The three lines at the top are not so good. It would be better to use some other appeal than a sentence working in the title. This weakens the subsequent announcement of the title. punch, but you cannot use it conversationally and then bounce it over. It's the same psychology as holding back the name in an introductory or nominating speech. You do not nominate John Jones and then tell what a wonderful fellow he is. You first tell all about a near-superman and then for the smash tell that that's John Jones. Apart from this the text and copy and display are all close to par. But try and vision how much more display you could have given the star without those three all cap lines to wrestle with.

Ruff at his best. The fine pen sketch of a horse's head, from the press book, gets the attention, thanks to the ample white space. The brief text sells well, and is in the vein of the track with "five races daily." It is all unified and carries a stronger appeal than would be the case were the entire space filled with supposed selling appeal. We do not know of anyone better able to sell on short copy than Ruff, but he does not just sit down and dash off the line or two which does the selling. The apparent impromptus are the result of long deliberation. He uses so few words that he knows they must carry the fullest appeal.

Here is a good idea from H. G. Griffin, of the Plaza Theatre, St. Petersburg, Fla. He has a truck perambulator which is a framework over which white cloth is stretched. The design and lettering is sketched in black on the white surface, which not only makes a good daylight sign but at night it can be illuminated from inside and gets twice the attention.

THE FIRST RUN

PRESENTATIONS – PROLOGUES – MUSIC

Edited by Colby Harriman

MARK STRAND PRESENTATIONS AT HOSPITAL

JOSEPH PLUNKETT'S presentations are practically exclusive productions, being for, by and of the Mark Strand Theatre, New York City.

Recently, Fred Hamlin, who controls the publicity destinies of that theatre, showed us a letter he had received from the General Medical Superintendent of Bellevue Hospital in which was written:

"I am under great personal obligation to you for all you have done to help make things go here at Bellevue. You can never know just what the various entertainments you have brought down here have meant to the patients and to me. I can truthfully say no other entertainment has contributed as much pleasure and comfort to our people as yours."

Presentations seen on Broadway transplanted to the roof of a hospital, where in the floodlight of smiles and beaming eyes, the dances, the music, the comedy, the novelties, are reenacted before one of the most appreciative of audiences.

This is a most commendable thing. Mr. Plunkett and Mr. Hamlin have set an example which every other producer can well afford to follow. Every city has its hospital with its crippled and unfortunates, who are unable to leave their beds or chairs, and bringing the amusements which the great masses enjoy to those whose hearts are yearning for the freedom will gain a goodwill for the theatre and its producer which cannot be reckoned.

Too often we cling to the mercenary angle. We become so enmeshed in the web of materialism, in competition, in our economic rush that we forget about the happiness of others with the exception of those "who paid to get in."

The attitude taken by the Mark Strand producer is one of commonsense fraternalism which rises above the plane of charity. It also can strike a sympathetic chord in the great heart of the community which will rebound a hundred-fold in manifestations of good willl. It is the opportunity to prove the producers' position as a civic influence. Above all comes that spirit of genuine brotherhood which the theatre can reflect in so many ways.

Isn't it one of the real things after all, one of few tangible things in the Great Scheme of Life in which we can play a part. It is the Golden Rule plus.

THE NEW POLICY AT THE RIVOLI

BEN BERNIE came, saw and conquered the Rivoli audiences. The new policy at the Rivoli Theatre, New York City, seems to have made a popular introduction, and judging from the comments in the local press and the crowds at the de luxe performances, the orchestra has made an instantaneous hit as an attraction at "the coolest place in town."

Aside from the elimination of the regular symphony orchestra (which, by the way, has been one of Broadway's best musical aggregations,) the substitution of a group of youthful syncopation experts under the leadership of Bernie, whose personality makes up for much—there is nothing extraordinary in the innovation.

The idea is an excellent one for a limited period—such as the summer months—but the routine of orchestra numbers worked both in the pit and on stage which are prefaced by humorous remarks by the leader cannot be claimed as an original idea as certain western theatres have previously used this routine during special weeks.

However, there is an informal note dominating the conduction of the program which is refreshing. The house lights are kept on full, and the atmosphere of a "big party" is evidenced. This is about the only way a revue program can be put over in a motion picture theatre.

The excellent campaign which has been waged to publicize the orchestra is bound to attract the public and for a time will bear fruit, but judging from audience comment, and certain solicited opinions, we fear that it will prove monotonous if it becomes a regular weekly attraction. There is not sufficient range in which diversity can be marshalled, as it represents only one type of entertainment, and diversity is the keynote in any successful picture house program. It appears that the old established form developed in our best theatres, which includes the Rivoli, will attract more people consecutively if properly sponsored. We may be wrong, but we believe we are right, as theatrical history has raised many guide posts—and there are many tomb stones.

However, Dr. Riesenfeld is to be congratulated for his showmanship in the methods he has employed in making the change. The featured picture also helps, likewise the nightly change of programs.

Note: A series of weekly reviews on valuable books to producers and musical directors. We shall be very glad to put you in touch with the publishers of these excellent aids.—Harriman.

INTERPRETIVE COSTUME DESIGN by Rose Netzorg Kerr. The descriptive leaflet which accompanies the three folios constituting this excellent work, contains much which I am taking the liberty of reprinting.

"Cosume design study is fast becoming an artistic necessity. Costume effects are carefully coordinated with modern stage setting and lighting. Costume is an organic part of the dance; it assists the plastic scenery of the pantomime with color and meaningful design. Historic costume reference material in the past has not been accessible to the great number of those who require it. Real costumes of history are housed in private or museum collections. Museums are established only in the larger cities; books and folios being chiefly importations have been too high in price. It is the aim in presenting 'Interpretive Costume Design' to give costume reference which has creative design together with historical accuracy at a price easily within reach of all."

The artist and her publishers are to be congratulated for having effected such an excellent series at a price within the range of all. The portfolios which are of a handy size each plate being printed on a separate leaf in blacks and whites are divided into three groups, the first is entitled "The Orient," in which we have a costume plate of An Arabian Girl, A Desert Sheik, Hebrew Maiden, Judaean Shepherd, Assyrian King, Three Wise Men, Indian Temple

A Greater Movie Season Novelty
"IN THE DAYS OF THE FIRST RUN"
A Moving Picture World Presentation
Devised By Colby Harriman

WITH interest reaching a high pitch, we simply could not let the opportunity go by without contributing another suggestion to producers of presentations, special attention being made to "Greater Movie Season." This department has particularly championed the Greater Movie Season idea insofar as it related to presentations, as we firmly believe that a season of this type makes demands upon producers to devise and present a galaxy of their best ideas and novelties. Surely it is no period for mediocrity.

We have already suggested four subjects for this season, but in reading "The Editor's Views" in the last issue of the Moving Picture World, we found an idea which should be recognized by all producers.

Robert E. Welsh suggested this novelty and we are taking the liberty of reprinting this portion of his editorial to act as an introduction for the suggestion this week. Mr. Welsh says:

"We have just enjoyed a real treat. And with it, come upon what strikes us as the outstanding novelty for presentation as part of Greater Movie Season.

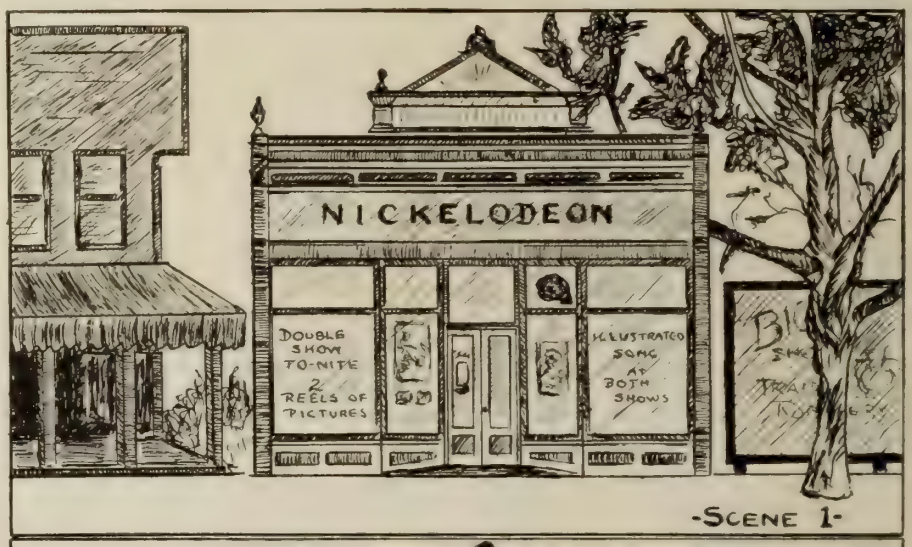
"With the cooperation of those pioneers, Thomas A. Edison and E. S. Porter, 'The Great Train Robbery' and a number of still earlier releases have been combined in a single reel novelty that is certain to arouse no end of discussion during the industry's jubilee celebration.

"Here is ready-made ad copy. 'The first word—and the last word in motion pictures'—a linking up of the short reel novelty to the current features. Here is certain copy for photoplay editors.

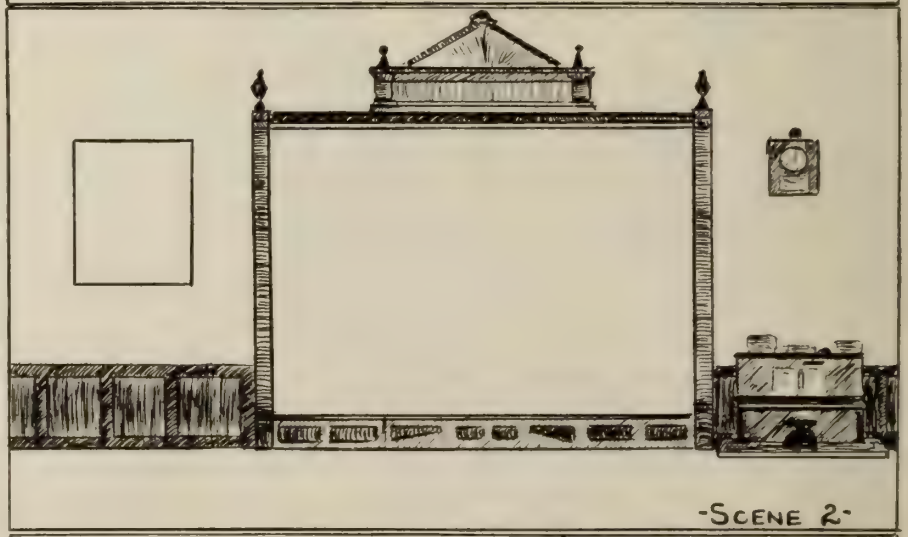
"And, aside from business thoughts, for picture men here is a treat that you don't want to miss. It will bring back many happy memories, give you many a chuckle."

A picture of the type suggested by Mr. Welsh is one which will "bring back many happy memories and give you many a chuckle." We all have memories of the old store front motion picture theatre which was called a "Nickelodeon," "Vaudette," "Original," "The Idea," and similar titles which have long been discarded for more pretentious names, such as "The Capitol," "The Empress," "The President," "Tivoli," etc., but those little insignificant and unpretentious picture houses in the earlier days were the cradles of this industry, now the most dominant in the amusement business today. As a setting for this particular picture which has been suggested, the accompanying sketches present the idea in detail which can be used as a basis for much comedy and will prove a popular feature.

The presentation is divded into two scenes,



-SCENE 1-



-SCENE 2-

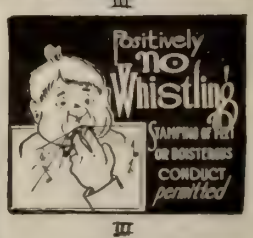

FIG II

The set for the prologue to "Cyrano de Bergerac" at the Colony Theatre, New York City. An effective and colorful feature held over with the picture for a second week. Conceived by Howard W. McCoy, managing director, and staged by J. De Rosa, technical director and Harry Shaw, production director.

an Exterior and an Interior, and the simplicity of the construction plus its compactness makes it available for almost any theatre, as two drops and a framework constitute the principal pieces of its construction.

Scene I. Exterior

This can be painted on a drop which is hung to fall back of the frame which marks the outline of the center building. It is not necessary to have the doors in the center building practical as the action takes place in front of the building.

Scene II. Interior

This represents the inside of the theatre which appears when the Exterior drop is taken away. The back drop which carries a screen may be stationary as it can be screwed to the floor giving the screen a certain tautness. The framework which forms the outline of the building also acts as the proscenium.

Ground Plan (Fig. I.)

A framework consisting of two standards with a cross-piece top and bottom is set in one at dead center. Directly back of the framework is the painted street drop, the opening in the framework being filled with the center decorated scheme of the building. When this is taken away the back drop with screen, which can be on an adjacent set of lines, comes into view, the opening in the frame work being filled with the screen. A small piano on a platform which can be trucked is brought on from left.

Framework

The framework which forms the building outline in Scene I and also used as the proscenium in Scene II should be constructed with two medium pilasters in proportion to the opening, with a cross beam at top surmounted by an ornamental gable which can be constructed of compoboard and fastened to the cross beam. The lower part of the frame should be fastened with a baseboard arrangement. The framework can be pressed to the floor or wires attached and sent into the rigging when not in use.

Painted Drop—Scene I

This drop should be painted in a highly colorful tone to contrast with the drab tones of the Interior. In opening the center of the drop which would carry the signs on the building and the windows, it will be necessary to give particular attention that when the drop is in place back of the frame, that it securely fits, so that no gaps are visible between the drop and the framework. Various signs announcing coming attractions but not of the modern type should be used. A tip of a phonograph horn similar to the one suggested in Fig. II can be attached so that it can clear the framework when taking up into the rigging. Another phonograph off stage can be used to give the effect of the primitive ballyhoo.

Back Drop with Screen

This drop should be painted in very drab colors, a dull maroon with a mahogany baseboard. The screen which will fill the opening of the framework can be placed on the back drop, and the bottom battan screwed to the floor so that the screen will remain taut. A comedy announcement can be placed on the wall right of the screen; a painted clock with a lamp over it should be left of the proscenium directly over it.

Routine

Practically every producer has his own ideas born out of his observation and characters in the early days of the picture business, which can be adapted and incorporated in the action we are suggesting. It is suggested that a character dressed in the small derby, tight-fitting coat and peg-top trousers make-up known as one of the official "dandies" of twenty years ago, enter from right and is met by a couple of girls in wide picture hats and voluminous clothing of that time. A little song can be introduced reminiscent of the yesterdays, such as some of the old-time song hits. The phonograph in the little "Nickelodeon" grinds out a squeaky, squawking tune; the young man suggests that it is time for them to go in and open up the show. There is a comedy dance as they start to exit and a lobsterscope should be used as the lights dim down to cover up the change in the scene. The dance in the flickering light of the lobsterscope will elicit some comedy business, and when the lights come up on the second scene the lobsterscope can be taken off. The young man goes over to the piano begins a characteristic "tin-pan" tune. One of the girls enters from right taking her position right of the proscenium, and sings an illustrated song. This should be in a comedy vein with cartoon slides and titles such as "Asleep In The Deep By Request"; or "My Bonnie Lies Over The Ocean With Variations." The pianist should do a great amount of burlesqueing and prior to the introduction to the moving picture some of the well-known slides are used to be thrown on the screen as suggested in Figs. III. The pianist may introduce some trick sounds with squawker, whistle, etc. Then the picture comes on, "The Great Train Robbery" and if the musician (the pianist) will give to the various scenes particular attention, playing the motifs in opposites, a "hurry" during a love scene and something sympathetic during a fight, a great amount of comedy can be devised. This is something which requires thought and preparation on the part of the pianist, but we are confident that this number carrying with it a review of one of the earliest pictures will attain what Mr. Welsh suggests—"no end of discussion during the industry's jubilee celebration," and "a treat that you don't want to miss."

Review of
"Interpretive Costume Design"

Girl, Prince of India, Woman of India, Chinese Princess and Mandarin, with a plate of head-dresses of the East. The second folio which is entitled, "The Age of Chivalry" has produced in full dramatic reality—the Norman English lady of the 12th Century, and the knight of the same period, then a French knight and lady of the Crusade period; a German maiden of the 14th Century; an English prince of that period; a French court lady, a German lad, a young minstrel, a French peasant—all of the Fifteenth century, a marvellous plate of Joan D'Arc, and a plate of head-dresses of the Middle Ages.

The third folio is one of particular interest as it concerns American costume from 1620 to 1860. It begins with the Puritans in their sober garb, skips to the pre-Revolutionary period then to the later years of the Nineteenth Century and the crinolines that came in later.

We cannot be too emphatic in our recommendation of this group of folios as they represent far more value than the Three Dollars which is the price charged by the publisher. An infinite amount of painstaking in design which necessitated much research is apparent in every plate. Another very valuable aid to a producer.

Music

Overture selections from "Faust" (Gounod).

Albert Rappaport

The debut of this singer is given in a simple but effective setting. An arched drop with scalloped edges hung in one painted to resemble rock. A rock row runs across face of opening upon which a motion picture strip of sea waves is thrown giving the effect of breakers over the rocks. A rock piece on profile is left of center ascending in a steep angle off left. Halfway up a palm tree is seen. A green blue sky drop used for backing with water ripler playing on lower surface. Blue from sides with mixture of amber highlights the singer, who appears in costume and sings "Romanza" from "The Pearlfishers" (Bizet).

An Hawaiian Night

A tropical exterior. Cut drop of palm trees with well-defined fronds and narrow trunks is hung in two against a blue sky drop studded with stars, and at the base a water rippler tinted with purple is visible. The front of a thatched cottage with light green grass, roof and sides is placed right of center. A large canary moon box is left of center. Characters appear in various Hawaiian costumes grouping themselves on stumps which are set in alignment about the stage. Light blue and green support sides with a green flood and amber brought on from the sides to highlight the dancers. The following program constitutes the action:

(a) "Kalua Moon," Mr. Lang and Ensemble.
(b) "Sweet Flower," Messrs. Phillip and Jones.
(c) Hawaiian Dances. Music: "Hilo March," Miss Niles and Capitol Ballet.
(d) Finale: "Sunset Land," Mr. McKenzie, Miss Scheerer and Ensemble.

A Fantasy

This is a number which has been seen before. The setting suggests a dancing studio. A platform is up center upon which a large frame is placed, and Gambarelli in a white ballet costume trimmed with silver poses. Steps left of the painting lead up on to a platform which carries a balustrade leading off left. Dark plush to back. A grand piano down extreme left and an armchair at left of the steps center. A practice rail extreme right. Canary and amber from the sides and foots highlight the dancers who are being put through a routine by a gray-haired instructor. They leave the set at the conclusion of the lesson. A woman brings in a lighted candle; the lights dim down; the old man blows out the candle, seats himself iin the chair, falls asleep. The figure in the painting comes to life, does an exquisite dance and at finale kisses the face of the sleeping man, resumes her original position in the frame. The old man awakens, looks at the frame, sees it was all a dream, exits.

Music

Overture "Scotch Airs"—an excellent arrangement which introduces "Annie Laurie" sung by Emily Day, Coloratura Soprano. Miss Day, dressed in Scotch costume appears seated on a realistic rock wall with a grassy top. Deep blue sky used as backing. Light amber from left, canary from right highlights the singer. The opening which is about 8 ft. is masked and carried off with the regular dark plush closings.

The Man and the Marionettes

Singer dressed in silver coat and silver plug hat made up in the character of an old-time ringmaster appears in front of the house closeins in a light amber spot and sings "A Marionette" (Herbert). Curtain opens revealing a small proscenium with gold curtains. Curtain is raised and three dancers in colorful costumes of the period when Marionettes were popular, execute a dance. Long yellow strands are tied to the arms and legs of each dancer which are fastened to a border above, and during the dance gives the impression that the various movements are being manipulated by a controller above. Rose plush to back. The old-fashioned footlight reflectors are used at the base of the platform which forms the stage. Amber and canary from the sides and from the improvised foots highlights the dancers who also operate in a light blue flood.

The Prologue

Joseph Plunkett's prologue to "The Marriage Whirl" introduces Blondell's Saxophone Sextette, who present popular novelties. The musicians are dressed in clown costumes of white trimmed with red tulle pom-poms. The musician on the right stands on a pedestal eight or ten feet high with the coat of his costume covering the pedestal giving the appearance that the character is extremely tall. The other musicians are similarly garbed, but on pedestals which proportionally graduate on down toward left, the sixth musician standing on the floor. The conical hats (dunce caps) are worn by each musician which adds height to each man. The black cyc is used to back. Blue highlights the characters at the rise, reds are brought in and finally a spot from the bridge is used on each man. At the finale the Mark Strand Ballet Corps of 6 with two male dancers enter in cake-walk costumes and with the vi-light effect the faces of the dancers change to black as they dance a spirited finale.

Manhattan Nights—1776-1925

A group of selections with very simple settings showing the progress of dance attractions from the Colonial period up to the present day.

(a) Minuet.

Green foots with reds brought on at rise and as curtains are drawn reveal a black drop with arched opening upstage back of which tapestry is hung on black background. The tapestry occupying the major part of the opening. Two condelabras made of profile with spiral standards and surmounted with candles tipped with amber lamps are right and left of the arched opening. Blue spot from booth used on two dancers dressed in Colonial costumes. Light amber and pinks from sides highlight performing area.

(b) Waltz.

Green foots on closein curtains open revealing the same arch with a wood border consisting of a large branch extending from right running across opening and large red-brown leaves falling down left side of opening. A sky border used to back. Two large gilt columns placed right and left of the opening. The two dancers are dressed in 1860 costumes. Canary, amber and purple from sides highlight area.

(c) In the Shadow of Brooklyn Bridge.

Blue foots up, painted drop hung in arched opening represent a familiar scene of Brooklyn Bridge with Manhattan sky line. Two dancers dressed in Bowery costume do a characteristic dance in white spot.

(d) On the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House.

A black drop used to mask arched opening making the background entirely the same. Four girls in white ballet costume appear and render a toe routine. Canary and amber from sides and amber foots up, working in a white flood.

(e) The Swan.

Miss Edna Kovey, dressed in white ballet costume as the four girls in the previous number, exit, and renders one of the best travesties on the Swan which we have seen. This dancer works in a white spot and her various tumbles and her acrobatic maneuvres elicit many laughs and an applause which mark her as the best thing among the divertissements.

(f) Memory.

A singer dressed in quaint costume appears in front of closeins and sings, "When It's Apple Blossom Time in Normandy"; works in an amber spot with organ accompaniment.

(g) Night Club of Today.

The major part of the Bernie orchestra appears on stage in the final number, which introduces several dancers. A very simple but highly colorful setting is used for this part of the program. A gorgeous fabric painted in a line motif resembling a marble vein done in silver and gold which is highlighted with pinks, greens, blues and canaries from side. Orchestra appears on a small platform which runs across stage. A crystal chandelier is hung in one.

A Jazz Band of ten musicians dressed in tuxedo appears on platform at right end of orchestra pit. They are highlighted with canary flood. "The Collegiates" is the second number presented by the orchestra followed by song "The Melody That Made You Mine" which introduces a simple stage setting. The singer stands in the pit. Curtain opens revealing a painted drop with a low garden wall. At left center is a garden bench upon which a girl is seated. An orange amber moon is up right with a rippler working back of a painted ripple beneath it on the drop. A landscape motif with shore is painted on the left of the drop. A blue spot is thrown on the girl who is seated. The last number is a dance to "Sweet Georgia Brown"—dancer in a very simple costume appears in front of fabrics flooded green and highlighted red and blue from the sides. Dancer works in white spot.

QUESTION BOX
Production Inquiries Answered

"How can I get an Aurora Borealis effect without a disc?"—R. D. L., Boston.

Take an oblong drygoods or Victrola box and place it on a framework, permitting it to revolve. Fasten a series of mirrors or righly reflective material on the oblong sides of the box. Place four baby spot lights at the bottom of the back drop and set to throw the beams of light on the sides of the box, which should be placed about four feet down stage from the back drop. A hand-crank or a motor can be attached to the axles of the box and as the box revolves away from the drop the light will be thrown up at an angle on the drop in irregular flashes, giving the effect of shooting flashes of colored light.

"Will you kindly suggest a simple treatment for changing the glow of a sun-box during a scene requiring a sunset?"—J. F., El Paso, Texas.

Place two slider-grooves on the top and bottom of the face of the sun-box. Make a long frame to be used as a medium. Cover the frame with sheets of plain gelatine to give a base upon which can be superimposed strips of colored gelatine. As the sun starts to descend in the treatment, the canary gradually gives way to a strip of orange amber at the base, which gradually covers the entire face of the box as the slider is moved across the face of the sun. Deep red can be brought in at the base as the sun sinks from view. This is an improvement over the old silk mediums used in the stage sunset effects and is simpler than a series of lamps in the sun-box which are brought up on dimmers and brought down in routine.

"What would you suggest as a novel chandelier for a 'hunting lodge' scene."—S. L., Springfield, Mass.

A log chandelier would be about the most appropriate. This can be constructed out of stove or galvanized pipe, covered with canvas and painted to resemble logs. It will be fireproof, easy to handle, and very effective. In constructing it would be wise to have the chandelier made with cross beams to give it solidity.

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

"Boys Will Be Boys"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

In this "Our Gang" comedy Mickey and his pals build their own Coney Island on a vacant lot. Surveyors for a new building try to chase them away after they have erected merry-go-round, ferris wheel and other fun devices. The president of the company taking over the lot is not too old to remember that he was a boy once. He deserts an important board meeting to join with the gang in operating the park. The directors follow him there and try to hold him in the meeting but fail. Soon all the business men then help the boys run the park and enjoy its thrills themselves. Robert McGowan directed this "Our Gang" comedy, as he has all its predecessors, and it is typical of them. That means that it is excellent, wholesome fun sure to appeal to boys of eight and boys of eighty.—S. S.

"Heart Trouble"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

This issue of Universal's "Sweet Sixteen" comedy series under the Bulls Eye Brand features Arthur Lake and a new girl, Marceline Day, who has taken the place of Olive Hasbrouck. The action shows Arthur getting in bad with the girl's parents on account of breaking up valuable vases, and being forbidden the house. The girl sneaks him in during a masquerade and a tough guy takes a pair of handcuffs and shackles Arthur to his rival, Eddie. Unable to free themselves, Arthur and Eddie have to go home and go to bed chained to each other. There is a moderate amount of amusing situations but as a whole it falls below the standard of the series.—C. S. S.

Pathe Review No. 30

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

This Pathe Review contains the following subjects: "The Wilderness of Water," a submerged forest in the Mississippi valley; "The Garden of Seville," Pathecolor views of the city of Moorish Spain, and "The Two-Legged Horse Race," a novelty picture showing ostriches racing backwards and forwards. These subjects are excellently chosen and treated. Those of the submerged forest are especially striking, and the novelty picture affords a pleasant close to the reel.—S. S.

"The Sleuth"

(F. B. O. Comedy—Two Reels)

In this Standard Cinema Corporation comedy distributed by F. B. O., Stan Laurel is the star, appearing as a boob detective summoned by a wife to spy on her husband. He adopts various disguises including that of a maid and does a lot of clowning. While mildly amusing it is hard to tell at times just what it is all about. Will probably provide a few laughs for fans who like nonsense and slapstick.—C. S. S.

"Dry Up"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

This Century Comedy features Jack Singleton and Bartine Burkett. Al Herman wrote the story and directed. Jack is a correspondent school attorney without a license. His landlady takes his clothes, so Jack lassoes a passerby, ties him outside the window of his hall bedroom and swipes his clothes. As it's breakfast time he throws an old shoe at the milkman, who, indignant, throws a bottle of milk which Jack deftly catches. The same method results in a loaf of bread. Jack tries to represent a citizen over whom mortar has been spilled, but the foreman chases him away. Then he tries to represent a fair woman in a divorce suit only to again fly when he discovers that the foreman is her husband. The subject is of average interest.—S. S.

KIT GUARD

One of the funny men of the screen, who will be seen in "The Adventures of Maisie," an F. B. O. picture

"Cupid's Boots"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Ralph Graves is the man and Thelma Hill the girl in this Mack Sennett Star Comedy. Graves is bookkeeper in a shoe store until inattention to business caused by Thelma leads to his "resignation." His opportunity to prove himself a hero comes when Thelma and her parents are trussed up by a villain. Graves rescues them after many hazardous and laughable experiences. Again it must be said that Mack Sennett knows burlesque. It is not always broad in this subject but it is always effective. The make-up of some of the characters is perfection. Graves lends a pep to the picture that keeps it moving at all times, and Miss Hall is ideal opposite him. "Cupid's Boots" ought to please the many audiences that already have signified a great desire to see this series of Graves comedies.—S. S.

"What Price Gloria?"

(F. B. O. Series—Two Reels)

F. B. O. series "The Pacemakers," reaches its tenth episode in this issue which follows the same lines as the earlier chapters. George O'Hara and Stanley Taylor are competitors in a swimming race this time and as usual Taylor tries to pull some crooked work to prevent O'Hara from winning, but of course fails. The title, a travesty on a successful play, refers to the fact that Taylor hires a woman with this name to aid him by claiming she is O'Hara's wife. Albert Cooke and Kit Gaurd do a lot of amusing clowning in a duel scene with scimeters and have a few other comedy scenes. This issue is on a par with the remainder of the series and should prove generally entertaining although lacking in novelty.—C. S. S.

"Why Kids Leave Home"

(Pathe—Sportlight—One Reel)

This Grantland Rice Sportlight is easily one of the best to date. The subject is the thrill supplied childhood by the arrival of the circus in town. A subtitle reads: "Time may bring its glory and thrills but they are nothing compared with any kid's first circus." Various circus stunts are shown, with special attention paid the more exciting ones such as bulldogging a steer and bucking a broncho. The subject has been expertly produced, edited and titled and it ought to make a hit with theatre audiences.—S. S.

"Bugville Field Day"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

In this Aesop's Film Fable, Paul Terry's cartoon characters have a field day. Their various methods of transportation to the scene are amusingly shown, and hilariously funny are the sporting events. Terry goes in for a bit of melodrama when a big bug tries to steal the princess bug from her tiny fiance.—S. S.

NEWEST REVIEWS and COMMENTS

EDITED BY CHARLES S. SEWELL

"The Freshman"

A Riot of Laughs Combined with Pathos Makes Harold Lloyd's Latest for Pathe His Best Comedy.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Success has become such a habit with Harold Lloyd that it seems commonplace and savoring of repetition to say that "The Freshman" his newest feature comedy for Pathe is another link in his unbroken chain of hits. But such is the case, in fact we are strongly of the belief the general audience reaction will be that this is his very best production.

While not as breath-taking as "Safety Last" as filled with hilarious farce as "Why Worry" or as crammed with gags as "Hot Water" it is nevertheless better entertainment than any of these for it combines the best laugh-getting points of them all. In type it more nearly resembles "Girl Shy" for the laughs have been hung on a farce-comedy framework in which there is just enough story to carry them, strong human interest and a plentiful sprinkling of pathos.

Harold is cast as a lad who enters college determined to become the most popular student. He does everything anybody suggests and while you heartily enjoy his mistakes and mishaps you feel tugs at the heart as the innocent and guileless way in which he takes the kidding of the students as real admiration, and there is genuine pathos that grips you in the scene where he learns the truth.

"The Freshman" is an extremely well constructed picture and Sam Taylor and the several others who share with him the credit for story and direction are entitled to a lot of praise. We suppose that the others listed are the gag men, for they certainly should come in for their share. The comedy is not so hilarious at the start but the laughs build up wonderfully, increasing in quality and quantity to the whirlwind finish in which Harold wins the big football game. Combined with the excitement and suspense of the game there is some of the best comedy that ever reached the screen, which takes these sequences out of the stereotyped class and makes them a regular riot of enjoyment.

While there is quite a play on the pathos, each time it is followed up with a screamingly funny gag, and oh boy, what gags. They will keep an audience in an uproar.

Even the most frozen-faced patron will find himself rocking with side-splitting laughter when Harold goes to a party in a dress suit that is only basted together and as one part after another rips and the tailor comes to his rescue until finally the whole thing gives way. There is excellent humor and human interest in the kidding of the gang when he first reaches college, his speech to the students while he has a kitten fidgeting under his sweater, his having to treat the whole school to ice cream, but it is in the climax that he hits the high water mark of mirth.

Grab "The Freshman" for with Harold Lloyd's popularity to back it up it certainly should leave a trail of broken box-office records.

"That Man Jack"

Bob Custer's Newest for F. B. O. Actionful Western with Unusually Snappy Riding Stunts.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

While previous pictures in the series made by Jesse Goldburg Production and released through F. B. O. have shown Bob Custer in the role of an officer of the law either as a Texas Ranger or a Northwest Mounted Policeman, in his newest "That Man Jack" he is cast as a conventional western hero.

Bob is seen as a stranger who, after falling In love with a girl, learns that his new partner is engaged to her and decides to continue on his journey. Before he can get away he is accused of his partner's murder, but in the end proves his innocence and wins the girl.

The action is built along familiar lines, the first punch being where he rescues the girl from a runaway; the scene, however, is very well handled. The story has been smoothly built up so as to establish a strong chain of circumstantial evidence against the hero, and there is plenty of dash and action with good suspense in the sequences, where the hero, after escaping from the sheriff, visits the girl and eludes the posse while ferreting out the murderer.

Custer's work is thoroughly satisfactory and he has some unusually good stunts of horsemanship, notably where he kicks the sheriff and, turning completely over in the air, lands in the saddle, and again where he rides head downward and pulls himself up into the saddle.

Mary Beth Milford as the leading woman, and the remainder of the cast, handle their roles satisfactorily, and "That Man Jack" should prove an entertaining offering for "Western" fans.

"Evolution"

Red Seal Presents in Interesting Form and Simple Language Arguments on Which Theory Is Based.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Of singular timeliness in view of the Scopes trial in Tennessee in which this issue is involved is the 4,200-foot film, "Evolution," distributed by Red Seal Pictures Corp. Column after column of publicity in the press has focused attention on this scientific question, evoking wide-spread discussion and a natural curiosity as to just what "Evolution" is, and this film is a comprehensive presentation of the arguments on which it is based, presented in pictorial form and with the absence of high sounding scientific terms or explanations, with the result that it is readily within the grasp of the average intelligence.

Preliminary shots show how man has harnessed the elements as evidenced by the development of the locomotive, radio, the aeroplane etc. and is seeking to solve the riddle of his own existence on this earth. Then begins a series of pictures illustrating the theory of the birth of the earth starting with the passage of two great bodies in space resulting in the pulling away of a great mass of matter from the sun which after countless ages became the planets of which our earth is one.

The development of the earth from its molten state as it gradually cooled with the separation of the vapor and condensation into oceans is traced and then with the statement that no one knows how it started, the course of life from the lowest forms of single living cells in water, up through more complicated cell-masses to the appearance of fish with backbones, is shown.

Further development is recorded in the fish in shallow water that developed lungs and finally rudimentary feet as they ventured on land. Then comes the development of reptiles and birds with reconstruction of the gigantic prehistoric reptiles that are now extinct. The finding of fossil remains, drawings of prehistoric man and comparisons of bodily structures are called on in support of the argument.

Finally the more modern animals are shown, with examples of links between different species as for instance the tapir which resembles both the elephant and the rhinoceros. Adaptation of life to changing conditions is pictured in the protective armor of certain animals, the way in which bears etc. developed so as to exist when the glacial age covered great portions of the land with ice, and in the way that certain insects resemble leaves, twigs, etc.

All of this paves the way to the crucial point of the argument, the study of various types of the monkey group beginning with a number of species of lemurs each showing a higher stage of development up to the gibbon which is the lowest form to begin to walk erect, thence to the baboon and highly intelligent chimpanzee and the gorilla which more nearly in size resembles man.

Here the study of fossil remains comes in with reconstruction of the ape-man of Java, the Piltdown and Neanderthal man each showing less of the resemblance to the ape and more to man until the man of today is reached and the wide variety of men illustrated in the different races is pictured, with the closing title "Some call it evolution, others the work of God."

Anyone of an inquisitive turn of mind, whether in favor of or against the theory of evolution, will find this picture interesting, entertaining and instructive and in view of its exceptional timeliness it offers excellent opportunities for exploitation and should prove a good box-office attraction.

"Night Life of New York"

Machine Made Paramount Has Strong Box Office Value and Makes a Snappy and Amusing Play.

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent.

Here is another production on which the critics and the box office are apt to disagree. Considered as literature "Night Life of New York" is pretty poor stuff, forced, illogical and inconsequential. But both night life and New York have distinct box office values, and Allan Dwan has made the most of a sprightly, if impossible, scenario.

It moves rapidly, gives action in plenty and shows half a dozen of the best known night clubs in New York, much of the action taking place in the El Fey Club, now known as the Del Fey Club since its recent padlocking. The scenes actually were made in and in front of the club and are not studio stuff. It gives about $500 worth of night life for whatever admission the theatre charges, and it is all authentic.
